To arrive at the fee award, the district court created a detailed spreadsheet, compiling data from three sources. See In re Broiler Chicken Antitrust Litig., No. 16-C-8637, 2024 WL 3292794, at *6 (N.D. Ill. July 3, 2024). The first source included all court-awarded fees to counsel in cases without an ex ante agreement—in other words, ex post awards—within a set timeframe before this litigation. The second consisted of awards listed in one of class counsels' expert declarations filed by Professor Robert Klonoff. His data was titled "examples of antitrust cases" both within and outside of the Seventh Circuit "with [fee] percentages of 33 percent or greater." The third was the 26.6% award from the IRS case. Because the court found that case to be a good comparator, it counted the award ten times in its spreadsheet, thereby giving it an outsized weight. [1]

In its spreadsheet, the district court narrowed the cases it considered to only those with recovery amounts of $100 million to $1 billion—what it viewed as most representative of the $181 million settlement recovery here. This left 52 awards. The district court further excluded three Ninth Circuit "outliers" of 9% and 11%, which—as discussed above—it did not find to be representative of this circuit's ex ante market rate. [2] The remaining 49 awards yielded 573 a median of 31% and mean of 29%. Splitting the difference, the court awarded class counsel 30% of the net common fund. This resulted in a fee of $51.66 million, a decrease of $5.74 million from the initial 33.3% award. Andren timely appeals.

II

Andren challenges the district court's new fee award in four ways. He first argues that the court erred in relying on any ex post awards to reconstruct the ex ante market. The court improperly disregarded the three ex ante bids class counsel made in other litigation, he asserts, which are more relevant than ex post awards. Second, Andren contends that the court erroneously relied on the cases in Klonoff's declaration, which listed only fee awards of 33% and above. Third, he posits that the court should not have excluded the Ninth Circuit "outliers" from its calculation. Last, he argues that the court was required to consider the stage at which this case settled and reduce the fee accordingly.

[2] [3] [4] We review de novo whether the district court followed the correct methodology in awarding a fee. Broiler I, 80 F.4th at 801. So long as the district court understood its obligation to award fees according to the hypothetical ex ante bargain, as it did here, we review how it arrived at its fee only for abuse of discretion. Id. at 802. The district court has substantial latitude here, as it "is closer to the case than we are," and reasonable fees "often fall within a broad range." Id. (quoting In re Stericycle Sec. Litig., 35 F.4th 555, 559 (7th Cir. 2022)).

[5] We first address Andren's challenge that the district court erred by relying on ex post awards to reconstruct the ex ante market. True, this court has said that ex ante agreements are "particularly useful guidepost[s] for determining the market rate." Stericycle, 35 F.4th at 560. Those agreements most accurately shed light on the compensation attorneys are willing to accept

"in the shadow of the litigation's uncertainty," when there is still a risk of loss and when counsel has the highest incentive to offer competitive fees. Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 719.

Yet this court has already "endorsed" looking to fee awards from other cases to recreate the ex ante market. Williams, 658 F.3d at 636; Taubenfeld v. AON Corp., 415 F.3d 597, 600 (7th Cir. 2005).[3] Even if this is so, Andren counters, the district court improperly disregarded more relevant evidence: the three bids class counsel made in other cases. These all allowed for a maximum fee recovery between 13.5% and 20%, which Andren asserts is a more accurate representation of the ex ante market.

[6] Though a district court must treat any prior bids as potentially relevant evidence, those bids do not necessarily set a cap for later cases. See Birchmeier, 896 F.3d at 797 (explaining that courts may award higher fees than in other cases when the present suit was "a riskier undertaking," 574 making prior cases poor comparators). Instead, because the district court is "closer to the case than we are," Stericycle, 35 F.4th at 559, it is permitted to distinguish what it believes are inapposite cases.

[7] The district court here persuasively explained why the three bids had little bearing on this award. It noted that all were for civil antitrust suits following governmental criminal investigations of the defendants, which greatly reduced the work required of class counsel. See id. at 564 (Prior litigation can "substantially reduce[ ] lead counsel's risk of nonpayment."). Under our deferential standard of review, we cannot ask more. There was no abuse of discretion when discounting class counsels' bids entirely.

[8] Even if the district court did not err in differentiating the three bids, Andren argues, it underweighted other ex ante evidence: the IRS fee agreement, negotiated with a sophisticated pension fund. The court viewed IRS and this case as "good comparators," but it did not import the IRS fee structure here wholesale. Rather, it believed the potential settlement value of IRS was greater than in this case, so counsel was willing to accept a correspondingly lower percentage of the higher recovery. Related litigation against the financial-institution defendants in IRS had settled just before class counsel filed a similar suit, with the defendants paying about $2 billion in each case. By contrast, the district court noted that the largest antitrust settlement in history against a food-industry defendant was only one-sixth of that amount. It was eminently reasonable, then, for the court to conclude that IRS, with its high anticipated settlement value, was not a perfect comparator for this case.

[9] Andren fails to show why the district court's thorough reasoning was an abuse of discretion. He points out that the two cases had similar total damages—both between $3.9 and $4.5 billion. But the district court recognized this. It instead focused on the potential settlement value, which is the more relevant metric to counsels' fee award. Nor is it dispositive that the IRS plaintiffs ultimately recovered $71 million, less than half the settlement here. The ex post recovery amount does not change the district court's reasoning for why class counsel may have accepted a lower percentage fee award ex ante.

The district court also did not exceed the bounds of reason when it gave the IRS award ten times the weight of any other case in its calculation. The court's spreadsheet contained 39 ex post awards in the $100 million to $1 billion recovery amount range relevant here. The court then counted the IRS percentage ten times, for a total of 49 awards. Although the IRS award was, in a sense, "diluted" by the volume of ex post figures, it was not an abuse of discretion for the district court to structure its calculation this way when presented only with imperfect ex ante comparators.

In sum, the district court did not "categorically" give "little weight" to class counsels' bids and negotiated fee structures because they used declining fee agreements. Broiler I, 80 F.4th at 803. The court instead soundly exercised its discretion in determining whether those cases served as good "indicators of what bargain would have been struck ex ante." Id.

Andren more persuasively argues that the district court relied on a skewed sample of ex post awards. Recall that the court's calculation incorporated data from three sources. First, as just discussed, was 575 the 26.6% award from IRS. Second was a representative summary of ex post awards class counsel received in other cases around the country. Third, the court cited awards contained in Klonoff's declaration—cases that were limited only to awards around the country of "33 percent or greater."

[10] [11] [12] District courts should consider all evidence bearing on an ex ante award. Indeed, this court has said that when awarding fees, district courts "need[ ] data rather than cherry-picked examples." Silverman v. Motorola Sols., Inc., 739 F.3d 956, 959 (7th Cir. 2013). It is difficult to see how the cases in Klonoff's declaration provide a representative sample from which to derive an average award. The district court stated that "the sheer volume of ex post awards, relative to the minimal number of ex ante agreements, has a substantial impact on the expectations of class counsel" when deciding whether to represent a class. We do not disagree with this principle in theory. But when analyzing ex post awards, counsel are aware of all relevant awards—not solely those of 33% or more. So, to the extent a district court relies on a sampling of ex post awards to recreate the hypothetical market, it must ensure that sample is representative.

[13] Class counsels' brief does not engage with this issue. Instead, it "[p]ut[s] aside whether the cited awards were 'representative,' " asserting only that the district court was permitted to rely on public information, such as ex post fee awards. Nobody disputes that courts may rely on public information when fashioning awards. Yet this misses the methodological point: Although we decline to limit the various sources a district court may consult, it may not include data improperly skewing—high or low—the resulting award.

[14] At oral argument before us, class counsel argued that a difference of only 3%—between the district court's revised 30% award and the IRS award of nearly 27%—cannot be an abuse of discretion. Oral Arg. at 18:50–22:00. This is incorrect for two reasons. When reviewing awards, this court does not focus solely on the percentage. Rather, what matters most is the process the district court used to calculate the award. Further, this argument is self-defeating. In Broiler I, we held that a 33% award was an abuse of discretion. Yet class counsel in this second appeal defend the district court's revised 30% award, tacitly admitting that a 3% difference may be reversible in some contexts.

Because the district court went through the effort of creating a detailed spreadsheet, we can "stick as close as possible to [its] approach" and adjust the fee on appeal. In re Synthroid Mktg. Litig. (Synthroid II), 325 F.3d 974, 980 (7th Cir. 2003); In re Trans Union Corp. Privacy Litig., 629 F.3d 741, 748 (7th Cir. 2011). The sole adjustment we make is to remove the fee awards listed only in Klonoff's skewed declaration. We do not change either the spreadsheet's inclusion of awards from class counsels' other cases, or the district court's decision to weight the IRS fee agreement ten times. We also limit the relevant awards, like the district court did, to those with recoveries between $100 million and $1 billion. After making this single change, we calculate that the average award is 27.1%, with a median of 26.6%. Andren requested a wide range of revised awards, with 26.6% at the top end. We therefore adjust the award to that amount.

[15] Andren attempts to poke two more holes in the district court's award, but neither persuades us. First is that the 576 court improperly excluded two Ninth Circuit "outliers" from its calculation. Even if these cases were erroneously left out, though, any error was harmless. Adding these cases back into the calculation changes the average somewhat, yet the median remains 26.6%. Because our adjusted fee award remains the same whether these cases are included or excluded, we need not address the merits of Andren's argument.

[16] Andren also asserts that the district court failed to account for the stage of litigation at which this case settled. True enough, we have reversed a fee award when "the district court did not give sufficient weight to the early stage" of settlement. Stericycle, 35 F.4th at 566. A large award is unwarranted if it is "disproportionate to the amount of work expended by class counsel." Id. (quoting Camp Drug Store, Inc. v. Cochran Wholesale Pharm., Inc., 897 F.3d 825, 833 (7th Cir. 2018)). But this circuit has also explained that courts should avoid "a second major litigation strictly over attorneys' fees." Siddiqui v. Nat'l Ass'n of Broad.

Emps. & Technicians – Commc'ns Workers, 132 F.4th 530, 533 (7th Cir. 2025) (quoting Vega v. Chi. Park Dist., 12 F.4th 696, 702 (7th Cir. 2021)).

[17] In its initial fee order, the district court soundly considered the amount of work expended by class counsel. It noted the lack of prior government investigation here, requiring counsel to "invest[ ] massive resources of time and money"—over 67,500 attorney hours—in guiding the litigation through extensive discovery. The court further discussed counsels' "exemplary" performance, noting how the plaintiffs survived a "relatively close" motion to dismiss with the assistance of in-depth briefing. Indeed, the court's order denying dismissal tallied 92 pages. And although the case settled before a ruling on class certification, class counsel fully briefed the certification issue. This was not a case where "no real litigation" occurred; counsel put forth significant effort, which the district court properly considered. Camp Drug Store, 897 F.3d at 833.

The district court examined in detail the work counsel devoted to this case. To ask for anything further would be to demand a "second major litigation" over fees. Siddiqui, 132 F.4th at 533 (quoting Vega, 12 F.4th at 702).

We compliment the district court for creating a detailed fee calculation, spreadsheet and all. After removing the few non-representative data points from its analysis, class counsel are entitled to 26.6% of the net common fund. We AFFIRM the district court's fee award AS MODIFIED and REMAND the case for further proceedings.

I. INTRODUCTION

For five years, Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein[1] (Class Counsel) have worked diligently to represent millions of United States consumers in this complex antitrust case – bearing the risks and costs of litigation, without any compensation to date. Now Class Counsel has secured settlements totaling $181 million. These settlements with six defendant families represent a significant substantial benefit for the class of End User Consumer Plaintiffs ("EUCPs"). The news that these settlements will compensate consumers for their damages has been shared and spread widely – even reaching national audiences via duet on The Tonight Show.[2]

The Court is well-aware of the hard work and dedication that has been required to see this complex litigation through; to date, there are more than 5,000 entries on the docket. Unlike many antitrust cases, this case began without having the benefit of a prior Department of Justice criminal case to use as a template. Rather, counsel for the civil plaintiffs were willing to take a risk, dig in, and follow leads to develop the evidence. Over the past five years, Class Counsel invested more than 67,522 hours representing Plaintiffs and pursuing their claims. Defendants in this litigation are large, sophisticated national and multi-national corporations and have hired some of the most well-known and aggressive attorneys in the country.[3] They are also numerous.

"Cohen Milstein" refers to the law firm Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll, PLLC. Cohen Milstein and Hagens Berman have requested appointment as Co-Lead Class Counsel for the End User Class.

Class Counsel conducted discovery on dozens of defendants and third parties, and to state the obvious, the amount of necessary work multiplies with their number. Overall, it is extraordinary even when compared to other complex antitrust litigations. In addition, Class Counsel has risked nearly $9 million without any guarantee of reimbursement to put forth the best and thoroughly supported case, legal and economic, for consumers of chicken.

Plaintiffs respectfully request: (1) an award of $59,730,000 in attorney's fees – equal to 33 percent of the common fund; (2) reimbursement of $8,750,000 to cover a portion of the out-of-pocket litigation expenses incurred in connection with this litigation; and (3) service awards of $2,000 for each of the class representatives.

II. THE WORK UNDERTAKEN ON BEHALF OF THE CONSUMER CLASS

A. Class Counsel fiercely advocated for consumers' interests before being appointed.

From the outset of this case, Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein have zealously represented the consumer class's interests. In September 2016, Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein filed one of the first complaints on behalf of the consumer class and moved to represent the consumer class as interim co-lead counsel.[4] Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein were the first to raise the issue that having the commercial indirect class (referred to as the "CIIPPs" in this litigation) also represent consumers' interests would lead to a conflict of interest.[5] This issue was vigorously contested by the commercial class, but Class Counsel provided real examples (such as In re Capacitors Antitrust Litigation) where lead counsel for a dual consumer/commercial indirect class voluntarily dismissed the consumer claims and pursued litigation only on behalf of commercial entities – leaving consumers unable to recover anything.[6]

In raising this issue, Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein conducted an independent investigation into the consumer channel, retained expert economists to evaluate and explain the different channels, and provided the Court with a legal ethicist's expert opinion – even though there was no certainty they would be appointed as lead counsel. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 2. After careful consideration, the Court commended counsel's "aggressive and independent advocacy relating to the conflict," and appointed counsel for an independent consumer class.[7]

B. Class Counsel engaged in substantial motion practice and discovery efforts.

1. EUCPs overcame multiple rounds of motions to dismiss.

EUCPs overcame multiple joint and individual motions to dismiss and one motion to reconsider the Court's denial of the motions to dismiss. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 5. The first round of motions occurred in 2017, shortly after the complaint was filed.[8] After the Court denied these motions one defendant brought a second motion to reconsider.[9] EUCPs were the first to add Agri Stats as a defendant, and the only class to add a rule of reason claim. This initiated a second round of motions to dismiss, which was resolved in favor of EUCPs.[10] Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 5.

2. Class Counsel led depositions of more than forty defendant witnesses.

From the outset of discovery, Class Counsel sought to avoid duplication by coordinating discovery assignments with the other classes. For example, the classes jointly negotiated the discovery protocols for this case and conducted a coordinated review of the millions of documents that were produced in the litigation. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 6. During this negotiation process, Class Counsel drafted and filed many of the status reports before the Court.[11] Several of Class Counsel's staff attorneys participated in this review full time. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 6. Counsel also worked together with the other classes to negotiate search terms, ensure the completeness of discovery, and to schedule more than 180 depositions – up to three depositions a day. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 7.

EUCPs have taken lead in questioning more than 40 of the defendant-employees in this case, including every Agri Stats employee and many employees for Pilgrim's, Perdue, and Tyson. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 9. Preparing for these depositions takes significant time and effort. To help the classes prepare for these difficult depositions, staff attorneys at Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein devoted their full time to the joint effort among the classes to search and review Defendants' 13 million documents. Id. The staff attorneys, with their decades of collective experience, helped identify critical documents and prepare for depositions. Finally, Class Counsel also led questioning at several third-party depositions, including depositions of USDA witnesses. Id.

3. Discovery required significant motion practice.

Plaintiffs conducted significant written discovery, including serving document requests, interrogatories, and requests for admission. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 10. In addition, EUCPs served subpoenas on dozens of third parties in the distribution chain to seek documents and structured data that would be used to show to pass-through. Id. This document discovery was contentious at times, requiring multiple motions to compel and responses to motions for protective orders from defendants and third parties.[12] These motions required additional time for meet-and-confers, briefing, and hearing preparation. See Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 10. The briefs argued and won by EUCPs have impacted all three classes: for example, when Agri Stats sought a protective order to limit its document production to a two-year period,[13] Class Counsel drafted the brief in opposition.[14] Magistrate Judge Gilbert adopted EUCP's reasoning and denied the request for the protective order.[15] As a result, Agri Stats produced a full set of documents and all three classes used these Agri Stats documents in support of their motions for class certification. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 11.

4. Two years into the case, the Department of Justice intervened and sought a stay.

Often, civil plaintiffs bring antitrust claims only after the Department of Justice has announced a criminal investigation or criminal charges. As these cases are usually brought against national and multinational corporate leviathans who hold significant market power and can afford the best legal services, "all would agree that antitrust litigation presents a trying task for even the most accomplished trial attorney."[16] To reduce some of the enormous risks, many civil lawyers will only bring an antitrust suit if the government has already paid for an investigation and found enough evidence to bring its own case; in such cases, courts recognize that the civil plaintiffs will be "undoubtedly helped considerably by some of the evidence developed by the government."[17]

This case was different: here, the civil plaintiffs, including Class Counsel, invested their own resources to develop the evidence and bring forth claims before the government became involved and without the benefit of their work. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 12. Before the Department of Justice announced its investigation, the civil plaintiffs had spent over two years litigating their claims. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 12. They negotiated and received significant document productions from Defendants and deposed more than 80 defendant witnesses. Id.

Seeking time to conduct its investigation, the Department of Justice sought a stay on the civil cases – just as Plaintiffs began scheduling the last round of defendant-depositions. EUCPs were the only class to oppose the stay – resulting, in part, in the Court entering a much narrower stay than originally requested.[18] The narrow stay was granted, which halted Plaintiffs' progress (and exposed Plaintiffs to significantly more risk). As part of its investigation, the government subpoenaed the class plaintiffs and requested Defendants' document productions. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 13. Here, the government – not civil plaintiffs – were "undoubtedly helped considerably" by some of the evidence developed by Class Counsel.

5. Class Counsel conducted discovery on pass-through issues unique to their class.

To prove that the overcharge caused by Defendants' misconduct passed through to the consumer class, Class Counsel negotiated discovery with dozens of distributors and grocery stores. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 14. As a result of these subpoenas, Class Counsel received troves of data reflecting actual purchases and sales through the distribution chain, which EUCP's expert, Dr. Sunding, was able to use to prove systemic, class-wide pass through of the overcharge. In addition, Class Counsel participated in more than 100 depositions of opt-out distributors and retailers, using these defendant-noticed depositions as an opportunity to solidify the pass-through evidence for the consumer class. Id.

6. Class Counsel worked with experts, who undertook critical work.

Class Counsel has also extensively worked with EUCP's two economic experts, Dr. David Sunding and Dr. Luis Cabral, to explain the economic mechanisms in this market and empirically demonstrate the overcharge. In support of the EUCP motion for class certification, Drs. Sunding and Cabral each submitted expert reports, totaling over 200 pages. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 15. Cameron Azari submitted a report regarding the identification of class members. Defendants had an opportunity to depose each expert, and Class Counsel defended these depositions. Id. Plaintiffs' experts also submitted reply reports addressing the errors and criticisms made by Defendants' economic expert in his opposition to class certification. Defendants responded by noticing a second deposition of Dr. Sunding, which Class Counsel again defended. Id. In addition to these reports, Plaintiffs also served Defendants with their experts' merits reports, totaling 329 pages, in accordance with the Court's Scheduling Order at the end of August 2021. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 15.

7. Class Counsel reviewed class representatives' documents and helped prepare for and defend their depositions.

Finally, Class Counsel helped the class representatives respond to Defendants' intense discovery requests and prepare for their depositions. To respond to Defendants' interrogatories and requests for production, some class representatives' personal email accounts were searched. Defendants used these documents to ask questions tangentially related to the claims, including questions on what cooked food products a class representative bought at his church's fundraiser. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 16. Class representatives sat through more 97 hours of depositions, which lasted an average of four hours – with some going up to seven hours. Id. All of these depositions were attended by multiple defense counsel, and at some depositions, named partners – some of whom have more than 30 years of litigation experience – led the questioning. Id.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Rule 23 permits the Court to award reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses in class actions, as authorized by law of by the parties' agreement. See Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 23(h). The Seventh Circuit instructs courts to "do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time."[19] Under Seventh Circuit law, the district court has discretion to award fees using either the lodestar approach or a percentage of fund approach.[20] Another approach, sometimes referred to as the marginal percentage fee structure, has also been applied to common funds,[21] though this fee schedule appears to be less commonly applied to antitrust cases.[22] This may be because it "create[s] declining marginal returns to legal work, ensuring that at some point attorneys' opportunity cost will exceed the benefits of pushing for a larger recovery, even though extra work could benefit the client."[23] In applying any of these approaches, the Court's goal should be to "to give the lawyer what he would have gotten in the way of a fee in an arms' length negotiation, had one been feasible."[24]

IV. ARGUMENT

From the inception of this case through June 2021, Class Counsel has invested more than 67,522 hours litigating their claims. Counsel for the Consumer Indirect Class requests: (1) an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of 33 percent of the $181 million settlement fund; (2) reimbursement of expenses Class Counsel has advanced to date on behalf of the class; and (3) service awards of $2,000 for each named plaintiff. As demonstrated below, Class Counsel's request for $59,730,000 in fees is a reasonable rate negotiated by the market and in line with the fees awarded in similar cases. Applying a lodestar cross-check, Class Counsel's request represents a modest 1.8 multiplier, well in line with other cases. Although the Court previously indicated its inclination to apply the marginal percentage fee structure, EUCPs respectfully submit that this structure is not the best approach for this particular case.[25]

A. The percent of funds approach is the better approach to apply in this case in order to reflect the market price for legal services.

1. In large, complex antitrust cases, sophisticated entities often negotiate a flat 33% fee, according to empirical data.

For cases with consumer plaintiffs, courts do not usually give weight to fee agreements with named plaintiffs.[26] Instead, the Seventh Circuit encourages courts to review "actual fee contracts that were privately negotiated for similar litigation[.]"[27] The most recent 2021 study examining actual fee contracts found that a flat, fixed percentage fee request of one third is ex ante market rate negotiated by sophisticated plaintiffs (such as Fortune 500 companies) who bring antitrust cases.[28] This study examined seventeen years of antitrust cases litigated on contingency where large corporations were named plaintiffs. Even though "the potential damages in many of these cases were enormous," the fixed percentage fee request "of one-third heavily dominated."[29] This market price dominated "even in the most enormous cases, where we would expect the lawyers to benefit from economies of scale."[30] Studies of other large, complex cases taken on contingency by sophisticated entities – such as patent cases – use similar fee structures.[31] Courts in this District have likewise recognized that "a 33% contingent fee of the total recovery is on the low end of what is typically negotiated ex ante by plaintiffs' firms taking on large, complex cases[.]"[32] Because antitrust cases require the investment of significant time and resources, awards of one third the settlement fund are common.[33]

Guessing at the ex ante prices, it is true that district courts have sometimes reduced the percent awarded in class action cases that recover more than $100 million or some other so-called "megafund."[34] But empirical data from private market negotiations do not support these decisions. Conversely, there are many class action antitrust cases where district courts have applied the empirical private market data and awarded approximately one-third of the common fund. For example, in 2017, the district court in Kleen Products awarded attorneys' fees totaling 30% of the $354 million settlement, equaling about $104 million.[35]

Class Counsel opposes the use of the marginal percentage fee structure rather than a flat rate because using the flat rate keeps Class Counsel's interests and the classes' interests aligned, especially as the case moves toward trial.[36] As the Seventh Circuit recognized in Synthroid I, sliding scales may not always be best because they "create declining marginal returns to legal work, ensuring that at some point attorneys' opportunity cost will exceed the benefits of pushing for a larger recovery, even though extra work could benefit the client."[37] Some courts have suggested applying the marginal percentage fee structure because "it is almost as expensive to conduct discovery in a $100 million case as in a $200 million case."[38] But this structure only accounts for discovery costs, not the time investment of pre-trial and trial. Routine discovery tasks can be completed by attorneys with relatively less experience (such as drafting discovery letters or reviewing documents). But as a case moves towards trial, senior lawyers with trial experience must invest more time to hone the facts and prepare witnesses and draft trial briefs. Thus, the time investment for senior attorneys – those who have the most experience and forgo the most lucrative opportunities when working full time on one case – increases as a case moves closer to trial. Introducing declining marginal returns as a high-risk, complex case moves closer to trial does not align with the private market. This may explain why the one-third contingency rate dominates, even when sophisticated market participants negotiate the fee structure.[39]

2. The complexity, length and cost of this litigation – as well as the risks assumed by counsel – cut in favor of awarding a flat 33% fee.

Another factor that courts use to evaluate fee requests is the complexity, length, and cost bringing the litigation.[40] Here, antitrust cases stand out; as one court observed, "[a]n antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute."[41] Antitrust cases are universally acknowledged for being "complicated, lengthy and bitterly fought."[42] This case is no exception; the parties are five years into litigation and trial will likely not occur until 2023.

Although all antitrust cases are complex, in many instances, civil antitrust plaintiffs have benefit of governmental investigation or prosecution.[43] "On the facts, it is important to note that unlike many cases where attorneys seek a substantial fee, Class Counsel here were not assisted by any governmental investigations or prosecution, for example, as is often the case large class actions."[44] Instead, the civil plaintiffs alone bore the risk of building the evidence.

This case has required lawyers to devote a significant amount of time and effort into building the evidence; there are many defendants and the alleged misconduct spanned more than a decade. Through June 2021, Class Counsel invested more than 67,522 hours litigating this case. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 17. More than 13 million documents were collected and reviewed; over 180 depositions of defendants' employees and third parties have been taken. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 6. evidence of pass-through to the consumer class. Scarlett Decl. at ¶¶ 7-8. In similar cases where civil plaintiffs have borne the risk of building the case – without the benefit of a governmental investigation – courts have routinely awarded roughly one-third of the common fund as fees. This rate has been applied by courts in this district[45] as well in other districts around the country.[46]

But this case has an additional wrinkle that amplified the complexity, length, cost, and risk: the United States intervened two years into the litigation and sought a stay.[47] At the time, Defendants argued that the stay should prevent all "depositions and non-evidentiary written discovery . . .of the defendants and their current and former employees."[48] While the stay was granted, Defendants were allowed to continue pursuing discovery on Plaintiffs, including by deposing the named plaintiffs. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 12. Because defendants were able to continue their discovery while the civil plaintiffs were sidelined, Plaintiffs faced the risk of losing, without having power to hold Defendants' feet to the fire. Meanwhile, the United States benefited from work and risks borne by the civil plaintiffs, as indicated by the fact that the government intends to introduce documents at its trial that it received from the civil plaintiffs. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 13.

Other risks, both legal and factual, have abounded since the beginning of the case and continue to do so. If it were not for the presence of the remaining defendants, Class Counsel would more specifically detail them. But suffice to say, the remaining stages in this case, including class certification, summary judgment, trial and any possible appeals, are no slam dunk for the EUCPs or Plaintiffs in general.

3. The reaction of the class supports the percent-of-fund fee award.

Another important consideration is the reaction of the class to the proposed settlement and fee request.[49] Through published notice – on the settlement website and in the notice forms – class members have been advised that Class Counsel may seek a fee award of up to 33.3 percent, or $60,273,000 as attorneys' fees and $8.75 million in costs. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 27. Nobody has filed notice yet that they intend to object to the settlement. However, the opt-out deadline has not passed; Class Counsel is filing this Motion ahead of the opt-out deadline and will make these briefs available on the settlement website (www.overchargedforchicken.com) so that interested class members will have an opportunity to review and comment. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 28. Class Counsel will update the Court if this factor changes.

4. A lodestar crosscheck confirms that the percent of funds fee award is reasonable.

Although the district court is under no obligation to perform a cross-check on the requested fees against the lodestar,[50] courts sometimes find cross-checks as informative for appraising fee requests.[51] Class Counsel spent more than 67,522 hours litigating this case. "In risky litigation such as this, lodestar multipliers can be reasonable in a range between 2 and 5."[52] Here, Class Counsel's fee request results in a multiplier of 1.8 when compared to their lodestar.[53]

Class Counsel has kept the team litigating this case relatively lean and nimble; more than 99 percent of the hours billed in this case were incurred by Hagens Berman and Cohen Milstein. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 17. This staffing strategy means that fewer attorneys spent a larger proportion of their time litigating this case. As a result, they have deeper institutional knowledge of the facts, law and theory, produce better work product and litigate more efficiently. They also produce less lodestar and therefore a higher multiplier when they achieve tremendous results, such as the settlements here, for the class.[54]

At times, keeping the case staffed efficiently resulted in schedules that were exceptionally grueling for the few attorneys who worked full-time on this case. During the discovery process, there were many weeks where multiple depositions were scheduled on the same day and back-to-back each week. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 7. As a result, there were months where attorneys were required to prepare for and attend several depositions each week, every week. During this phase, several attorneys worked full-time on this case, forgoing other work, at a demanding pace. Scarlett Decl. at ¶¶ 8, 22. Due to time differences, some of these attorneys regularly began their day with 6:00 A.M. depositions, and then worked through the late afternoon and evening to prepare for the next deposition. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 8. This remained true even through the height of the pandemic.

Using counsel's current hourly rates to calculate the lodestar (as described more fully in Class Counsel's declarations, see, e.g., Scarlett Decl. at ¶¶ 17-22) results in a 1.8 multiplier. The hourly rates used to calculate this lodestar are reasonable, accepted rates.[55] See Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 21 (providing a summary of the mean hourly rates billed by counsel). The 1.8 multiplier does not exceed the bounds of reasonableness, particularly in light of the work performed by Class Counsel prior to this settlement. Indeed, a multiplier of less than two is below the range of multipliers commonly accepted in similar litigation.[56]

B. Class Counsel should be partially reimbursed for their out-of-pocket expenses.

Under the common fund doctrine, class counsel customarily are entitled to reimbursement of reasonable expenses incurred in the litigation.[57] Thus far, expenses in this litigation have exceeded $9 million. See Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 24. Here, Class Counsel seeks reimbursement for $8.75 million to partially reimburse a portion of the costs advanced to support this litigation.[58] As with the request for fess, Class Counsel informed class members that they would seek reimbursement of up to $8.75 million as reimbursement for of pocket expenses to advance this litigation. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 24. A significant portion of Class Counsel's expenses ($7,064,226) relate to the work Plaintiffs' economic experts performed on behalf of the class. The benefits to the class from this expert work are real and substantial. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 27.

First, Plaintiffs' experts conducted in-depth analyses to prove the existence of the overcharge and to show that it passed through the distribution channel. Plaintiffs have submitted the most detailed overcharge analysis among the classes. Plaintiffs' damages expert – Dr. David Sunding – was the only economist who included an annual overcharge model to confirm that class members incurred an overcharge during every year of Plaintiffs' class period.[59] Dr. Sunding also used this model to analyze chicken products by part and demonstrated that the overcharge impacted each of the product types contained in Plaintiffs' class – whole birds and breast meat. This model demonstrates an overcharge to all or nearly all class members through the entire class period.[60]

In addition to breaking out the overcharge model with this incredible level of detail, Dr. Sunding also performed a price-movement analysis and proved that the misconduct resulted in higher prices on a market-wide basis. This analysis showed that movements in the aggregate price for broilers were shared by all products, including the whole birds and breast meat.[61] In addition to these detailed analyses, Dr. Sunding also measured pass-through throughout the consumer distribution chain. To evaluate pass through, EUCPs collected, and Dr. Sunding ran regression models on data reflecting $25 billion in actual purchases and sales in the distribution channel to consumers. This data covered more than 88% of club store commerce and more than half of the retail grocery stores. In every case, Dr. Sunding found positive and statistically significant pass-through rates.[62] Class Counsel believes Dr. Sunding's careful, detailed analysis gave EUCPs leverage in their negotiations with Settling Defendants.

Second, Plaintiffs were the only class who decided to bring a rule of reason claim based on Defendants' exchange of detailed pricing and production information through Agri Stats. There is overwhelming documentary evidence in this case that every Defendant submitted detailed pricing and production information to Agri Stats and Defendants used the information they received to raise prices. Plaintiffs believe that this claim increases the likelihood of recovery not least because of the strength of the documentary evidence in support of it. Plaintiffs are the only class who has offered an expert – Dr. Luis Cabral, an economist specializing in competition – who can explain the significance of these voluminous reports to the trier of fact.[63]

Class Counsel paid for the experts to conduct these detailed analyses in anticipation of common arguments raised by defendants in opposition to class certification and at summary judgment. Plaintiffs submitted some of the most robust reports in support of class certification. Undertaking this work added value to the class – by increasing the likelihood of success on the merits, and by creating leverage during settlement negotiations.

Class Counsel's other expenses are common expenses in litigation of this size. Before the COVID-19 pandemic Class Counsel traveled to hearings and depositions, resulting in expenses of $109,958.98. Another large expense ($952,113.64) for Class Counsel was hosting Defendants documents (a significant cost, even after being split among the classes) and hosting Plaintiffs' discovery documents. Scarlett Decl. at ¶ 27. Class Counsel's expenses are described in detail in the declarations and exhibits accompanying this motion. These expenses are in line with other cases of this size and complexity.[64]

C. The named plaintiffs have expended significant time on this litigation and should be awarded $2,000.

Finally, Plaintiffs request that each named plaintiff receive a $2,000. Each named plaintiff has spent significant time (40 or more hours) in connection with this case, as their prior declarations detail.[65] As described above (see Section II(B)(7)), being a class representative has been no walk in the park for these individuals: discovery has been borderline invasive and depositions – some of which were conducted by named partners appearing on behalf of Defendants – have been grueling. The $2,000 incentive payment compensates class representatives for their time and the intrusion on their privacy. Courts in this district routinely grant incentive payments in similar or larger amounts.[66]

[64] See Silverman, 739 F.3d at 958 (noting more than $5 million in out-of-pocket expenses were expended over four years, prior to summary judgment).

[65] See Exhibit E to Scarlett Declaration, ECF No. 4377-6 (Mar. 1, 2021).

[66] See Cont'l Ill., 962 F.2d at 571 ("Since without a named plaintiff there can be no class action, such compensation as may be necessary[...]"); In re Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n Student-Athlete Concussion Inj. Litig., 332 F.R.D. 202, 228 (N.D. Ill. 2019) (awarding $5,000).

V. CONCLUSION

For the forgoing reasons, Plaintiffs respectfully request the Court grant their request for fees, costs, and incentive awards to each named plaintiff.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

IN RE: OPANA ER ANTITRUST LITIGATION THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: All Direct Purchaser Class Actions	MDL DOCKET NO. 2580 Case No. 1:14-cv-10150 (HDL)

ORDER GRANTING FINAL JUDGMENT AND ORDER OF DISMISSAL APPROVING DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS SETTLEMENT AND DISMISSING DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS CLAIMS AGAINST IMPAX LABORATORIES, INC.

Pursuant to Rule 23(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement dated July 15, 2022 between plaintiffs Value Drug Company ("Value Drug") and Meijer, Inc. and Meijer Distribution, Inc. ("Meijer") (collectively, the "Class Representatives"), on behalf of the Class defined below (together with the Class Representatives, the "Plaintiffs"), and Defendant Impax Laboratories, Inc. ("Impax"), it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

1. This Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal hereby incorporates by reference the definitions in the Settlement Agreement among Plaintiffs and Impax, and all capitalized terms used and not otherwise defined herein shall have the meanings set forth in the Settlement Agreement.

2. The following class (the "Class" or "Direct Purchaser Class") has been certified under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3):

> All persons or entities in the United States and its territories, including Puerto Rico, who purchased brand or generic Opana ER 5, 10, 20, 30, and/or 40mg tablets directly from Defendants[1] at any time during the period from April 1, 2011 until August 31, 2017 (the "Class").

[1] "Defendants" are Endo Health Solutions Inc., Endo Pharmaceuticals Inc., Penwest Pharmaceuticals Co. (collectively, "Endo"), and Impax Laboratories, Inc.

> Excluded from the Class are Defendants and their officers, directors, management, employees, subsidiaries, or affiliates, and all federal governmental entities. Also excluded from the Class are: all Retailer Plaintiffs that have opted out of the Class, including CVS Pharmacy, Inc., Rite Aid Corporation, Rite Aid Hdqtrs. Corp., Walgreen Co., The Kroger Co., Albertsons LLC, Safeway Inc. and H-E-B L.P.

3. The Court previously appointed the Class Representatives. The Court previously appointed Bruce E. Gerstein of Garwin Gerstein & Fisher, LLP and David F. Sorensen of Berger Montague PC as Co-Lead Counsel for the Class ("Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives and Class Counsel have fairly and adequately represented the interests of the Class and satisfied the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g).

4. The Court has jurisdiction over these actions, each of the parties, and all members of the Class for all manifestations of this case, including this Settlement.

5. The notice of settlement (substantially in the form presented to this Court as Exhibit B to the Settlement Agreement) (the "Notice") directed to the members of the Class via First Class Mail, constituted the best notice practicable under the circumstances. In making this determination, the Court finds that the Notice provided for individual notice to all members of the Class who were identified through reasonable efforts. Pursuant to, and in accordance with, Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court hereby finds that the Notice provided Class members due and adequate notice of the Settlement, the Settlement Agreement, these proceedings, and the rights of Class members to object to the Settlement.

6. Due and adequate notice of the proceedings having been given to the Class and a full opportunity having been offered to the Class to participate in the November 3, 2022 Fairness Hearing, it is hereby determined that all Class members are bound by this Order and Final Judgment.

7. The Settlement of this Class Action was not the product of collusion between the Class Representatives and Impax or their respective counsel, but rather was the result of bona fide and extensive arm's-length negotiations conducted in good faith between Class Counsel and counsel for Impax, with the assistance of a mediator, Jonathan B. Marks.

8. Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this Court hereby approves the Settlement and finds that the Settlement is, in all respects, fair, reasonable and adequate to Class members and in their best interests. Accordingly, the Settlement shall be consummated in accordance with the terms and provisions of the Settlement Agreement.

9. The Court hereby approves the Plan of Allocation of the Settlement Fund as proposed by Class Counsel (the "Plan of Allocation"), which was summarized in the Notice of Proposed Settlement and filed with Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Approval of Settlement (ECF No. 1043-2), and directs RG/2 Claims Administration, the firm retained by Class Counsel and previously appointed by the Court as the Claims Administrator, to distribute the Net Settlement Fund as provided in the Plan of Allocation. RG/2 shall distribute 80% of each Claimant's share of the Net Settlement Fund after Impax's second installment payment (to be paid no later than January 17, 2023). RG/2 shall distribute the remainder of each Claimant's share of the Net Settlement Fund after Impax's third installment payment (to be paid no later than January 17, 2024).

10. All claims against Impax in In re: Opana ER Antitrust Litigation, MDL No. 2580, No. 14-cv-10150 (HDL) (the "Class Action") are hereby dismissed with prejudice, and without costs (other than as provided herein).

11. Upon the Settlement Agreement becoming final in accordance with Paragraph 7 of the Settlement Agreement, Impax and its past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, joint ventures, stockholders, officers, directors, management, supervisory boards, insurers, general or limited partners, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, representatives (and the parents', subsidiaries', and affiliates' past, present, and future officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and the predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators and representatives of each of the foregoing (collectively, the "Releasees") are and shall be unconditionally, fully, and finally released and forever discharged from all manner of claims, debts, obligations, demands, actions, suits, causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including costs, expenses, penalties and attorneys' fees, under federal or state laws, whether known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, contingent or non-contingent, in law or equity, that Plaintiffs and all Class members, whether or not they make a claim upon or participate in the Settlement Fund, on behalf of themselves and their respective past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, officers, directors, employees, insurers, general or limited partners, divisions, agents, attorneys, servants, trustees, joint ventures, heirs, executors, administrators, representatives (and the parents' subsidiaries' and affiliates' past and present officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and their predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and representatives (collectively, the "Releasors"), ever had, now has, or hereafter can, shall or may have, directly, representatively, derivatively or in any other capacity, arising out of or relating in any way to:

> (a) all claims related to the Direct Purchaser Class Action that accrued prior to the date of the Settlement Agreement, (collectively, this entire paragraph represents the "Released Claims").

The Settlement Agreement is not intended to release anyone other than the Releasees and is not on behalf of anyone other than the Releasors. For the avoidance of doubt, the Settlement Agreement shall not be construed to affect a release of any kind of any claim against Endo. Furthermore, Impax represents and warrants that it has assumed no contractual obligation that would, in fact or at law, in the event Plaintiffs prevail against Endo in the Direct Purchaser Class Action, obligate Impax to indemnify, pay contribution to, be liable to, or share in a judgment entered in favor of Plaintiffs against Endo in the Direct Purchaser Class Action, and agrees that Plaintiffs justifiably rely on this representation and warranty and that it is material to Plaintiffs' decision to enter into the Settlement Agreement.

12. In addition, Plaintiffs and each Class member, on behalf of themselves and all other Releasors, hereby expressly waive, release and forever discharge, upon the Settlement becoming final, any and all provisions, rights and/or benefits conferred by § 1542 of the California Civil Code, which reads:

> Section 1542. General Release; extent. A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor;

or by any law of any state or territory of the United States, or principle of common law, which is similar, comparable or equivalent to § 1542 of the California Civil Code. Each Releasor may hereafter discover facts other than or different from those which he, she or it knows or believes to be true with respect to the claims which are the subject matter of Paragraph 14 of the Settlement Agreement, but each Releasor hereby expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles, releases, and discharges, upon this Settlement becoming final, any known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, asserted or unasserted, contingent or non-contingent claim that would otherwise fall within the definition of Released Claims, whether or not concealed or hidden, without regard to the subsequent discovery or existence of such different or additional facts. Each Plaintiff and member of the Class also hereby expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles, releases, and discharges any and all claims that are the subject matter of Paragraph 14 of the Settlement Agreement that it may have against any Releasees under § 17200, et seq., of the California Business and Professions Code or any similar comparable or equivalent provision of the law of any other state or territory of the United States or other jurisdiction.

13. As set forth in Paragraph 16 of the Settlement Agreement (with subheading "Reservation of Claims"), the release set forth in Paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Settlement Agreement (and in Paragraphs 11 and 12 of this Order) shall not release any claims between Plaintiffs, members of the Class, and the Releasors, on the one hand, and Impax and the Releasees, on the other (a) arising in the ordinary course of business between Releasors and Releasees under Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code (pertaining to Sales), the laws of negligence or product liability or implied warranty, breach of contract, breach of express warranty, or personal injury; (b) arising out of or in any way relating to any alleged price-fixing agreement between or among manufacturers of generic pharmaceutical products, including but not limited to Impax, including claims alleged in In re: Generic Pharmaceuticals Pricing Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 2724, Case No. 16-MD-2724 (E.D. Pa.); and/or (c) of any sort that do not relate specifically to brand or generic Opana ER.

14. Class Counsel have moved for an award of attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses and service awards for the Class Representatives. Class Counsel request an award of attorneys' fees of 36% of the Settlement amount (including the interest accrued thereon), reimbursement of the reasonable costs and expenses incurred in the prosecution of this action in the amount of $4,343,137.06, and service awards of $150,000 for each to the two Class Representatives, and such motion has been on the docket and otherwise publicly available since September 19, 2022.

15. Upon consideration of Class Counsel's petition for fees, costs and expenses, Class Counsel are hereby awarded attorneys' fees totaling $50,528,470.66 (representing 36% of the Settlement Fund, net of reimbursed costs and expenses and service awards) and costs and expenses totaling $4,343,137.06, together with a proportionate share of the interest thereon from the date the funds are deposited in the Settlement Escrow Account until payment of such attorneys' fees, costs and expenses, at the rate earned by the Settlement Fund, to be paid solely from the Settlement Fund. The attorneys' fees, costs and expenses authorized and approved by this Final Judgment and Order shall be paid to Berger Montague PC and Garwin Gerstein & Fisher LLP as follows: Class counsel shall be entitled to reimbursement of expenses within five (5) business days after this Settlement becomes final pursuant to Paragraph 7 of the Settlement Agreement or as soon thereafter as is practical and in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement and the Escrow Agreement and shall receive 80% of the total attorneys' fees awarded after Impax's second installment payment and the remaining 20% of attorneys' fees awarded after Impax's final settlement payment.

16. Upon consideration of Class Counsel's petition for service awards for Class Representatives, Value Drug and Meijer are each hereby awarded $150,000, to be paid solely from the Settlement Fund immediately after the Settlement becomes final in accordance with Paragraph 7 of the Settlement Agreement. Class Counsel David F. Sorensen and Bruce E. Gerstein shall allocate and distribute such attorneys' fees, costs and expenses among the various Class Counsel which have participated in this litigation. The Releasees shall have no responsibility for, and no liability whatsoever with respect to any payment or disbursement of attorneys' fees, expenses, costs or service awards among Class Counsel and/or Class Representatives, nor with respect to any allocation of attorneys' fees, expenses, costs or service awards to any other person or entity who may assert any claim thereto. The attorneys' fees, costs and expenses, and service awards authorized and approved by this Final Judgment and Order shall constitute full and final satisfaction of any and all claims that Plaintiffs and any Class member, and their respective counsel, may have or assert for reimbursement of fees, costs, and expenses, and service awards, and Plaintiffs and members of the Class, and their respective counsel, shall not seek or demand payment of any fees and/or costs and/or expenses and/or service awards from Impax other than from the Settlement Fund.

17. The Court retains exclusive jurisdiction over the Settlement and the Settlement Agreement as described therein, including the administration and consummation of the Settlement, and over this Final Judgment and Order.

18. The Court finds that this Final Judgment and Order adjudicates all of the claims, rights and liabilities of the parties to the Settlement Agreement (including the members of the Class) and is final and shall be immediately appealable. Neither this Order nor the Settlement Agreement nor any other Settlement-related document shall constitute any evidence, admission, or concession by Impax or any other Releasee, in this or any other matter or proceeding of any kind whatsoever, civil, criminal or otherwise, before any court, administrative agency, regulatory body, or any other body or authority, present or future, nor shall either the Settlement Agreement, this Order, or any other Settlement-related document be offered in evidence or used for any other purpose in this or any other matter or proceeding except as may be necessary to consummate or enforce the Settlement Agreement, the terms of this Order, or if offered by any Releasee in responding to any action purporting to assert Released Claims, or if offered by any Releasor in asserting that a claim is not a Released Claim, including because such claim is covered by Paragraph 16 of the Settlement Agreement ("Reservation of Claims").

SO ORDERED this 3rd day of November 2022

I. INTRODUCTION

Class counsel representing Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs Value Drug Company ("Value Drug"), Meijer, Inc., and Meijer Distribution, Inc. (together, "Meijer"), and the certified direct purchaser class (collectively, "Plaintiffs," "Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs," or "DPPs") respectfully submit this memorandum in support of their Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Service Awards for the Class Representatives. The declaration of Bruce E. Gerstein ("Gerstein Decl.") accompanies this memorandum.

For over eight years, Class counsel aggressively prosecuted this complicated and challenging antitrust case against determined Defendants. At the start of what would be a three-week trial, Class counsel reached an agreement in principle with defendant Impax Laboratories, Inc. ("Impax") to settle this matter for $145 million.[1] This is a particularly favorable outcome for the Direct Purchaser Class ("Class")[2] given the jury's ultimate verdict in favor of the remaining defendants, Endo Health Solutions Inc., Endo Pharmaceuticals Inc., and Penwest Pharmaceuticals Co. (collectively, "Endo").[3] This Court described the settlement with Impax as

[1] Under the terms of the Settlement Agreement, Impax will pay Plaintiffs $145,000,000 plus interest in three installments as follows: $58,000,000 was paid on June 22, 2022; $58,000,000 plus interest paid no later than January 17, 2023; and $29,000,000 plus interest paid no later than January 17, 2024. Settlement Agreement, ¶ 8 (ECF No. 1043-1).

[2] The Court previously certified the following Direct Purchaser Class:

> All persons or entities in the U.S. and its territories, including Puerto Rico, who purchased brand or generic Opana ER 5, 10, 20, 30, and/or 40 mg tablets directly from Defendants at any time during the period from April 1, 2011 until August 31, 2017 (the "Class"). Excluded from the Class are the Defendants and their officers, directors, management, employees, subsidiaries, or affiliates, and all federal governmental entities.

ECF No. 751 at 1 ("Defendants" are Endo and Impax). Also excluded from the Class are the following entities who have independently filed actions and previously opted out of the Class: CVS Pharmacy, Inc., Rite Aid Corporation, Rite Aid Hdqtrs. Corp., Walgreen Co., The Kroger Co., Albertsons LLC, Safeway Inc. and H-E-B L.P (collectively, the "Retailer Plaintiffs"). See ECF No. 768 at ¶ 9.

"excellent" and "great." See Transcript of Preliminary Approval Hearing, dated July 28, 2022 ("Preliminary Approval Transcript") at 2, 6-7.[4]

Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases brought pursuant to the standard articulated in Actavis[5] are complicated, requiring: (a) an understanding of intricate FDA regulations and the drug application approval process; (b) expertise in patent law and patent litigation, including substantive analyses of patents and patent infringement allegations; (c) economic expertise to evaluate the contours of monopoly power, which can include analysis of the relevant market; (d) the development of factual evidence and an economic model to demonstrate a "but-for world" devoid of the alleged anticompetitive behavior; and (e) the calculation of damages to the Class caused by the alleged misconduct. These cases, including this one, also require substantial attorney (and support staff) hours and the incurrence of substantial expenses and costs.

This particular case added several layers of complexity on top of the typical framework described above. Because the payment at issue in the contested "reverse payment" agreement was associated with a Development and Co-Promotion Agreement ("DCA") for a yet-to-be developed drug, the case required an understanding of the due diligence typically involved in drug investment partnerships and an investigation into the due diligence analysis (or lack thereof) conducted by the Defendants for the DCA. Further, because the settlement agreement included a so-called "broad license," Defendants argued that this provision made their agreement on balance procompetitive notwithstanding the challenged reverse payments because it granted a license to later-issued patents Endo had not yet acquired at the time of the reverse payment agreement, and other generic companies later lost patent infringement lawsuits brought by Endo concerning those later-issued patents. Additionally, unlike other cases, the complicated structure of the reverse payment—specifically the existence of the Endo Credit—made the establishment of any payment from Endo to Impax more difficult and challenging for Plaintiffs here than in other reverse payment cases. Indeed, Class counsel here needed to convince the Court and the jury that the Endo Credit was designed to guarantee Impax a significant payment at the time of the agreement no matter what happened to the market for Opana ER. Further compounding these unique and challenging complexities, since Opana ER is a controlled substance, the case required an understanding of FDA regulations related to controlled substances, the safety and dangers associated with different formulations of Opana ER for purported abuse deterrence, and analyses of Endo's claims of safety associated with its reformulated Opana ER, its petitions to the FDA to remove original Opana ER from the market, and its ultimate withdrawal of reformulated Opana ER from the market at the FDA's request.

The challenges and risks associated with this case were significant and were further intensified by the additional challenges imposed by Covid protocols. Those risks were ultimately realized following an almost three-week jury trial when the jury returned a verdict for Endo. Even the verdict underscored the complexities of this case. While the jury found that Class counsel successfully proved monopoly power and a reverse payment, they found that Endo's arguments concerning the "broad license" provided sufficient procompetitive justification for the conduct. The loss at trial underscores just how valuable the $145 million settlement is for the Class. Absent this settlement, secured by Class counsel as the trial commenced, the Class would currently be empty-handed, without any compensation for their injuries.

Class counsel investigated this case independently, without the aid of a preceding government action or indictment, and filed this case on an entirely contingent basis, knowing it could take years to prosecute, millions of dollars and tens of thousands of attorney hours to properly resource, and assuming the very real risk of nonpayment. Class counsel began investigating this "pay for delay" case in early 2014, ultimately filing the first complaint on behalf of plaintiff Rochester Drug Cooperative, Inc. ("RDC") on June 4, 2014.[6] Gerstein Decl. Decl. ¶ 2. Soon thereafter, Class counsel filed complaints on behalf of plaintiffs Value Drug[7] and Meijer[8] and the cases were centralized by the U.S. Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation in the Northern District of Illinois, along with cases filed on behalf other plaintiffs. ECF No. 1 (Dec. 12, 2014). Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 2-4. The DPPs' complaints alleged that Defendants Endo and Impax violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act under the standards set forth in Actavis by entering into an unlawful reverse payment agreement to settle patent infringement litigation. The litigation has since focused on the large, unlawful reverse payments Endo made to Impax, which induced Impax to delay its launch of generic Opana ER and suppressed competition, causing Class members to pay supracompetitive prices for brand and generic Opana ER sold by Defendants. Prior to the DPPs' complaint being filed, no other direct purchaser pursued the pay-for-delay theory that Class counsel and the Class Representatives here did, and the FTC did not file its case until 2016, almost two years after the first DPP complaint was filed.[9] Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 8-9.

Class counsel pursued this case on a wholly contingent basis without any guarantee of success or compensation. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 9. The favorable settlement with Impax reached at the late stage in this case is the result of their unique skill and experience gained from 20-plus years of handling similar cases and their perseverance in this case in the face of vigorous defenses advanced by some of the best defense firms in the country.

From case investigation through preliminary approval of the settlement, over the course of eight years, Class counsel expended almost 66,000 hours of uncompensated professional time, equating to a lodestar of over $41.7 million based on 2022 rates, and incurred over $4.3 million in unreimbursed out-of-pocket expenses. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 66-69. As compensation for their efforts, Class counsel seek reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $4,343,137.06, Id. at ¶ 66, service awards in the amount of $150,000 each for class representatives Value Drug and Meijer, and an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $50,528,470.66, i.e., 36% of the settlement amount (including an equal percentage of any interest accrued since the settlement amount was escrowed), net of reimbursed expenses and service awards granted by the Court pursuant to this motion. Id. at ¶ 71.[10] The requested fee, if awarded, would result in a modest lodestar multiplier of 1.21. Id.[11] It is respectfully suggested that these requests are justified for several reasons.

First, the result - $145 million in cash for the Class - is extraordinary as a stand-alone matter, but even more so in light of the loss at trial. The alternative for the Class was no recovery at all pending post-trial briefing and a likely appeal (by whichever side loses at the district court), which will not resolve for many months, if not years, and may result in another trial with similar uncertainties.

[10] This is calculated by subtracting $4,343,137.06 in expenses and $300,000 in service awards from the $145 million settlement and multiplying the difference by .36. The notice sent to the Class stated that "Class Counsel intend to seek attorneys' fees of up to forty percent of the Settlement Fund less court-approved expenses and service awards." ECF No. 1055 at 9.

Second, the requested fee is a reasonable market rate for Class counsel's services had they been negotiated ex ante, as the Seventh Circuit directs. The benchmarks employed in the Seventh Circuit to gauge reasonable market rates – existing or prior contracts between the parties, data from similar common fund cases, and class counsel auctions – all support Class counsel's request. Class members in this litigation have previously attested to the reasonableness of a 33% fee in similar class settlements of pharmaceutical antitrust cases and more than the 36% fee sought here if the case advanced to trial, as this one did. A 36% fee is also within the ordinary range of contingency fee arrangements actually negotiated ex ante between parties, including in complex securities and antitrust actions. And while there are few comparable, complex antitrust cases that advance all the way to a jury verdict, a 36% fee is not uncommon when they do.

Third, the unusually high risk, length, and complexities of this case, coupled with the caliber of performance and quality of work performed by Class counsel, including during trial, warrant the requested fee. This case was particularly complicated and risky, even among traditionally complicated antitrust cases brought under Actavis. Despite the very real risk of nonpayment, Class counsel committed 8 years, almost 66,000 attorney and professional hours, and $4,343,137.06 in unreimbursed expenses to ensure the vigorous prosecution of this case. Class counsel took this case through exhaustive fact and expert discovery, significant motion practice (under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12, 23, 56, and 702/Daubert, numerous motions to compel, numerous motions in limine, and motions regarding admissibility of evidence at trial), and through a three-week jury trial. The case was hard fought at every stage against very well-resourced Defendants, represented by some of the top defense law firms in the country, who mounted an aggressive and sophisticated defense. A lodestar cross check confirms the reasonableness of the 36% fee request. The requested fee would equate to a 1.21 multiplier of lodestar, which is on the low side of what is routinely granted in this Circuit and others in complex cases.

These factors strongly support the requested fee, the $150,000 service award for each named class representative, and the reimbursement of $4,343,137.06 in costs/expenses.

II. SUMMARY OF CLASS COUNSEL'S LITIGATION EFFORTS

A. Pre-Filing Investigation

Class counsel began investigating this case in earnest in early 2014. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 1. Class counsel gathered information regarding the market availability of generic versions of Opana ER, reviewed and analyzed the Opana ER patent litigation proceedings, and researched and analyzed publicly available information regarding the terms and conditions of Endo's settlements with Impax and the other would-be generic competitors.

On June 4, 2014, Class counsel's client RDC filed the first complaint by any plaintiff alleging a delay in generic Opana ER competition due to Defendants' unlawful reverse payment agreement.[12] Soon thereafter, Value Drug[13] and Meijer[14] filed complaints with substantially similar allegations, and the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred the cases to the Northern District of Illinois for coordination with other actions.[15] Class counsel filed the First Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint on May 4, 2015, which remained the operative complaint for the duration of litigation.[16] Class counsel investigated these allegations and developed the pleadings without the benefit of a related investigation or complaint brought by a government enforcement agency.

[12] Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. v. Endo Health Solutions Inc. et al., No. 14-cv-3185 (E.D. Pa.) (complaint filed on June 4, 2014) (now No. 14-cv-10151 (N.D. Ill.)). RDC dismissed its complaint with prejudice on June 11, 2018, ECF No. 378, but other clients of Class counsel, Class Representatives Value Drug and Meijer, filed complaints making substantially similar allegations, as outlined below.

[13] Value Drug Company v. Endo Health Solutions Inc. et al., No. 14-cv-5416 (N.D. Ill.) (complaint filed on July 16, 2014).

B. Prosecution of the Case

1. The Motion to Dismiss

Defendants filed a motion to dismiss on July 3, 2015, which argued that: (1) the "Endo Credit," no-AG agreement, and Endo's non-refundable upfront $10 million cash payment under the DCA did not constitute large reverse payments under Actavis; and (2) because other generic manufacturers were still embroiled in patent infringement litigation on later-issued patents, DPPs could not plausibly allege that Impax would have launched its generic Opana ER earlier absent the reverse payment agreement, which contained a so-called "broad license." ECF No. 118. Class counsel responded in sixty pages of briefing on August 21, 2015, raising, among other things, a newly issued decision in the Third Circuit which directly refuted Defendants' theory that a no-AG promise should not constitute a large reverse payment under Actavis. ECF No. 129 at 3, n. 6 (citing King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 791 F.3d 388, 395 (3d Cir. 2015)). The Court denied Defendants' motion in a 40-page opinion issued on February 10, 2016, acknowledging that, among other things, Plaintiffs' claims about the value of the alleged reverse payments "may be an issue for summary judgment or trial." In re Opana ER

[15] See Transfer Order, In re: Opana ER Antitrust Litigation, MDL No. 2580, ECF No. 54 (Dec. 12, 2014).

Antitrust Litig., 162 F. Supp. 3d 704, 719-20 (N.D. Ill. 2016). With these risks and challenges in mind, Class counsel developed and executed a comprehensive discovery plan.

2. Discovery

Discovery in this case began in earnest in the spring of 2016 following the Court's denial of the motion to dismiss. Class counsel, on behalf of DPPs, served each Defendant with over 100 Requests for Production, at least fifteen interrogatories, and several Requests for Admission; took, participated in, and defended more than 20 fact depositions; and pursued non-party discovery, including from Actavis, another generic Opana ER manufacturer. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 15-18, 21. Discovery in this litigation was hotly contested, requiring Class counsel to file numerous motions to compel document production, deposition testimony, and interrogatory responses from Defendants and third parties to access the discovery necessary to prove their claims. See e.g. ECF Nos. 262, 279, 281, 285, 291, 347, 359, 372; Gerstein Decl. ¶ 19.

As discussed below, Class counsel's diligent pursuit of evidence armed Plaintiffs with documentary evidence and testimony to successfully support their class certification motion, opposition to two motions for summary judgment, and present evidence during an almost three-week trial before this Court.

3. Class Certification

Class counsel's work developing expert discovery and filing a Rule 23 motion resulted in the successful certification of a class of direct purchasers of generic and brand Opana ER from Endo and Impax. See In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., 2021 WL 3627733, at *4 (N.D. Ill. June 4, 2021). Class counsel overcame Defendants' argument that the DPP class, with fewer than 40 distinct class members, was not sufficiently numerous to satisfy Rule 23(a), a hotly disputed issue resulting in split outcomes in district courts across the country. See id.

4. Experts

Class counsel retained eleven experts who issued 22 reports and sat for 22 depositions, resulting in expert fees of nearly $3 million. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 22-23. Class counsel also deposed or participated in the depositions of Defendants' twelve experts. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 26. These efforts required Class counsel to present and defend against very complex material in a concise and coherent manner. Class counsel also ensured that eight of the Class's experts were fully prepared to provide comprehensible testimony at trial. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 24.

5. Summary Judgment and Daubert Motions

After the conclusion of expert discovery, Defendants moved for summary judgment on causation and damages, arguing that Plaintiffs suffered no antitrust injury because Defendants' settlement agreement allegedly promoted competition and hastened generic entry by granting Impax a broad license that purportedly permitted Impax to continue selling generic Opana ER after Endo acquired the later-issued patents. ECF Nos. 539, 540. Endo also moved for partial summary judgment on several complex patent issues related to the prior patent litigation, seeking to prevent Plaintiffs from (a) recovering damages after the issuance of its two later-issued patents; and (b) from presenting certain arguments and defenses related to Impax's purported patent infringement. ECF Nos. 532, 533. Along with its summary judgment motions and replies, Defendants collectively submitted 160 pages of alleged undisputed facts and 138 exhibits. ECF Nos. 562, 581; Gerstein Decl. ¶ 29. Defendants also filed ten Daubert motions, totaling another 216 pages of briefing (including replies) and an additional 105 exhibits. ECF Nos. 510 & 512 (Tupman), 513 & 515 (DeLeon), 516 (Molina), 529 (Leitzinger), 537 & 542 (Bruno), 541 & 544 (Belvis), 546 & 549 (Byrn), 550 & 554 (Zettler and Lessem), 556 & 559 (McGuire), 757 & 758 (Leitzinger, renewed); Gerstein Decl. ¶ 30. Class counsel opposed with two summary judgment briefs, submitting their own statements of undisputed facts and replies to Defendants' statements of facts and exhibits. ECF Nos. 615 & 617-21, 639, 644; Gerstein Decl. ¶ 32. Plaintiffs also filed 10 Daubert motions of their own, totaling 222 pages in briefing (including opening and replies) and supported by 98 exhibits, and opposed each of Defendants' ten Daubert motions in another 135 pages of briefing and supported by 57 exhibits. ECF Nos. 519 (Patel), 520 (Singer), 521 (Figg), 522 (Lowman), 523 (excluding opinions concerning lawsuits and patents that post-date the reverse payment agreement), 524 (Fassihi), 525 (Gilligan), 526 (Addanki), 527 (Green), 528 (Berneman), 534 (Declaration and Exhibits in support of Daubert motions), 565 (Patel reply), 566 (Singer reply), 568 (Figg reply), 569 (Lowman reply), 571 (Post-date reply), 572 (Fassihi reply), 573 (Gilligan reply), 575 (Addanki reply), 576 (Green reply), 577 (Berneman reply), 600 (Tupman opposition), 602 (DeLeon opposition), 603 (Molina opposition), 604 (Bruno opposition), 605 (Belvis opposition), 609 (Leitzinger opposition), 613 (McGuire opposition), 614 (Zettler & Lessem opposition), 616 (Byrn opposition), 762 (Leitzinger renewed opposition); Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 31, 33.

In a 29-page opinion, the Court denied Defendants' summary judgment motions and denied, at least in part, all but one Daubert motion filed by Defendants. In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., 2021 WL 2291067 (N.D. Ill. June 4, 2021). In denying Defendants' motion for summary judgment on causation and damages, the Court rejected Defendants' argument concerning the broad license:

> Defendants would like to use the Broad License as a counterbalance to the reverse payment, but the Broad License is a concession in the same direction as the reverse payment—from Endo to Impax. As a result, while the Broad License has potentially beneficial effects to consumers, it does not counterbalance the $102 million reverse payment from Endo to Impax. Instead, the Broad License concession serves only to highlight how much Endo valued Impax's delayed start, suggesting monopolistic effects instead of procompetitive ones.

Id., at *25. The Court agreed with Plaintiffs that "there is additional evidence in the record that the Broad License was not a reasonably necessary part of the 2010 Settlement and License Agreement," and this became the defining issue at trial. Id.

6. Trial Preparation and Trial

With fact and expert discovery completed, summary judgment and Daubert motions resolved, Class counsel prepared for trial, which ultimately began on June 9, 2022. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 35, 44. Leading up to trial, Defendants filed 23 motions in limine, comprising 174 pages of briefing. ECF Nos. 801-05, 814-15, 817-20, 822, 824-25, 827, 829, 831; Gerstein Decl. ¶ 36. Class counsel filed 91 pages of briefing in opposition and seven motions in limine of their own, totaling 82 pages. ECF Nos. 806-12, 839, 842-43, 845-46, 848, 865; Gerstein Decl. ¶ 36. In preparation for trial and via the joint pretrial order filed on May 24, 2022, the parties exchanged witness lists, deposition designations, exhibit lists, proposed jury instructions, and proposed verdict forms. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 37. Class counsel, on behalf of Plaintiffs, named 35 fact witnesses and eight expert witnesses, which Class counsel prepared to examine or present via video depositions at trial. Id. at ¶ 38. Endo and Impax named 44 witnesses, which Class counsel prepared to cross-examine or present via counter-designated video depositions at trial. Id. Class counsel submitted a 186-page spreadsheet of deposition designations, to which Defendants objected and counter-designated deposition testimony. Id. at ¶ 39. Class counsel replied by responding to Defendants' objections, as well as by objecting and providing reply-designations in response to Defendants' counter-designations. Id. Endo submitted a 104-page spreadsheet of deposition designations and Impax submitted a 105-page spreadsheet. Id. For each, Class counsel responded with objections and counter-designations. Id. Class counsel prepared a final exhibit list with 1,664 exhibits, while Endo offered 618 and Impax offered 190, which Class counsel responded to with objections as appropriate. Id. at ¶ 40. Class counsel prepared general jury instructions, Phase I jury instructions, and Phase II jury instructions, as well as a statement for the Court in support of their jury instructions, totaling more than 250 pages. Id. at ¶ 41. Class counsel also prepared objections to Endo's and Impax's separate, opposing jury instructions and responses to Endo's and Impax's objections to Plaintiffs' proposed jury instructions. Id. Last, Class counsel prepared proposed verdict forms for Phase I and Phase II, along with a supportive statement and objections to Endo's and Impax's separate proposed verdict forms, which collectively totaled 23 pages. Id.

Class counsel travelled to Chicago a few days before the final pre-trial conference on June 2, 2022 to submit to court-mandated COVID testing and further coordinate with co-counsel and the other plaintiff groups on trial strategy. Id. at ¶ 42. Class counsel telephonically attended the pretrial conference addressing the Court's rulings on motions in limine and instructions related to jury selection and trial logistics, among other things. Id. In preparation for jury selection, Class counsel reviewed over 200 pages of juror information and questionnaire responses. Id. at ¶ 43. The trial began on June 9, 2022 with voir dire. Id. at ¶ 44. A jury was selected that morning and Class counsel and co-counsel offered opening arguments that afternoon. Class counsel attended trial during the day, examining witnesses, countering any objections raised by Defendants, and proffering objections of their own. Id. at ¶ 45. Each evening, for witnesses whose deposition testimony was presented at trial by video, Class counsel exchanged exhibit lists, deposition designations, related objections, counter-designations, and reply-designations with Defendants. Id.

Just before opening statements on June 9, 2022, Impax and Class counsel announced a settlement with Impax, who also settled with the Retailer plaintiffs. Id. at ¶ 46. Because Impax had not yet settled with the end-payor plaintiffs, however, Impax participated at trial until June 15, 2022, when Impax and the end-payor plaintiffs informed the Court they had settled. Id. The trial continued against Endo, and the jury ultimately returned a jury verdict in favor of Endo on July 1, 2022. Id.

7. Mediation and Settlement

DPPs and Impax reached an agreement in principle on June 8, 2022 just as the parties prepared for opening statements. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 48. This represented the culmination of mediation efforts that first started in May 2022 with a full day mediation led by Jonathan Marks, one of the preeminent mediators in the nation, and continued with multiple individual virtual sessions in May and early June, laying the groundwork for the parties' ultimate settlement as trial started. Id. at ¶ 47. After the jury verdict, Class counsel negotiated the ultimate settlement agreement with Impax, which was executed on July 15, 2022, just two weeks after the jury's verdict in Endo's favor. Id. at ¶ 48.

* * *

For nearly eight years, Class counsel zealously prosecuted this action. The very substantial settlement reached with Impax will ensure that the Class receives a significant recovery despite a loss at trial.

III. CLASS COUNSEL SHOULD BE REWARDED REASONABLE ATTORNEYS' FEES

A. The Recovery for the Class is Extraordinary in Light of the Loss at Trial

Class counsel secured an "excellent"[17] $145 million settlement with Impax as trial commenced, which continued to conclusion with a verdict in Endo's favor. The $145 million Class counsel recovered from Impax on behalf of the Class is not only substantial in relation to similarly complex cases,[18] it is extraordinary in light of the known alternative: no recovery whatsoever. The indisputable value and benefit conferred on the Class by this settlement is a testament to Class counsel's determined pursuit of victory at every stage of this litigation.

B. Class Counsel's Fee Request is Reasonable

Under the "equitable fund" doctrine, attorneys for the plaintiffs in a class action may petition the court for compensation from the settlement fund that resulted from their efforts. Boeing v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h) ("In a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees ... that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement."). Courts in the Seventh Circuit use one of two methods for calculating reasonable attorneys' fees – either the "lodestar" method, which considers "the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation multiplied by a reasonable hourly rate," or the percentage method, which "sets the fee award as a percentage of the recovered settlement fund, plus expenses and interest." In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc., 80 F. Supp. 3d 838, 844 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (citations omitted); In re Cap. One Tel. Consumer Prot. Act Litig., 80 F. Supp. 3d 781, 794 (N.D. Ill. 2015) ("It has long been the law in the Seventh Circuit that in common fund cases like this one, district courts have discretion to choose either the lodestar or a percentage approach to calculating fees.") (citing Florin v. Nationsbank of Ga., N.A., 34 F.3d 560, 566 (7th Cir.1994)). The trend in common-fund cases like this one is to use the percentage method. Gaskill v. Gordon, 160 F.3d 361, 362 (7th Cir. 1998) ("When a class suit produces a fund for the class, it is commonplace to award the lawyers for the class a percentage of the fund in recognition of the fact that most suits for damages in this country are handled on the plaintiff's side on a contingent-fee basis") (collecting cases, internal citations omitted); Dairy Farmers, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 844 (Applying the percentage method and explaining that it "has emerged as the favored method for calculating fees in common-fund cases in this district"). As Professor Brian Fitzpatrick of Vanderbilt Law School, an expert on fee awards in class action litigation, has observed, where a court can monitor against premature settlement—which clearly is not an issue here—then the percentage of recovery, not lodestar, is the best method for determining appropriate attorneys' fees. Brian T. Fitzpatrick, A Fiduciary Judge's Guide to Awarding Fees In Class Actions, 89 Fordham Law Review 1151, at 1170 (2021) (hereinafter, "Guide to Awarding Fees In Class Actions").

As the Seventh Circuit directs, "[t]o determine the reasonableness of the sought-after fee in a common-fund case, 'courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time.'" Cap. One, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 788–89 (quoting In re Synthroid Mktg. Litig., 264 F.3d 712, 718 (7th Cir. 2001) ("Synthroid I") (citations omitted). This is often referred to as the "*ant*e approach," which asks the court to assign fees that "mimic a hypothetical ex ante bargain between the class and its attorneys." Williams v. Rohm & Haas Pension Plan, 658 F.3d 629, 635 (7th Cir.2011); Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 719 (Directing the district court on remand to "set a fee by approximating the terms that would have been agreed to ex ante, had negotiations occurred.").

In Synthroid I, the Seventh Circuit provided "guides" or "benchmarks" to approximate the market rate by looking at "similar bargains," such as (1) actual fee contracts between the parties and class counsel in similar cases, (2) data from similar common fund cases, and (3) information from lead counsel auctions in similar cases. Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 719;

Taubenfield v. AON Corp., 415 F.3d 597, 599 (7th Cir. 2005). The market rate should also be adjusted to account for (1) the risk of nonpayment a firm agrees to bear, (2) the quality of its performance, (3) the amount of work necessary to resolve the litigation, and (4) the stakes of the case. Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 721.

Here, Class counsel's request for a fee of 36% of the net settlement fund is supported by these factors, consistent with the law, and commensurate with awards in similar cases.

C. Benchmarks Provided by Similar Cases Support Class Counsel's Fee Request as an Appropriate Market Rate

Attorneys' fees negotiated and arrived at in similar complex cases provide an initial benchmark for a reasonable market rate. Cap. One, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 796 ("the Seventh Circuit explained that it is possible to learn about 'similar bargains' and set forth three 'guides' or 'benchmarks' to help district courts estimate the market fee: (1) actual fee contracts between plaintiffs and their attorneys; (2) data from similar common fund cases where fees were privately negotiated; and (3) information from class-counsel auctions.") (citing Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 719); Dairy Farmers, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 845 ("As a barometer for assessing the reasonableness of a fee award in common-fund cases, courts look to the going market rate for legal services in similar cases.").

1. Fee Contracts Between Class Counsel and Clients

As is often true in class action litigation, the parties here did not agree upon a contingent fee award in advance, but this Class consists of sophisticated business entities who have served as Class members and recovered settlements from numerous pharmaceutical pay-for-delay antitrust cases like this one. Class counsel are largely the same legal team that have been litigating direct purchaser delayed generic entry antitrust cases since 1998. As a result of Class counsel's historical efforts, the largest members of these classes – the three "national wholesalers," AmerisourceBergen Corp., Cardinal Health, Inc. and McKesson Corp. – have received substantial recoveries in prior pharmaceutical pay-for-delay cases. These same entities have provided letters and declarations in previous cases affirmatively supporting fee applications, where Class counsel requested a fee of one-third (33.3%) of the settlement. See Gerstein Decl., Ex. A (prior letters). The prior support from these Class members, all large corporations with extensive experience in negotiating fair legal fees, for fees of 33% in similar pharmaceutical antitrust cases suggests that this is a fair guide or benchmark. A critical distinction, however, is that none of the cases approving a 33% fee was litigated through trial and none involved a significant settlement with one defendant during a trial that ended with a verdict for the other defendant, as occurred here. In an antitrust case brought on behalf of a class with a similar make up to the Class here, the class representative, Louisiana Wholesale Drug Co., Inc., attested that they "would have retained [Class counsel] based on a 33 1/3% contingency fee in the event of settlement or compromise without trial and/or based on a 40% contingency fee in the event of trial." In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., No. 02-1830, ECF No. 114 at 12 (D.N.J. Aug. 6, 2014).

2. Data from Similar Common Fund Cases

Courts nationwide recognize that a 36% fee is within the ordinary range of ex ante rates in privately negotiated contingency-fee arrangements. Dairy Farmers, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 845 (in class actions, the "usual range for contingent fees is between 33 and 50 percent"); In re Corel Corp. Sec. Litig., 293 F. Supp. 2d 484, 495–98 (E.D. Pa. 2003) ("Attorneys regularly contract for contingent fees between 30% and 40% with their clients in non-class commercial litigation."); Retsky Family Ltd. P'ship v. Price Waterhouse LLP, 2001 WL 1568856, at *4 (N.D.Ill. Dec.10, 2001) ("A customary contingency fee would range from 33 1/3% to 40% of the amount recovered.").[19]

When looking to similar class cases and fee awards ultimately granted by courts for a benchmark, the unique posture of this case should be considered. Very few antitrust cases proceed to trial and even fewer reach a jury verdict. See Allapattah Servs., Inc. v. Exxon Corp., 454 F. Supp. 2d 1185, 1193 (S.D. Fla. 2006) ("The most apparent feature distinguishing this class action from virtually every other class action in the reported federal decisions is obviously that it did not settle before trial."). This is one of only two reverse payment antitrust cases to go to verdict since the Supreme Court's Actavis decision in 2013, and the only case that resulted in both a significant mid-trial settlement for, and a jury verdict against, the same plaintiffs. Where complex class action cases proceed to trial, a fee award of even 40% is not uncommon. See Order Granting Mot. for Att'ys Fees, In re Melridge, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 87-cv-01426-FR, ECF No. 2419 (D. Or. (E.D. Pa Jan. 9, 2020) (awarding 40% after 13 years of litigation, weeks before trial, following summary judgment and several interlocutory appeals).

As Professor Fitzpatrick explained in his recent article, awarding "higher percentages after class trials" is "consistent with models that recommend escalating percentages as the litigation matures," but "because trials are so rare in class actions, there are no published studies" on the topic. Guide to Awarding Fees In Class Actions, at 1168. Professor Fitzpatrick ultimately concluded based on his analysis, that "judges should usually choose the percentage method. I also think this percentage should either be fixed or escalate with litigation maturity." Id. The observation supporting a higher fee award for cases that go to trial is particularly relevant to the Court's analysis here, as Professor Fitzpatrick studied 33 delayed generic entry cases brought on behalf of basically the same class of wholesalers as the Class here over 17 years (between 2003 and 2020) and found that the typical, unobjected-to fee request was around 33% for cases that did not go to trial. Id. at 1161-62. Here, of course, Class counsel did go to trial, taking on even more risk than the typical case, which justifies a fee greater than 33% of the settlement. This premise is also supported by the fee negotiated by an opt-out plaintiff in an antitrust case, In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., which promised its lawyers 33 percent to 40 percent of the recovery, "depending upon the time of any settlement." Decl. of John C. Coffee, Jr., In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., No. 95-cv-01477, ECF No 1421, Ex. A at 2 (C.D. Ill. Oct. 7, 2004).

The 36% fee sought here is also supported by a study published by David L. Schwartz, which surveyed contingent fee arrangements in patent litigation. Patent litigation often involves some of the largest, most sophisticated corporations in the country and therefore serves as a good proxy for this complex pharmaceutical antitrust litigation containing a patent component. The study found that companies hiring patent litigators on a contingency basis use two types of fee arrangements: flat fee arrangements, with a fixed percentage, and graduated arrangements, setting escalating rates at various case milestones. For flat fee arrangements, fees averaged 38.6% of the recovery. For graduated arrangements, the average fee negotiated was 28% upon filing and 40.2% through appeal. David L. Schwartz, The Rise of Contingent Fee Representation in Patent Litigation, 64 Ala. L. Rev. 335, 360 (2012).[20]

The length of this case further supports Class counsel's fee request. The average antitrust case settles in 5.2 years, well before the case proceeds to trial and significantly earlier than the 8 years required to reach a settlement in this case. 2021 Antitrust Annual Report, at 8 (Settlements in antitrust cases take an average of 5.2 years from filing to final approval). In antitrust class actions of similar complexity to this one, where recoveries exceed $100 million, but where settlements are reached earlier in the litigation, courts routinely award fees of 33%. See e.g. In re Tricor Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-cv-340, ECF No. 543 (D. Del. April 23, 2009) (33% of $250 million settlement, settled after 3 ½ years of litigation at the commencement of trial); Neurontin, No. 02-1830, ECF No. 114 (D.N.J. Aug. 6, 2014) (33 1/3% of $191 million settlement, settled after 12 years of litigation, following summary judgment and Daubert decisions); In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 6577029 (D. Md. Dec. 13, 2013)

> Contingent Fee Arrangements: In a contingent fee arrangement, the client does not pay any legal fees for the representation. Instead, the law firm only gets paid from damages obtained in a verdict or settlement. Typically, the law firm will receive between 33-50% of the recovered damages, depending on several factors. This is strictly a results-based system.

As discussed above, a higher fee is warranted here in light of the unique posture of this case.

3. Class Action Auctions

Auctions for class counsel are not an appropriate benchmark in an antitrust case such as this one. While there are cases from over 20 years ago adopting a competitive approach to negotiate fee structures at the outset of litigation, this is not a method that has been adopted by courts in the current market environment. Cap. One, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 800–01 (collecting cases selecting class counsel through an auction process, all dated prior to 2002).[22] For just this reason,

[22] See also Guide to Awarding Fees In Class Actions, at 1164-66 (explaining that auctions for class counsel are impractical and criticizing their effectiveness, because (a) bids submitted by attorneys are the Seventh Circuit cast doubt on the use of contingent fees arrived at by auctions in securities class actions as a metric for other lawsuits. In re Synthroid Mktg. Litig., 325 F.3d 974, 979 (7th Cir. 2003) ("Synthroid II") ("if securities suits present less risk to the plaintiff class than does a fraud suit against a drug manufacturer, it is unsound to use a contingent fee appropriate to the former as the measure in the latter.").

There is one example of an attempted auction in a risky litigation associated with a bankruptcy proceeding that is instructive. In In re Merry-Go-Round Enterprises, Inc., 244 B.R. 327 (D. Md. 2000), the bankruptcy trustee wanted to assert claims against Ernst & Young. The trustee looked for counsel willing to accept a declining scale of fee percentages, found no takers, and ultimately agreed to pay a law firm a straight 40% of the recovery. Ernst & Young subsequently settled for $185 million, at which point the law firm applied for $71.2 million in fees,[23] 21 times its lodestar. The bankruptcy judge granted the request, writing: "[v]iewed at the outset of this representation, with special counsel advancing expenses on a contingency basis and facing the uncertainties and risks posed by this representation, the 40% contingent fee was reasonable, necessary, and within a market range." Id. at 335.

D. A 36% Fee is Fair and Reasonable Given the Remarkable Recovery for the Class in a Case with Extraordinary Risk, Length, and Difficulty

The $145 million Class counsel recovered from Impax for the Class is remarkable in light of the certain alternative: loss at trial and currently no recovery at all. Using the market rate as a "guide," courts can and should adjust fee rates obtained in similar cases based on factors unique often complex and not easily comparable to one another, (b) the lowest bidder may not be the best lawyer and it is difficult for judges to subjectively evaluate quality in exchange for price, (c) the lawyers winning the auction with the lowest bid will have the strongest incentive to settle the case too early for too little.).

[23] The 40% contingency request was made after reimbursement of expenses and reduced by $2 million to reflect a settlement with an objecting, major creditor. Id. at 333.

to the case at hand, i.e., the (1) risk of nonpayment, (2) quality of lawyering, (3) work required, and (4) the stakes of the case. Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 721 ("The market rate for legal fees depends in part on the risk of nonpayment a firm agrees to bear, in part on the quality of its performance, in part on the amount of work necessary to resolve the litigation, and in part on the stakes of the case."). Since the certain alternative for the Class was to prosecute this case through to an unfavorable jury verdict (pending post-trial briefing and likely appeal), Class counsel's fee request of 36% is eminently reasonable considering the risk of nonpayment, quality of lawyering required, work invested, and high stakes involved to achieve such an extraordinary outcome.

1. Risk of Nonpayment

The risk assumed by Class counsel in prosecuting this case warrants a 36% fee award. Cap. One, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 805 ("The estimated magnitude of the risk necessarily affects the price at which Class Counsel in this case would have been willing to offer their services in an ex ante negotiation, had such a negotiation occurred.") (citing Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 721). When Class counsel filed this case over eight years ago, no government agency had taken any action to prosecute a similar case involving Opana ER. Class counsel did not have the advantage of "piggy backing" on pre-existing litigation or the reassurance of liability associated with a coinciding government indictment or guilty plea when it initiated the case entirely on a contingent basis. Dairy Farmers, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 848 ("One proxy for assessing risk is whether the litigation followed on the heels of some prior criminal or civil proceeding involving the same parties or subject matter. This inquiry provides insight into whether class counsel benefitted from the work of others.").

If Class counsel had not secured this settlement, neither the Class nor Class counsel would have received anything, despite the eight years, thousands of hours, and millions of dollars expended. The 36% fee request is consistent with the considerable risk assumed by Class counsel with no guarantee of recovery (and, in hindsight, the certainty of no recovery absent this settlement). Silverman v. Motorola Sols., Inc., 739 F.3d 956, 958 (7th Cir. 2013) (citation omitted) ("Contingent fees compensate lawyers for the risk of nonpayment. The greater the risk of walking away empty-handed, the higher the award must be to attract competent and energetic counsel.") (affirming above-average fee percentage because district court could have found that the "suit was unusually risky."); Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 719 ("The greater the risk of loss, the greater the incentive compensation required."); Sutton v. Bernard, 504 F.3d 688, 694 (7th Cir.2007) (holding that class counsel was undercompensated where "the district court failed to provide for the risk of loss"); Matter of Cont'l Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 569 (7th Cir. 1992) (emphasizing the need to adjust fee awards to account for risk).

2. The Quality of Performance

"Yet another litmus test for assessing reasonableness is quality of Class Counsel's performance in achieving the settlement—that is, whether this is the type of outcome that willing clients would have envisioned from the outset." Dairy Farmers, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 849. This litigation was bitterly fought and aggressively litigated by both sides. Defendants were large, sophisticated corporations represented by skilled, nationally respected trial and appellate attorneys with practically unlimited resources at their disposal. Litigating this case against formidable Defendants and their attorneys required extraordinary skill. Class counsel expertly navigated this unusually complicated case, from initial investigation in 2014 through numerous discovery battles, extensive class certification briefing, dozens of expert reports and Daubert motions, summary judgment, trial preparation, including dozens of motions in limine, more than three weeks of trial, and settlement, with tremendous skill and faithful adherence to the Class's best interests at every stage.

Class counsel have decades of experience pursuing and trying pharmaceutical antitrust cases, which lends the team efficiency and sophisticated litigation judgment. The result speaks for itself: Class counsel obtained class certification and defeated Defendants' summary judgment motions and almost all of Defendants' Daubert motions. Class counsel's ability to secure what this Court described as an "excellent" and "great"[24] $145 million settlement for the Class at the outset of the three-week-long trial is a testament to the strength of Class counsel's preparation for trial. Had Class counsel failed to secure this settlement, the Class today would be left empty-handed. It speaks to the quality of representation provided by Class counsel and supports their fee request.

3. Class Counsel Devoted Extensive Time and Work to Successfully Prosecute this Case

Class counsel devoted eight years and almost 66,000 hours to the prosecution of this case, which invoked complex and unique issues of fact and law. Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 721 ("The market rate for legal fees depends in part on …the amount of work necessary to resolve the litigation.").

Antitrust cases are some of the most complex, expensive, and time-consuming actions to prosecute. See In re Motorsports Merch. Antitrust Litig., 112 F. Supp. 2d 1329, 1337 (N.D. Ga. 2000) ("An antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute."); In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2015 WL 5918273, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015) (prosecuting an antitrust conspiracy required "complex expert analysis and review of mountains of documents"); Flonase, 951 F. Supp. 2d at 743 ("Antitrust class actions are particularly complex to litigate and therefore quite expensive."). This lawsuit was especially large and complicated, as borne out at trial, where a jury returned a verdict for Endo. Class counsel had to grapple with numerous factual obstacles, including: a settlement agreement that contained a "broad license" for later-issued patents; Endo's success litigating patent infringement lawsuits against other generic manufacturers for those later-issued patents; a complicated payment provision called the "Endo Credit" contained in the settlement agreement; the DCA signed in conjunction with the settlement agreement and disputes over its related payments; Endo's efforts to convert the market from original Opana ER to reformulated Opana ER and disputes over each product's safety and abuse deterrence, related petitions filed with and decisions issued by the FDA, and Endo's ultimate decision to remove reformulated Opana ER from the market at the FDA's request. Needless to say, if there is a "standard" reverse payment case, this case deviated from that mold. It is hard to overstate the challenge Class counsel faced in making the complexities of this case comprehensible to a lay jury. The time and labor involved in prosecuting this case, and the novelty and difficulty of the questions presented, support Class counsel's fee request.

The Seventh Circuit does not require a lodestar cross-check. See Williams, 658 F.3d at 636 ("[C]onsideration of a lodestar check is not an issue of required methodology.") (citing Cook v. Niedert, 142 F.3d 1004, 1013 (7th Cir.1998) ("[W]e have never ordered the district judge to ensure that the lodestar result mimics that of the percentage approach."); Schulte v. Fifth Third Bank, 805 F.Supp.2d 560, 598 (N.D.Ill. 2011) (noting that "many courts in this circuit have criticized the use of a lodestar cross-check in common fund cases" when approving fee request with lodestar risk multiplier of 2.5); Will v. Gen. Dynamics Corp., 2010 WL 4818174, at *3 (S.D. Ill. Nov. 22, 2010) ("The use of a lodestar cross-check in a common fund case is unnecessary, arbitrary, and potentially counterproductive."). Nonetheless, the lodestar multiplier in this case supports the appropriateness of Class counsel's fee request. As detailed in the Gerstein Declaration, Class counsel worked almost 66,000 hours on this case thus far, amounting to $41,762,618.41 in lodestar based on 2022 rates. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 67. A 36% fee award equals a lodestar multiplier of 1.21. Such a multiplier falls on the low end of the range routinely awarded by courts in this Circuit. Harman v. Lyphomed, Inc., 945 F.2d 969, 976 (7th Cir. 1991) ("[a risk] multiplier is, within the court's discretion, appropriate when counsel assume a risk of non-payment in taking a suit" and "[m]ultipliers anywhere between one and four, In re Cenco, Inc. Sec. Litigation, 519 F.Supp. 322, 325 (N.D.Ill.1981) (four, which is quite rare), have been approved."); accord Schulte, 805 F. July 29, 2016) (approving a fee yielding a multiplier of approximately 3.2, and noting that a multiplier of up to 4 or 5 "would fall within the range of multipliers accepted by a number [of] courts in megafund cases."). Pharmaceutical pay-for-delay antitrust cases commonly result in similar or significantly higher multipliers. Flonase, 951 F. Given the risk Class counsel assumed and the amount of time, labor, and expense dedicated to litigating this case all the way through trial, the requested fee is reasonable. See Newberg on Class Actions §15:87 (5th ed. 2015) (substantial multiplier is appropriate where case was risky, time-consuming, involved wrongdoing uncovered by counsel in the first instance, and delivered exceptional results).

4. The stakes in the case

The high stakes of this litigation likewise support Class counsel's fee request. According to Plaintiffs' damages expert, the Class's total overcharges in this case exceeded $500 million. Ex. 3, Supplemental Report of Dr. Jeffrey Leitzinger, dated July 26, 2021 (ECF No. 758-2). With trebled damages under the Sherman Act, Defendants' joint exposure was over $1.5 billion. Class counsel also had a great deal at stake, taking the case on an entirely contingent basis, expending almost 66,000 hours and over $41.7 million in uncompensated attorney and professional time to litigate the case, and advancing litigation costs over $4.3 million. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 66-67; Heekin v. Anthem, Inc., 2012 WL 5878032, at *5 (S.D. Ind. Nov. 20, 2012) (noting that Class counsel "had a great deal at stake, with the risk of non-payment, burden of advancing litigation costs of over $6 million, and the "opportunity costs" of turning down other lucrative clients."); Schulte, 805 F. Supp. 2d at 598 (observing that "the stakes in the case are high given the size of the Class, the scale of the challenged activity, the complexity and costs of the legal proceedings, and the amount of money involved.").

The very real risk of non-payment, quality of representation, work required to resolve the litigation, and high stakes of this particularly complex antitrust class action – only the second of its kind to ever reach a jury verdict – all weigh in favor of awarding Class counsel their requested 36% fee. See Beesley v. Int'l Paper Co., 2014 WL 375432, at *2 (S.D. Ill. Jan. 31, 2014) ("Class Counsel's fee request is more than justified in this case given the extraordinary risk counsel accepted in agreeing to represent the Class; Class Counsel's demonstrated willingness to pursue this action over more than seven years of intense, adversarial litigation; and the enormous value of … relief included in this settlement.").

IV. CLASS COUNSEL'S COSTS AND EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND WERE NECESSARY TO THE RESULT

It is well-settled that counsel who have created a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to be reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses reasonably incurred in creating the fund. Schulte, 805 F. Supp. 2d at 600 ("The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow the Court, in a certified class action, to 'award reasonable…nontaxable costs that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement.'") (quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(h)). Here, Class counsel's unreimbursed expenses of $4,343,137.06 were reasonably incurred and necessary to the representation of the Class. These expenses have been itemized by category for the Court's convenience. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 66-69. See Synthroid I, 264 F.3d at 722 ("If counsel submit bills with the level of detail that paying clients find satisfactory, a federal court should not require more."). These unreimbursed expenses include costs for computerized legal research, the creation and maintenance of an electronic document database, expert costs, travel and lodging expenses, copying, court reporters, transcripts, and mediation. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 69. They also include trial expenses, such as a jury consultant and various other trial-related costs, such as a workspace in Chicago for almost two months. Id. These are typical expenses, routinely deemed reasonable and necessary, and they are consistent with expenses in similar, complex class cases, particularly in light of the eight years of litigation and the expense of preparing for and conducting a trial. See Order Granting Reimbursement of Litig. Expenses, In re AT & T Corp., 455 F.3d 160, 163 (3d Cir. 2006) (upholding reimbursement of $5.4 million in expenses in case that settled mid-trial); King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., No. 2:06-cv-01797, ECF No. 870 at 10 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 15, 2015) (approving $3.5 million in costs and expenses); Tricor, No. 05-340, ECF No. 543 at 10 (D. Del. Apr. 23, 2009) (approving $3.5 million in costs and expenses in a case that settled after 3 ½ years of litigation at the commencement of trial); In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., No. 2:08-cv-2431, ECF No. 485 at 8 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 7, 2012) (approving $3.1 million in costs and expenses in a case that settled after the close of fact and expert discovery, following summary judgment rulings). Accordingly, Class counsel respectfully request that the Court approve reimbursement of Class counsel's expenses in full.

V. SERVICE AWARDS FOR THE CLASS REPRESENTATIVES ARE APPROPRIATE AND REASONABLE

"Because a named plaintiff is an essential ingredient of any class action, an incentive award is appropriate if it is necessary to induce an individual to participate in the suit." Cook, 142 F.3d at 1016 (citation omitted). Here, Class counsel believes that awards of $150,000 each to Value Drug and Meijer are appropriate in recognition of the long hours they spent participating in this litigation, filing suit, collecting discovery, sitting for depositions, defending their adequacy in motions, and attending and participating in trial. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 72-79. See Cook, 142 F.3d at 1016 ("In deciding whether such an award is warranted, relevant factors include the actions the plaintiff has taken to protect the interests of the class, the degree to which the class has benefitted from those actions, and the amount of time and effort the plaintiff expended in pursuing the litigation."). The named plaintiffs here, Value Drug and Meijer, are regular customers of the Defendants, routinely purchasing products from both Impax and Endo. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 73. There is inherent risk in filing suit as a named plaintiff on behalf of a class against an entity with which all class members transact business, a risk Value Drug and Meijer assumed in order to benefit the Class. See Dial Corp. v. News Corp., 317 F.R.D. 426, 439 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) ("[T]he decision to fire the first shot on behalf of the Class was fraught with risks. Notably, the named Plaintiffs in this case assumed a substantial risk in antagonizing a longstanding, powerful business partner[.]").

The amount requested here is in line with awards made to named representatives in other pharmaceutical reverse payment cases, which did not go to trial. See e.g., In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., No. 3:14-md-02521-WHO, ECF No. 1054 at ¶ 15 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 20, 2018) ($100,000); In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 01-1652, ECF No. 1057 at ¶ 12 (D.N.J. Oct. 5, 2017) ($100,000); In re Modafinil Antitrust Litig., No. 2:06-cv-01797 (MSG), ECF No. 870 at ¶ 30 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 15, 2015) ($100,000 to certain representatives); Neurontin, No. 02-1830 (FSH), ECF No. 114 at ¶ 31 (D.N.J. Aug. 6, 2014) ($100,000). The amount requested here also reflects that this case was not settled until trial. Both named representatives prepared for trial, with J. Mark Bover, on behalf of Value Drug, traveling to Chicago and testifying at trial on behalf of the Class. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 77. Employees of both Class representatives sat for extensive pretrial depositions, produced thousands of pages of documents and several sets of purchase and chargeback data, and spent hours consulting with Class counsel and staying apprised of the litigation. Id. at ¶¶ 74-78.

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above and in the Declaration of Bruce E. Gerstein, Class counsel respectfully request that this Court enter an Order awarding Class counsel fees in the amount of $50,528,470.66, i.e., 36% of the net settlement amount (including a pro rata share of the accrued interest), and reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $4,343,137.06. Class counsel also respectfully request that this Court approve service awards of $150,000 to each of the class representatives for their efforts on behalf of the Class.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN RE FLONASE ANTITRUST LITIGATION THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: Direct Purchaser Actions	Case No. 08-cv-3149 (Direct) Hon. Anita B. Brody

JUNE 14, 2013 ANITA B. BRODY, J.

MEMORANDUM

Following nearly five years of antitrust class action litigation between the makers of branded Flonase nasal spray, the makers of a generic brand version, indirect purchasers of the drug, and direct purchasers, the parties reached a global settlement in January 2013. Before me now is the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' ("DPs") Corrected Motion for Approval of Settlement (Doc. 488) and Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Payment of Incentive Awards to the Representative Plaintiffs (Doc. 486). After holding a fairness hearing on June 3, 203 and reviewing the Plaintiffs' submissions, I now approve the final settlement agreement and allocation plan. I will also grant counsel's request for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses, and incentive awards for class representative, although I will modify the incentive payment awarded.

I. BACKGROUND

Named plaintiffs American Sales Company, Inc., Meijer, Inc., and Meijer Distribution, Inc. brought this suit on behalf of a class of 33 companies that purchase medications directly from the manufacturer—in this case, purchasers of Flonase, the brand-name version of fluticasone propionate ("FP"), a nasal corticosteroid used to treat nasal inflammation caused by allergies. The suit claimed that Defendant SmithKline Beecham Corporation d/b/a GlaxoSmithKline PLC ("GSK") improperly delayed the entry of generic FP, resulting in overcharges to the direct purchasers. Plaintiffs allege that this allowed GSK to unlawfully maintain monopoly power in the American FP market; maintain the price of Flonase at above-competitive levels; and overcharge the direct purchasers millions of dollars by blocking unrestricted competition and access to less expensive generic versions of FP.

This case has an extensive litigation history. American Sales filed the first complaint against GSK for its anticompetitive behavior in 2008.[1] Extensive discovery began in late 2008 and continued through mid-2010, including 30 depositions of current and former employees of GSK and Roxane Laboratories ("Roxane"), the maker of generic FP. Over a dozen expert reports and rebuttals were submitted. After oral argument, I certified a class of 33 direct purchasers of Flonase on November 12, 2010. See American Sales Company, Inc. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 274 F.R.D. 127 (E.D. Pa. 2010).[2] In 2011, I denied two separate GSK motions for summary judgment, one on causation, and one on Noerr-Pennington immunity. See 798 F.Supp.2d 619 (E.D. Pa. 2011) and 795 F.Supp.2d 300 (E.D. Pa. 2011), respectively. The case was set for trial in early 2013, and both sides submitted over a dozen motions in limine. With the court's assistance, the parties reached a settlement agreement in November 2012, whereby GSK agreed to pay $150 million in exchange for the settlement of all direct purchaser claims. I preliminarily approved the settlement on January 14, 2013.

II. FINAL APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENT

[1] Related cases were also filed by indirect purchasers of the drug (No. 08-3301) and Roxane Laboraties ("Roxane") (No. 09-1638), the maker of a generic competitor to Flonase.
[2] After notice went out, there was not a single objector or exclusion from the class certification.

According to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(e), "The claims, issues, or defenses of a certified class may be settled, voluntarily dismissed, or compromised only with the court's approval." In other words, "a class action cannot be settled without the approval of the court and a determination that the proposed settlement is 'fair, reasonable and adequate.' " In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 316 (3d Cir.1998) (quoting In re G.M. Corp. Pick–Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 785 (3d Cir.1995)).

The Third Circuit applies a nine prong test, known as the Girsh factors, when determining the fairness, adequacy, and reasonableness of a proposed class action settlement:

> (1) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir.1975) (internal quotation marks and ellipses omitted). In more recent decisions, the Third Circuit has suggested an expansion of the nine-prong test when appropriate to include what are now referred to as Prudential considerations, such as:

> the maturity of the underlying substantive issues, as measured by experience in adjudicating individual actions, the development of scientific knowledge, the extent of discovery on the merits, and other facts that bear on the ability to assess the probable outcome of a trial on the merits of liability and individual damages; the existence and probable outcome of claims by other classes and subclasses; the comparison between the results achieved by the settlement for *335 individual class or subclass members and the results achieved-or likely to be achieved-for > other claimants; whether class or subclass members are accorded the right to opt out of the settlement; whether any provisions for attorneys' fees are reasonable; and whether the procedure for processing individual claims under the settlement is fair and reasonable.

In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 323; see also In re Pet Food Prods. Liab. Litig., 629 F.3d 333, 350 (3d Cir.2010). District courts "must make findings as to each of the Girsh factors, and the Prudential factors where appropriate," and "cannot substitute the parties' assurances or conclusory statements for [their] independent analysis of the settlement terms." In re Pet Food. 629 F.3d at 350–51.

Here, the Girsh factors and relevant Prudential considerations weigh in favor of settlement approval.

A. The Complexity, Expense, and Likely Duration of the Litigation

This suit involves highly complex antitrust issues, FDA bioequivalence standards for suspension nasal spray products, pharmaceutical manufacturing and supply issues, and pharmaceutical regulatory issues, all of which were investigated and litigated for more than four years. Antitrust class actions are particularly complex to litigate and therefore quite expensive. See In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569, at *14 (E.D.Pa. Jan. 3, 2009) ("This litigation, like most antitrust cases, has been exceedingly complex, expensive, and lengthy.") (emphasis added). " 'An antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute. . . .' " In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 296 F.Supp.2d 568, 577 (E.D.Pa.2003) (quoting In re Motorsports Merchandise Antitrust Litig., 112 F.Supp.2d 1329, 1337 (N.D.Ga.2000)). The DPs and GSK reached this settlement after they had completed significant preparation for trial, including litigating Daubert challenges, identifying hundreds of trial exhibits, and briefing over a dozen motions in limine between them. The settlement avoided the need for a difficult and expensive multi-week trial involving complex scientific and regulatory testimony, and the time and expense associated with the appeal that would likely have followed a verdict. This factor strongly supports settlement.

B. The Reaction of the Class to the Settlement

All 33 class members received direct notice, via first-class mail, of the class settlement. There has not been a single objection. Moreover, two of the three largest pharmaceutical distributors in the country—class members whose claims collectively represent the majority of the total recovery—have submitted letters affirmatively supporting the settlement. This factor overwhelmingly supports settlement approval.

C. The Stage of the Proceedings and the Amount of Discovery Completed

These proceedings advanced to a sufficiently late stage prior to settlement that the related Girsh and Prudential factors also weigh in favor of approval. Explaining the rationale behind the third Girsh factor, the Third Circuit wrote in Prudential:

> The parties must have an "adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating." To ensure that a proposed settlement is the product of informed negotiations, there should be an inquiry into the type and amount of discovery the parties have undertaken.

In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 319 (quoting In re G.M., 55 F.3d at 813). Further, "courts generally recognize that a proposed class action settlement is presumptively valid where . . . the parties engaged in arm's length negotiations after meaningful discovery." Cullen v. Whitman Med Corp., 197 F.R.D. 136, 144-45 (E.D. Pa. 2000).

This factor also weighs strongly in favor of approval of the settlement agreement. This case was very advanced by the time the agreement was reached. Fact discovery concluded in February 2010 and included 45 depositions and millions of pages of documents. Expert discovery concluded in September 2010 and included the exchange of numerous expert reports. The parties briefed two separate motions for summary judgment. The Court heard Daubert motions concerning experts on both sides on two separate occasions. By the time the agreement was reached, the parties had exchanged trial witness lists, conferred on trial exhibits and deposition testimony to be used at trial, and submitted pretrial memoranda. Trial was just two months away when the parties reached their agreement.

D. The Risks of Establishing Liability and Damages.

These two Girsh factors are closely related, so I will address them together. This case involved complex scientific, regulatory, and legal issues, and plaintiffs faced many obstacles to success at trial. Among other things the Plaintiff would have to prove were two particularly difficult propositions: First, they would have had to prove that GSK's petitions to the FDA regarding generic FP were objectively baseless and that GSK could not have reasonably expected success on the merits of any of its requests to the FDA. Second, and most crucially, Plaintiffs would have had to prove that GKS's petitions to the FDA were a substantial cause of any delay in the approval of Roxane's generic FP, and that, but for GSK's actions, Roxane would have had the manufacturing capability to get its product to market sooner. These difficulties go both to Plaintiffs' case for liability and their case for damages, as they would have had to show that GSK's actions resulted in improper overcharges to the DPs. Given the complexity of these issues, there is no guarantee that a jury would have found GSK liable, or how the jury would have responded to the complicated economic data necessary to show damages. Therefore, these two factors counsel in favor of settlement.

E. The Risks of Maintaining the Class Action Through Trial

Although I already certified the DP class here, class certification is subject to review and modification at any time during the litigation. See Zenith Lab., Inc. v. Carter–Wallace, Inc., 530 F.2d 508, 512 (3d Cir.1976). However, numerous courts, including the Third Circuit, have certified nearly identical classes of direct purchasers bringing antitrust claims against manufacturers allegedly seeking to delay generic competition in the pharmaceutical industry. See, e.g., In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d 197 (3d Cir. 2012); In re Wellbutrin SR Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig, C.A. No. 05-5525, 2008 WL 1946848 (E.D. Pa. May 2, 2008); Teva Pharms. USA, Inc. v. Abbott Labs, 252 F.R.D. 213 (D. Del. 2008). Because Plaintiffs do not face much risk in maintaining a certified class throughout trial, this factor is neutral.

F. The Ability of the Defendants to Withstand a Greater Judgment

This factor is also neutral. The ability of defendants to withstand a greater judgment generally only comes into play when "a settlement in a given case is less than would ordinarily be awarded but the defendant's financial circumstances do not permit a greater settlement." Reibstein v. Rite Aid Corp., 761 F.Supp.2d 241, 254 (E.D.Pa.2011). That does not appear to be the case. I have not been presented with any evidence indicating that GSK is at risk of insolvency. Regardless, I follow my district court colleagues within the Third Circuit who "regularly find a settlement to be fair even though the defendant has the practical ability to pay greater amounts." Bredbenner v. Liberty Travel, Inc., 2011 WL 1344745, at *15, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38663, at *42 (D.N.J. Apr. 8, 2011) (citing McCoy v. Health Net. Inc., 569 F.Supp.2d 448, 462 (D.N.J.2008); Weber v. Gov't Emples. Ins. Co., 262 F.R.D. 431, 446 (D.N.J.2009)). Therefore, this Girsh factor neither supports nor undercuts the parties' settlement.

G. The Range of Reasonableness of the Settlement Fund in Light of the Best Possible Recovery and All the Attendant Risks of Litigation

Taken together, the final two Girsh factors "test two sides of the same coin: reasonableness in light of the best possible recovery and reasonableness in light of the risks the parties would face if the case went to trial." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 538 (3d Cir. 2004). These factors confirm that the settlement here should be approved. A proposed settlement totaling $150 million cash is reasonable both in absolute terms and in light of the circumstances of this litigation, particularly the risks of establishing liability at trial. Under the settlement, each class member can benefit from the $150 million fund immediately, and avoid the uncertainties and delay inherent in continuing to litigate this complex class action.

In In re G.M. Corp. Pick–Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., the Third Circuit warned "against demanding too large a settlement ... after all, settlement is a compromise, yielding of the highest hopes in exchange for certainty and resolution." 55 F.3d 768, 806 (3d Cir.1995). With that warning in mind, I agree with class counsel and find that the $150,000,000 figure is reasonable. Therefore, this factor weighs in favor of settlement.

H. Prudential Factors

In Prudential, the Third Circuit noted that, "since Girsh was decided in 1975, there has been a sea-change in the nature of class actions," noting that it therefore "may be useful to expand the traditional Girsh factors" to add additional topics for the district courts to take into consideration when reviewing a proposed settlement agreement. In re: Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 148 F.3d 283 (3d Cir.1998). Here, the relevant Prudential factors counsel in favor of approving the settlement. First, as has been explained above, the case was settled only after extensive discovery and trial preparation. The underlying substantive issues were therefore well-developed, supporting approval of the settlement. Second, as to the results achieved for the individual class members compared to those achieved for other claimants, there are no direct purchaser class members who have filed a separate lawsuit against GSK. Therefore, the settlement creates the only award for class members. Third, class members were given the chance to opt out when I originally certified the class in 2010. No class member requested exclusion. While I declined to allow class members an additional opportunity to opt out of the class after receiving notice of the settlement, not a single class member objected to the settlement for any reason, including on the basis that no opt-out right was given. Therefore, the absence of a second opt-out right was of no consequence here. As to attorneys' fees, as I will discuss in the next section, the provisions for attorneys' fees are reasonable. Sixth, the procedure for processing individual claims under the settlement is fair and reasonable. Class members will be provided with information reflecting their qualifying purchases, as reflected in GSK's sales records, and will be advised of their proposed pro rata share of the total purchases. They will have the opportunity to review the information based on their own data. Once all claims have been submitted, payments will be distributed based on each class member's pro rata share of the purchases, so that if one direct purchaser made 10 percent of the purchases, it will receive 10 percent of the settlement fund.

The Girsh factors and the Prudential factors all counsel strongly in favor of approval of the class settlement. I therefore find the settlement to be fair, reasonable, and adequate.

III. ATTORNEYS' FEES AND EXPENSES

Class counsel seeks (i) an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $50 million, or one-third of the $150 million settlement fund (plus interest); (ii) reimbursement for litigation costs and expenses totaling $2,069,433; and (iii) approval of an incentive award to class representatives American Sales and Meijer in the amount of $85,000 and $75,000, respectively. Doc. No. 486.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(h) states: "In a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorneys' fees and nontaxable costs that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement." The proposed settlement agreement states class counsel's intention to seek attorneys' fees of up to 33 1/3 percent of the total settlement fund, along with reimbursement of reasonable costs and expenses incurred, all of which will be paid directly from the settlement fund. Settlement Agreement ¶ 9, Mot. for Preliminary Approval of Settlement Ex. A, Doc. No. 480-2. Nonetheless, "a thorough judicial review of fee applications is required in all class action settlements." In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 333 (quoting In re G.M., 55 F.3d at 819).

Courts generally use one of two methods for assessing attorneys' fee requests: the lodestar method or the percentage-of-recovery method. In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 333. The former is "more commonly applied in statutory fee-shifting cases, and is designed to reward counsel for undertaking socially beneficial litigation in cases where the expected relief has a small enough monetary value that a percentage-of-recovery method would provide inadequate compensation." Id. The latter method, on the other hand, is "generally favored in cases involving a common fund . . . ." Id. Either way, "it is sensible for a court to use a second method of fee approval to cross-check its initial fee calculation." In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig, 396 F.3d 294, 300 (3d Cir. 2005).

A. Applying the Gunter Factors

The settlement agreement at issue here establishes a common fund of $150 million, from which the class members will receive their allocations and the attorneys will receive any award and expense reimbursement. "[I]n the traditional common fund situation ... the district court ... should attempt to establish a percentage fee arrangement agreeable to the Bench and plaintiff's counsel." Report of the Third Circuit Task Force on Court Awarded Attorney Fees, 108 F.R.D. 237, 255 (1985). In order to make that determination, the Third Circuit has identified ten factors for the Bench to consider. These include:

> (1) the size of the fund created and the number of beneficiaries, (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or fees requested by counsel, (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved, (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation, (5) the risk of nonpayment, (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel, (7) the awards in similar cases, (8) the value of benefits attributable to the efforts of class counsel relative to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations, (9) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee arrangement at the time counsel was retained, and (10) any innovative terms of settlement.

In re Diet Drugs Prod. Liab. Litig., 582 F.3d 524, 541 (3d Cir.2009) (citing Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 (3d Cir.2000); In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 336–40). These Gunter/ Prudential factors are not exhaustive, and a district court should consider "'any other factors that are useful and relevant with respect to the particular facts of the case.'" In re Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d at 541 n. 34 (quoting In re AT & T Corp. Sec. Litig., 455 F.3d 160, 166 (3d Cir.2006)).

1. The size of the fund created and the number of beneficiaries

The settlement creates a $150 million settlement fund. Each of the 33 direct purchaser class members will receive a pro rata share based on their purchases of Flonase from the net fund, after attorneys' fees, expenses, and incentive awards, plus accrued interest, are removed. This is a sizeable settlement, and provides immediate and certain payment to the class members. Every dollar of the net fund will be distributed to class members. This factor counsels in favor of approval of the requested fee.

2. The presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or fees requested by counsel

As discussed above, there are no objections by any class members to this settlement. This factor strongly supports approval of the requested fee.

3. The skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved

The Third Circuit has explained that the goal of the percentage fee-award device is to ensure "that competent counsel continue to undertake risky, complex, and novel litigation." Id. at 198. The Cullen court explained that "[t]he single clearest factor reflecting the quality of class counsels' services to the class are the results obtained." Cullen v. Whitman Medical Corp., 197 F.R.D. 136, 149 (E.D. Pa. 2000).

Thomas Sobol of Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLC and Joseph Meltzer of Kessler Topaz Meltzer & Check, LLP were co-lead counsel for the direct purchasers in this case. Both firms have extensive experience in plaintiff-side class action, with particular expertise in delayed generic entry cases. Indeed, counsel for both sides were knowledgeable, tenacious, and highly skillful. As discussed above, the $150 million settlement award represents a substantial amount and clearly demonstrates the value of class counsel's efforts. This factor supports approval of the requested fee.

4. The complexity and duration of the litigation

I have already addressed this matter above in my discussion of the Girsh factors. This factor weighs strongly in favor of the proposed fee.

5. The risk of nonpayment

The risk of nonpayment here was not negligible. As explained above in analyzing the risks of establishing liability under the Girsh analysis, success in this litigation was by no means guaranteed. See In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 304 (finding the "risks of establishing liability" analysis relevant to the assessment of the risk of non-recovery). Even if Plaintiffs had succeeded in proving liability at trial, there is no guarantee they would have recovered damages. See, e.g., U.S. Football League v. National Football League, 644 F.Supp. 1040, 1042 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (noting the jury's award of only $1 in nominal damages to the plaintiffs). Moreover, as a contingent fee case, counsel faced a risk of nonpayment in the event of an unsuccessful trial. This factor supports approval of the requested fee.

6. The amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel

According to their declaration, class counsel spent more than 40,000 hours over the course of more than four years litigating this case. More than 35,000 hours were logged by the two lead counsel firms alone. The record of this litigation also indicates that the time spent by Plaintiffs' counsel was necessary for the successful prosecution of this case, considering both the complexity of the issues and the robust defense mounted by the defendants. This factor weighs in favor of the requested fee.

7. The awards in similar cases

The fee request here is consistent with other direct purchaser class actions involving allegations of overcharges arising from suppressed generic drug competition. Just last year, for example, this court approved a one-third attorneys' fee from one such case with a $37.5 million settlement fund. Final Order and Judgment Approving Settlement at 8, In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litigation, No. 08-2431 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 7, 2012). Indeed, in the last two-and-a-half years, courts in eight direct purchaser antitrust actions approved one-third fees. In re Wellbutrin, id.; Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. v. Braintree Labs., Inc., No. 07-142-SLR (D. Del. May 31, 2012) (awarding fees of one-third of $17.5 million settlement fund); In re Metoprolol Succinate Antiturst Litig., No. 06-52-MPT (D. Del. January 12, 2012); In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-2237 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 28, 2011); In re Wellbutrin SR Antitrust Litig., No. 04-5525 (E.D. Pa. November 21, 2011); Meijer, Inc. v. Abbott Labs., No. 07-05985-CW (N.D. Cal. Aug. 11, 2011); In re Nifedipine Antitrust Litig., No. 03-mc-223-RJL (D.D.C. Jan. 31, 2011); In re Oxycontin Antitrust Litig., No. 04-md-1603-SHS (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 25, 2011).

It is also important to emphasize that every single class member received direct notice of the settlement agreement, including counsel's intention to request a one-third fee, and not a single class member objected. What is more, two of the three largest pharmaceutical distributors in the country, whose claims collectively represent more than half of the total recovery, have expressly indicated their support of the settlement.[3] This factor supports approving the requested fee.

8. The value of benefits attributable to the efforts of class counsel relative to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations

Class counsel was not assisted by a government investigation. In Prudential, the Third Circuit singled this factor out for important consideration by district courts. See In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 338. The appeals court remanded the trial court's fee award for wrongly "credit[ing] class counsel with creating the entire value of the settlement" and overlooking the considerable contributions of a multi-state life insurance task force. Id. Yet this case is more similar to In re AT & T, in which the Third Circuit found that "class counsel was not aided by the efforts of any governmental group, and the entire value of the benefits accruing to class members is properly attributable to the efforts of class counsel." In re AT & T, 455 F.3d at 173. Although other plaintiffs pursued claims against GSK, counsel for the direct purchaser plaintiffs launched the first action and led joint litigation efforts, taking the lead in discovery and development of scientific and FDA experts, significant motion practice, and trial preparation. This factor weighs in favor of the proposed fee.

9. The percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee arrangement at the time counsel was retained

[3] See Corrected Decl. of Co-Lead Counsel Thomas M. Sobol and Joseph H. Meltzer in Support of Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Unopposed Motion for Final Approval of Settlement Ex. B. ("CardinalHealth is satisfied that . . . the proposed attorneys' fee award of one-third of the settlement amount is appropriate in this case"); Ex. C ("McKesson . . . supports class counsel's application for attorneys' fees and reimbursement of costs").

It is extremely difficult to determine what fee would have been negotiated at the outset of the litigation. I can only look to my colleagues who have attempted to apply this factor, even though I recognize that the contingent fee can only be "based on the particular facts and circumstances of the specific litigation under consideration." In re United States Bioscience Sec. Litig., 155 F.R.D. 116, 119 (E.D.Pa.1994). After appointing a Special Master to study the award of attorneys' fees in a class action securities suit, Judge Dalzell approved of the Special Master's recommendation that a thirty percent fee award was an appropriate estimate of what would have been negotiated. See id. (citing Report and Recommendation of Special Master Judge Arlin M. Adams). Judge Katz noted that in private contingency fee cases, "plaintiffs' counsel routinely negotiate agreements providing for between thirty and forty percent of any recovery." In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 194. Of course, Judge Katz was referring to tort matters in particular. In the end, I do "not give great weight to this hypothetical exercise." In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 340. This factor is neutral and will not be considered to count for or against the proposed fee request.

10. Any innovative terms of settlement.

The terms of this settlement are relatively standard. In the absence of any innovative terms, this factor neither weighs in favor nor against the proposed fee request.

11. Summation

I recognize that the Gunter/Prudential factors "'need not be applied in a formulaic way' because each case is different, 'and in certain cases, one factor may outweigh the rest.'" In re AT & T, 455 F.3d at 166 (citing In re Rite Aid. 396 F.3d at 301). In sum, after

"'engag[ing] in a robust assessment [ ] of the fee award reasonableness factors,'" I have determined that eight of the ten Gunter/Prudential factors count in favor, while the remaining two are neutral. Id. (citing In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 302). Therefore, there is overwhelming support for the proposed fee. The lodestar cross-check, moreover, militates in favor of approval.

B. Lodestar

"The lodestar award is calculated by multiplying the number of hours reasonably worked on a client's case by a reasonable hourly billing rate for such services based on the given geographical area, the nature of the services provided, and the experience of the attorneys." In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 305. Once the lodestar is calculated, "[t]he total lodestar estimate is then divided into the proposed fee calculated under the percentage method. The resulting figure represents the lodestar multiplier to compare to multipliers in other cases." Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 14.122 (2004).

1. Number of Hours and Hourly Rates

Class counsel reports that they cumulatively spent more than 41,000 hours litigating this case over the last nearly five years. Seven different firms worked on the Plaintiffs' case, though the vast majority of hours were logged by the two lead counsel firms, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLC and Kessler Topaz Meltzer & Check LLP. At my request, class counsel submitted copies of their time and expense records for in camera review. The nearly five years of work included, among other work, preparing the complaint; conducting extensive discovery including taking 39 depositions of current and former employees of GSK and Roxane; filing for class certification; submitting 13 opening and rebuttal expert reports; opening and defending Daubert challengs; defending two separate motions for summary judgment; and preparing for trial, including filing eight motions in limine and defending against eight motions in limine. The law firms charged different amounts based on their average billable rates and the individual attorney or staff member working on the assignment, with hourly rates ranging from $120 to $795.

Taking the reported hours at the attorneys' current rate reveals a lodestar of $18,616,424. Counsel explained in their briefing that, after reviewing the reported hours, they revised the lodestar downward to delete unnecessary duplication of effort, mis-reported time, and other errors, and came up with a lodestar that "exceeds $16,750,000." Under the revised figure, the average billable rate is $407 per hour.

2. Lodestar Multiplier

"After a court determines the lodestar amount, it may increase or decrease that amount by applying a lodestar multiplier." In re Diet Drugs Prod. Liab. Litig., 582 F.3d 524, 539 (3d Cir.2009) (citing In re Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 305–06). The Third Circuit explained that "multipliers may reflect the risks of non-recovery facing counsel, may serve as an incentive for counsel to undertake socially beneficial litigation, or may reward counsel for extraordinary result. By nature they are discretionary and not susceptible to objective calculation." In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 340. The lodestar multiplier is calculated by dividing the attorneys' fees sought by class counsel ($50,000,000.00) by the total amount of hours class counsel devoted to the litigation times class counsel's hourly rates ($16,750,000). Here, that calculation comes to a multiplier of 2.99, meaning class counsel would receive nearly three times their regular billing rates. The Third Circuit has recognized that "'multiples ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied.'" Cullen v. Whitman Med. Corp., 197 F.R.D. 136, 150 (2000) Brody, J.) (internal quotation omitted). See also In re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 742 (3d Cir.2001) (citing In re Prudential, 148 F.3d at 341). Indeed, courts in this circuit have accepted multipliers much higher than the one here. See, e.g., Meijer, Inc. v. 3M, No. 04-5871, 2006 WL 2382718 at *24 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2006) (approving a percentage fee award that translated to a 4.77 multiplier); Order and Final Judgment Approving Settlement, Awarding Attorneys' Fees and Expenses, Awarding Representative Plaintiff Incentive Awards, Approving Plan of Allocation, and Ordering Dismissal As to All Defendants, In re Tricor Direct Purchaser Antit. Litig., No. 05-340 at 9 (D. Del. Apr. 23, 2009) (approving a one-third fee where lodestar multiplier was 3.93).

Therefore, a multiple of 2.99 is within the generally acceptable range and provides additional support for approving the attorneys' fees request. Thus I will award counsel thirty-three and a third percent of the common fund, for a total of $50,000,000.00, in attorneys' fees.

C. Costs

Class counsel requests reimbursement of $2,069,433 for expenses incurred litigating the case. Two-thirds of this amount reflects fees paid experts, including to pharmaceutical science experts, FDA regulatory specialists, and economic experts, all of whom were integral to the Plaintiffs' prosecution of the case. The next largest category of expenses, what class counsel calls "document management," represents less than ten percent of the total costs. As class counsel notes, they had a strong incentive to conserve their expenses, given that they were incurred with no guarantee of recovery. I find that these expenses were reasonable and proper. Therefore, I will award counsel a reimbursement of these expenses from the settlement fund.

IV. Incentive Awards for Class Representatives

Incentive awards are "not uncommon in class action litigation and particularly where, as here, a common fund has been created for the benefit of the entire class." In re Southern Ohio Correctional Facility, 175 F.R.D. 270, 272 (S.D.Ohio 1997). As a matter of practice, "courts routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation." Id. (citing numerous cases in which incentive awards were granted). I agree with my colleagues who have held that "[r]easonable payments are permissible to compensate named plaintiffs for the expenses they incur during the course of class action litigation." First State Orthopaedics v. Concentra. Inc., 534 F.Supp.2d 500, 524–25 (E.D. Pa.2007) (referencing Nichols v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., No. 00-6222, 2005 WL 950616, at *24 (E.D. Pa. April 22, 2005); Godshall v. Franklin Mint Co., No. 01-6539, 2004 WL 2745890 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 1, 2004,)).

Plaintiffs seek an incentive award for the two class representatives, American Sales and Meijer, in the amount of $85,000 and $75,000, respectively. Though incentive awards are appropriate in this case, the requested amounts are too large. I will award American Sales $50,000 and Meijer $40,000.

These class representatives launched this litigation despite the risk of retaliation inherent in suing a supplier. This risk should be recognized. The class representatives "actively assisted in the preparation and prosecution of the case by collecting and producing records, preparing for and giving depositions and agreeing to participate in what could have been a several-week trial, turning attention away from their daily business." Pls.' Mot. for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Payment of Incentive Awards to the Representative Plaintiffs, Sobol and Meltzer Decl., at ¶ 16. The $10,000 difference in the requested award reflects the fact that American Sales filed the first complaint, and maintained the action for nearly a year before Meijer filed its own action.

Finally, an incentive award of $50,000 and $40,000 is within the range of payments awarded by courts within the Third Circuit in other direct purchaser antitrust litigation. See, e.g., Tricor, No. 05-340 at 11 (D. Del. Apr. 23, 2009) (awarding $50,000 to each of three class representatives); Bradburn Parent Teacher Store, 513 F.Supp.2d 322, 342 (awarding $75,000 to one class representative); McCoy v. Health Net, Inc., 569 F.Supp.2d 448, 480 (awarding $60,000 to each class representative).

V. Plan of Distribution and Proposed Claim Form

When assessing proposed plans of allocation, courts use the same standard for determining whether to approve the settlement itself. Therefore, the proposed plan needs to be fair, reasonable and adequate. In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 248 (3d Cir.2001). "In general, a plan of allocation that reimburses class members based on the type and extent of their injuries is reasonable." I*n re Ikon Office Solutions, Inc. Sec. Litig.*, 194 F.R.D. 166, 184 (E.D.Pa.2000). The plan of distribution, which was submitted with the Plaintiffs' memorandum in support of its motion for preliminary approval of the settlement (Doc. No. 480-1, at Ex. B), meets this standard. Under the plan proposed by Plaintiffs, as revised in their current motion, the claims administrator will mail claim forms to every class member within five days of final approval of the settlement. This form will include calculations made by the settlement administrator of each class member's qualifying Flonase purchases during the class period, based on GKS's sales data. Class members have thirty-five days after final approval to submit their executed claim forms, in which they either accept the administrator's calculations or provide their own Flonase purchase data to support a revised purchase amount. By sixty-five days after final approval, class counsel will submit to the court a motion for distribution of the net settlement fund supported by a declaration of the settlement administrator. Under this plan, each class member receives their pro rata share of the net settlement fund, based on their share of qualifying Flonase purchases.

I find that the proposed plan is fair, reasonable, and adequate, especially as claimants are expected to receive the maximum amount they would have received if they had opted for trial and won. I also find that the proposed claim form is clear, fair, and reasonable.

VI. Conclusion

For the reasons explained above, I will grant Plaintiff's Motion for Final Approval of Settlement and their Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Payment of Incentive Awards to the Representative Plaintiffs.

MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION (FOURTH) § 14.122 16

I. INTRODUCTION

Counsel[1] for the direct purchasers[2] file this memorandum to support the request of an order (i) awarding attorneys' fees in the amount of one-third of the settlement fund of $150 million (plus accrued interest), (ii) reimbursing direct purchaser counsel for litigation costs and expenses incurred through January 2013 in the amount of $2,069,433, and (iii) approving an incentive award to American Sales in the amount of $85,000 and to Meijer in the amount of $75,000. The fee request falls well within the legal standards for an award based on the percentage of fund and is warranted by the efforts and results achieved.

Direct purchaser counsel led this complex action. Direct purchaser counsel reviewed millions of pages of documents, took more than 45 depositions (including three in the United Kingdom), filed over a dozen motions, submitted hundreds of pages of briefing, made many oral arguments, conducted multiple evidentiary hearings, and prepared and designated thousands of trial exhibits. In short, this case was hard fought from the outset and did not settle until after more than four years of litigation and the submission of extensive pretrial memoranda.

Direct purchaser counsel also committed human and financial resources with considerable risk of non-recovery. Direct purchaser counsel expended in excess of 40,000 hours prosecuting the claims. The co-lead firms spent almost $1 million each in out of pocket expenses, and other class counsel contributed other out of pocket payments. Direct purchaser counsel achieved a significant cash settlement of $150 million in the face of litigation that was often hotly contested and always imposed the daunting level of proof demanded by the high hurdle of substantive law set forth in Professional Real Estate.

The effort and results achieved by direct purchaser counsel over the four and one half years of this litigation warrants the one-third fee.

II. BACKGROUND

This is an antitrust class action brought on behalf of direct purchasers of the prescription drug Flonase.

A. Direct purchasers' claims

Direct purchasers allege that GSK, as part of an overarching scheme to delay the introduction of less expensive generic versions of Flonase, unlawfully abused the citizen petition process contained in Section 505(j) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. As a result of its anticompetitive conduct, direct purchasers claim that GSK: (a) unlawfully maintained monopoly power in the market for fluticasone propionate in the United States; (b) maintained the price of Flonase at supra-competitive levels; and (c) overcharged the direct purchasers and members of the direct purchaser class millions of dollars by depriving them of the benefits of unrestricted competition and access to less expensive generic versions of fluticasone propionate.

B. Procedural background

The first complaint filed against GSK for its anticompetitive scheme was in July 2008 by direct purchaser American Sales. The Court held its first of many hearings in the case in September 2008 and issued its first scheduling order in October 2008.

Fact Discovery: Discovery in this case was extensive, including production of millions of documents by GSK, the FDA, Roxane, and three other generic manufacturers of fluticasone propionate. Document discovery began in late 2008 and continued until GSK completed its production in February 2010. Although always cordial, the extent of production of documents and data was a source of considerable negotiation among the parties as well as a source of motion practice. For example, direct purchasers challenged GSK's withholding of hundreds of documents under a claim of attorney-client privilege. That dispute resulted in multiple rounds of briefing with the Court and, ultimately, the appointment of a special master, Edward Mullinix, to sift through GSK's privilege log and withheld documents while conferring with GSK and direct purchase counsel. While document production substantially concluded in February 2010, the direct purchasers review, re-review, and re-re-review of those documents continued through depositions, expert reports, rebuttal expert reports and complete trial preparation. Direct purchaser counsel spent thousands of hours understanding this complex documentary record.

Deposition discovery began in September 2009 and was equally extensive. Fact witness depositions occurred over many months, concluding the end of March, 2010. Deposition of fact witnesses in the case did not conclude until March 31, 2010. In all, direct purchasers took 30 depositions of current and former employees of GSK and Roxane, three of which required travel to the United Kingdom.

Class Certification: Direct purchasers first filed a motion for class certification, and a supporting expert report from their economist, in December 2008. That motion was essentially mooted by the Third Circuit's decision in In Re Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008), requiring that direct purchasers re-file their class motion, along with reports from two separate economic experts, in January 2010. GSK conducted depositions of direct purchaser's class experts in March 2010 and shortly thereafter the parties entered into negotiation of a stipulation on certification of a class of direct purchasers. As a result of those negotiations, on May 17, 2010 the parties entered into a stipulation regarding certification of a litigation class of direct purchasers of Flonase.

Although the parties had stipulated to class, the Court – needing to independently determine that the requirements of Rule 23 were satisfied – held extensive oral argument on the issue of class certification, in October 2010. On November 10, 2010, as modified by a February 9, 2011 Order, the Court certified a class of direct purchasers of Flonase: [3]

> All persons or entities in the United States and its territories who purchased Flonase nasal spray directly from Defendant (or any of its predecessors or affiliates) at any time from May 19, 2004 until March 6, 2006, excluding defendant, its predecessors, officers, directors, management, employees, subsidiaries, parent or affiliates, and government entities or persons.[4]

Expert Discovery: Beginning with initial expert reports filed in May 2010, direct purchasers submitted a total of 13 opening and rebuttal expert reports on the issues of causation, the science of bioequivalence related to nasal sprays, biostatistics, market power and damages. GSK filed a total of 11 opening and rebuttal expert reports in the direct purchaser case. Expert depositions took place in summer and fall of 2010 with direct purchasers taking a total of 7 depositions of GSK's experts while defending their experts in 7 depositions.

Daubert Challenges: The parties submitted an initial round of Daubert motions and briefing in October 2010. At that time direct purchasers challenged the opinions of all four of GSK's experts. GSK filed a Daubert challenge to the direct purchaser's economists' opinion on market power. At the urging of the Court, the parties engaged in significant negotiations over the scope of the challenged opinions and were able to reach agreement on all but one – GSK's FDA expert Mary Pendergast. On April 18, 2012 the Court held an evidentiary hearing on direct purchaser's challenge to Ms. Pendergast's opinion.

In July 2012, GSK sought permission to file a late expert report from former FDA reviewer Kenneth Furnkranz. The direct purchasers objected to the proposed Furnkranz report. The matter was exhaustively briefed both before GSK filed the report and again after it was filed in July 2012. In the meantime, in response to the Court's order allowing Ms. Pendergast's testimony, direct purchasers

[3] In exchange for stipulating to the certification of a direct purchaser class, the direct purchasers agreed not to seek so called "brand to brand" damages, a small portion of overall direct purchaser damages, and to seek only "brand to generic" damages and "generic to generic" damages.

[4] 11/10/2010 Order [Dkt. No. 161] as modified by 2/9/2011 Order [Dkt. No. 215].

sought to introduce the opinion of the former head of the FDA, Dr. David Kessler. GSK filed a Daubert challenge to Dr. Kessler's opinion in July 2012 and, in October 2012, the Court held an evidentiary hearing on GSK's motion. The Court ultimately admitted the opinions of both Mr. Furnkranz and Dr. Kessler. The direct purchasers defended GSK's challenge to Dr. Kessler in an evidentiary hearing in October 2012.

Summary Judgment: In October 2010, GSK filed two separate motions for summary judgment, one on the basis of Noerr-Pennington immunity and one on the issue of causation. The briefing on summary judgment was extensive. Together direct purchasers filed a total of 178 pages of briefing in opposition to GSK's summary judgment motions, including a total of 226 exhibits. GSK filed a total of 210 pages of briefing and submitted a total of 125 exhibits. Co-lead counsel for direct purchasers led the opposition in a full day hearing on the Noerr-Pennington summary judgment motion in April 2011. The Court considered the causation motion based on the party's submissions. The Court denied both motions in their entirety.

Trial Preparation: Given the complexity of the various issues involved in proving direct purchaser's case against GSK, the sheer volume of document and deposition discovery and the expert intensive nature of the evidence to be presented at trial, preparations for trial were extensive.

In June 2012, both sides filed eight separate motions in limine, each covering several related but separate evidentiary issues. The briefing was understandably extensive.

From the millions of pages produced, the direct purchasers considered a combined total of 2192 potential exhibits culled from the millions of pages of discovery, ultimately identifying 834 for trial. GSK identified more than 650 trial exhibits. The parties then conducted multiple all day meet and confer sessions, both in person and by telephone, in an attempt to agree upon a set of trial exhibits and identify and narrow their objections.

Similarly, the task of reviewing and identifying potential trial deposition testimony to be presented to the jury was monumental. It required teams of counsel reviewing the testimony of more than 28 GSK and Roxane employees and review and counter designation of testimony in response to GSK's deposition designations. For several weeks the parties conducted daily phone calls, most lasting 4-5 hours each, to confer on designation objections in an attempt to reach agreement.

In November 2012, the direct purchasers submitted a comprehensive pretrial memorandum, including identification of trial exhibits and deposition designations and provision of a proposed trial plan and jury instructions.

Settlement Negotiations: The settlement negotiations between the direct purchasers and counsel for GSK were professional, arm's-length and unfolded in phases. First, early discussions were unproductive, but counsel for both sides revisited the issue from time to time. Second, at the Court's suggestion, the parties agreed to private mediation before Eric Green, a highly accomplished national mediator. After a full day with a private mediator the parties found themselves at an impasse. Finally, with the Court's assistance, the parties again engaged in negotiations in October 2012 and again in November 2012. On November 7, 2012, (again with the Court's assistance), the parties reached a settlement of all direct purchaser claims in exchange for the payment of $150 million cash by GSK.

III. ARGUMENT

The United States Supreme Court has "recognized consistently that a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." [5] A Court determining the reasonableness of an attorney's fee is guided by the factors set forth in Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 n.1 (3d Cir. 2000) – the length and complexity of the case, the benefit conferred on the class, the skill and efficiency of counsel; the risk of non-recovery, the amount of time devoted to the litigation, and the fees paid in comparable cases. The Third Circuit urges district courts to perform a lodestar cross-check to ensure that application of the percentage method results in a "sensible" recovery.[6]

The direct purchasers' request for a fee of one-third of the $150 million settlement fund is reasonable under these standards. This is a long and complex case. The direct purchaser counsel spent over 40,000 hours of professional time through January 2013. If awarded, the requested fee of one-third of the settlement fund would amount to a multiplier of less than three times the total loadstar, well within the range frequently approved for antitrust litigation.

The direct purchasers' request for reimbursement of expenses, totaling $2,069,433, is also reasonable. These funds were spent out-of-pocket by counsel for the benefit of the class, and are in an amount that is reasonable for a complex, expert-intensive case such as this.

The direct purchasers' request for an incentive award for class representatives American Sales in the amount of $85,000, and for Meijer in the amount of $75,000, is reasonable and consistent. These entities took the risk of serving as class representatives against one of their suppliers and participated actively in the litigation, providing documents and testimony, communicating with and overseeing direct purchaser counsel concerning the progress of the litigation, and consulting on settlement negotiations.

A. The legal standard governing awards of attorneys' fees in class actions

The Third Circuit favors the percentage-of-recovery method of calculating fee awards in common fund cases. It allows courts to reward litigation success and penalize failure.[7] For many years courts in the Third Circuit and elsewhere have employed the percentage-of-the-fund method in pharmaceutical antitrust class actions.[8]

B. The fee requested by direct purchaser counsel is fair and reasonable

Third Circuit courts historically consider the following seven factors when evaluating the reasonableness of a fee request under the percentage-of-recovery method:

> (1) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or fees requested by counsel; (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (5) the risk of nonpayment; (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; and (7) the awards in similar cases.[9]

More recently, the Third Circuit has suggested additional factors for consideration:

> (1) the value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of class counsel as opposed to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations; (2) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee agreement at the time counsel was retained; and (3) any "innovative" terms of settlement.[10]

1. Application of the Gunter factors

- The complexity and duration of the litigation

Complexity and duration of the litigation is "the first factor that a district court can and should consider in awarding fees."[11] This action involved complex antitrust issues, FDA bioequivalence tests and standards for suspension nasal spray products, pharmaceutical manufacturing and supply issues, and pharmaceutical regulatory issues that were investigated and litigated intensely over more than four years. "Antitrust class actions are perhaps the most complex cases to litigate."[12] This is particularly so when the case also demands proof of objective baselessness under the rigorous Noerr-Pennington qualified immunity standard.[13] Direct purchaser counsel:

- Conducted extensive investigation of class claims of antitrust violation and injury;
- Performed detailed analyses of facts and law concerning antitrust, bioequivalence standards, FDA regulatory law, including the Hatch-Waxman Act, and FDA ANDA review policies and procedures;
- Conducted extensive legal research and analysis concerning Noerr-Pennington and P.R.E. standards as they relate to citizen petitions;
- Successfully obtained class certification;
- Negotiated and resolved with GSK's counsel an extensive production of documents and data;
- Litigated discovery motions and negotiated discovery-related stipulations with defendant;
- Pursued discovery from third-parties, such as the FDA and generic fluticasone manufacturers, which necessarily required substantial negotiations regarding the scope of such discovery;

- Reviewed and analyzed millions of pages of documents and data produced by GSK, Roxane, and third-parties;
- Conducted depositions of current and former employees of the defendants and third-parties in the United States and the United Kingdom regarding complex regulatory, pharmaceutical manufacturing, corporate decision-making and financial matters;
- Retained experts in pharmaceutical sciences, FDA law, regulation, and practice biostatistics, and economics, and conducted and defended many expert depositions;
- Submitted 13 expert reports and reply reports.
- Opposed GSK's summary judgment motions, which included hundreds of pages of briefing and factual statements and submission of 226 exhibits;
- Successfully defended experts challenged by GSK under Daubert including extensive briefing and multiple evidentiary hearings;
- Prepared for trial by identifying of over 800 trial exhibits, submitting and briefing 8 motions in limine, opposing GSK's 8 motions in limine,
- Led an extensive meet and confer process concerning trial exhibits and designation and counter designation of 28 trial depositions;
- Prepared and filed an extensive pre-trial memorandum and trial plan;
- Conducted complex and successful settlement discussions that yielded a $150 million cash settlement for the class; and
- Developed and drafted the settlement and class notice documents and will assist in overseeing the notice and claims process to ensure swift and accurate distribution of settlement proceeds to the class.

Co-lead Counsel Decl. ¶6. Direct purchaser counsel will continue to devote time to settlement approval (preparation for the final approval hearing and responding to class member inquiries) and to settlement administration. Id. ¶7. The first, critical factor is soundly met by direct purchaser class counsel.[14]

- The skill and efficiency of counsel

Direct purchaser counsel are skilled in prosecuting complex actions. They have particular expertise in delayed generic entry cases with many having been involved in similar actions for over a decade. They used their knowledge and experience in this specific kind of litigation to obtain a positive result for the class.

The high "quality of opposing counsel" further supports the fee request.[15] GSK presented formidable opposition from its skilled and tenacious counsel, one of the premier law firms in the nation.

- The risk of non-payment

The risk of non-payment in this matter was considerable.[16] In the most closely analogous pharmaceutical antitrust case to proceed to trial to date, one involving allegations of sham citizen petitioning to the FDA, a jury returned a verdict for the defense after a two week trial.[17] "A determination of a fair fee must include consideration of the sometimes undesirable characteristics of a contingent antitrust action[], including the uncertain nature of the fee, the wholly contingent outlay of large out-of-pocket sums by plaintiffs, and the fact that the risk of failure and nonpayment in an antitrust case are extremely high."[18] As Judge Pratter explained, attorneys who undertake the representation of a class are "unable to mitigate any of the risk of nonpayment; instead, they [a]re discovery, retained experts, and filed and defended several complex motions); Bradburn, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 339 (four-year antitrust case involving litigation over class certification and collateral estoppel, expert testimony on both class certification and on the merits, and numerous depositions supported fee request).

[15] Am. Investors, 263 F.R.D. at 244 (where class counsel were skilled in litigating class actions against insurance companies, defendants were represented by a leading law firm, and the case was vigorously litigated by both sides, class counsel's fee request was supported).

[16] The history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability but recovered no or very small damages at trial or after appeal. See, e.g., U.S. Football League v. National Football League, 644 F. Supp. 1040, 1042 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("the jury chose to award plaintiffs only nominal damages, concluding that the USFL had suffered only $1.00 in damages"); MCI Comme'ns Corp. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 116-67 (7th Cir. 1983) (antitrust judgment remanded for new trial and damages); Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 479 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1973) (after two trips to the Second Circuit and one to the Supreme Court, plaintiffs and the proposed class recovered nothing in an antitrust class case).

required to spend or incur obligations to effectively litigate th[e] case."[19] And as Judge Stengel explained in support of awarding class counsel a one-third fee in In re Wellbutrin SR Antitrust Litig., 04-5525 (E.D. Pa., Nov 21, 2011):

> Class Counsel faced numerous risks in preparing and litigating this case, including the risks associated with the motion to dismiss, class certification, summary judgment, and – had the case continued – ultimately proving liability and damages at trial and potentially surviving any appeals. Underlying all of these risks was the enormous one of handling this case for its entire duration on a contingent basis, doing everything necessary to honor Class Counsel's commitment and obligations to the class. . . . The substantial risk of nonpayment that Class Counsel faced throughout this litigation strongly supports their fee request. [20]

And so it is here. Having now recovered a significant settlement for the class in the face of these multiple risks, direct purchaser counsel should be rewarded for their efforts, and their success, on behalf of the class.[21]

- The amount of time devoted to the litigation

Direct purchaser counsel expended over 40,000 hours over the course of almost four and one-half years preparing, litigating, and negotiating the settlement of this case. Their commitment continues, and their lodestar calculation does not account for any future work ensuring the distribution of proceeds.[22]

- The size of the fund and the number of people that benefit

The settlement provides the class with immediate and certain payment. All direct purchaser class members will receive their pro rata share of the net settlement fund, i.e., the settlement fund net of attorneys' fees, expenses, and incentive payments awarded by the Court, plus accrued interest, based on their purchases of Flonase during the class period. This is a good result.

- The reaction of the class

The settlement notice was mailed on February 14, 2013. The deadline to object is not until March 15, 2015. While it is premature to evaluate the class's reaction to the settlement, direct purchaser counsel conferred with both the class representatives and the three largest class members -- AmerisourceBergen Corp., Cardinal Health, Inc., and McKesson Corp. (who together account for the vast majority of the purchases subject to the settlement). Each fully supports the settlement and the requested fee.

- Consistency with fee awards in comparable cases

The requested fee request is consistent with prior practice in other direct purchaser class actions involving allegations of overcharges arising from suppressed generic drug competition. The following table summarizes fifteen cases that support a one-third fee in such matters.

In the past two years, courts in eight direct purchaser antitrust actions approved one-third fees.

2. Application of the Prudential factors

- The value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of direct purchaser counsel, as opposed to the efforts of others

Unlike in some antitrust cases, the commencement of this action did not follow a government lawsuit or investigation. Rather, the development of this case depended entirely on the investigation and efforts of direct purchaser counsel. This factor further supports the fee request.[23] Although other plaintiffs pursued claims against GSK, counsel for direct purchasers commenced the first case and led joint litigation efforts, taking the lead in discovery and development of scientific and FDA experts, significant motion practice and trial preparation.

- The percentage fee that would have been privately negotiated

A one-third contingency is standard in individual litigation, and could be more in an antitrust case, given the complexities and risks.[24]

- Innovative terms

The terms of the settlement, while providing a benefit to the class, are otherwise relatively standard. Therefore, this factor neither supports nor detracts from the fee request.

C. A lodestar cross-check confirms the reasonableness of the fee request

A lodestar cross-check ensures that application of the percentage method results in a recovery that is "sensible."[25] Once the lodestar is calculated, "[t]he total lodestar estimate is then divided into the proposed fee calculated under the percentage method. The resulting figure represents the lodestar multiplier to compare to multipliers in other cases."[26]

[23] AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d 160, 173 (3d Cir. 2006) (that "class counsel was not aided by the efforts of any governmental group, and the entire value of the benefits accruing to class members is properly attributable to the efforts of class counsel . . . strengthens the District Court's conclusion that the fee award was fair and reasonable.")

When attorneys' fees are awarded, the current market rate, not the rate at the time the services were performed, is to be used.[27] In comparable cases, Third Circuit courts have often been presented with, and approved, lodestar multipliers in the 2-4 range, but accepted multipliers have been much higher.[28]

Direct purchaser counsel's lodestar is in excess of $16,750,000. Based on a one-third fee ($50 million), the requested fee is 2.98 times the lodestar. The lodestar cross-check confirms the reasonableness of the fee request.

D. The Court should approve the request for reimbursement of expenses

Direct purchaser counsel advanced necessary litigation expenses with no assurance of repayment. Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to reimbursement of their reasonable litigation expenses from the fund.[29]

Class counsel requests reimbursement of $2,069,433 for expenses incurred litigating the case. The largest component of this amount consists of fees paid to pharmaceutical sciences experts, FDA regulatory specialists, and economic experts who were essential to the prosecution of this case. These expenses, as well as others routinely charged to hourly-fee-paying clients (such as costs for deposition transcripts, computerized research, the creation of an electronic document database, copying, and travel) were reasonable.[30] Given that the expenses here were incurred with no guarantee of recovery, direct purchaser counsel had a strong incentive to conserve, and did so. The expenses were necessarily incurred in obtaining this positive result for the class and should be reimbursed.

E. A modest award to the class representatives is appropriate

Incentive awards may be provided to class representatives as a reward for efforts that benefit the class.[31] In evaluating the appropriateness of an award, courts consider (i) the financial, reputational and personal risks to the plaintiff; (ii) the degree of plaintiffs' litigation responsibilities; (iii) the length of litigation; and (iv) the degree to which the plaintiffs benefitted as class members.[32]

Direct purchaser counsel request that class representative American Sales be granted an incentive award of $85,000 and that Meijer be granted an award of $75,000. These awards are well deserved.

First, the class representatives stepped in despite the risk of retaliation inherent in suing a supplier. Without them, the class would have recovered nothing.

Supp. 2d at 342 ("It is particularly appropriate to compensate named representative plaintiffs with incentive awards when they have actively assisted plaintiffs' counsel in their prosecution of the litigation for the benefit of the class.").

[32] Id.

Second, the class representatives actively assisted in the preparation and prosecution of the case by collecting and producing records, preparing for and giving depositions, and agreeing to participate in what could have been a several-week trial, turning their attention away from their daily business.

Third, the amounts requested are within the acceptable range of payments awarded by courts within the Third Circuit in other direct purchaser antitrust litigation.[33]

The $10,000 differential requested between the award to American Sales and Meijer is meant in recognition of the fact that American Sales filed its complaint, and began prosecuting its claims, almost a full year before Meijer.[34]

IV. CONCLUSION

Direct purchasers respectfully request that the Court approve the attorneys' fee and expense application and enter an order awarding counsel fees of $50,000,000 (plus a proportionate share of the interest thereon through the date of the award) and reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $2,069,433. Co-lead counsel also request that American Sales receive an incentive award of $85,000 and that Meijer receive an incentive award of $75,000 for their efforts on behalf of the class in the prosecution of this action.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is currently before the Court on the plaintiffs' Motion For Award Of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement Of Expenses, And Incentive Awards For Class Representatives. [Doc. 1808]. No party has filed a response to the motion and no class member has objected to the requested fees, expenses, and incentive awards. The Court held a fairness hearing on May 15, 2012, and heard brief argument on the motion. The matter is now ripe for disposition. For the reasons set forth herein, the motion will be GRANTED.

I. Background

This is a multi-district antitrust case involving allegations by the plaintiffs that defendants violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. After nearly five years of contentious litigation, the plaintiffs have entered into settlement agreements with certain of the defendants, [See Doc. 1856]. In short, plaintiffs have negotiated a cash settlement in the amount of $140 million with defendant Dean Foods and a $5 million cash settlement and substantial structural changes with defendants SMA and Baird (collectively referred to as "Settling Defendants"). The Court has now given final approval to the settlements, [Docs. 1889, 1890] and the trial of the matter against the non-settling defendants is currently scheduled to commence in November, 2012. Plaintiffs request an award of $48,333,333.00 in attorney's fees (one-third of the recovery from Settling Defendants), $7,408,920.00 as reimbursement for class counsel's out of pocket expenses and incentive awards for the 15 class representatives in the amount of $10,000.00 each, or $150,000.00 total.

II. Analysis

A. Applicable Law

"In a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees . . . that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h). The Court must ensure "that counsel is fairly compensated for the amount of work done as well as for the results achieved." Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Props., Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 516 (6th Cir. 1993). Courts have broad discretion in determining an award of attorney's fees in class actions. See Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 102 F.3d 777, 779 (6th Cir. 1996); Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516.

One of two methods for calculation of attorney's fees is generally employed in the Sixth Circuit: The lodestar [1] and the percentage-of-the-fund. [2] The district court may "select the more appropriate method for calculating attorney's fees in light of the unique characteristics of class actions in general, and of the unique circumstances of the actual cases before them." Van Horn v. Nationwide Prop. and Cas. Ins. Co., 436 Fed. App'x 496, 2011 WL 3792362, at *1 (6th Cir. Aug. 26, 2011) (quoting Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516). The district court, however, generally must explain its "reasons for adopting a particular methodology and the factors considered in arriving at the fee." Moulton v. U.S. Steel Corp., 581 F.3d 344, 352 (6th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted).

[1] With the lodestar method, the Court multiplies the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation by a reasonable hourly rate. Reed v. Rhodes, 179 F.3d 453, 471 (6th Cir. 1999).

[2] When using the percentage-of-the-fund method, the Court simply determines a percentage of the settlement to award to class counsel. Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516.

This is a common fund case and plaintiffs urge the Court to apply the percentage of the fund method. As a general matter, "[t]he lodestar method better accounts for the amount of work done, while the percentageof the fund method more accurately reflects the results achieved." Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516. It appears that the trend in the Sixth Circuit is "toward adoption of a percentage of the fund method" in common fund cases. Stanley v. United States Steel Company, 2009 WL 4646647 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 8, 2009) (quoting Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 515). "[T]he vast majority of courts of appeal now permit or direct district courts to use the percentage-fee in common-fund cases." Manual For Complex Litigation Fourth ("MCL") § 14.121. "In practice, the lodestar method is difficult to apply, time-consuming to administer, inconsistent in result, and capable of manipulation" and "creates inherent incentive to prolong the litigation." Id. At least one circuit court of appeals has recognized that the percentage method "directly aligns the interests of the class and its counsel and provides a powerful incentive for the efficient prosecution and early resolution of litigation." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir. 2005).

1. Selecting the Method

In the Sixth Circuit, it is within the discretion of the district court to decide which method to use in a given case. Bowling, 102 F.3d at 779; Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516. The percentage-of-the-fund method, however, clearly appears to have become the preferred method in common fund cases. Stanley, supra; see Brian T. Fitzpatrick, An Empirical Study of Class Action Settlements and Their Fee Awards, 7; J. Empirical Legal Stud. 811, 832 (December, 2010).

As noted above, plaintiffs urge the Court to award a percentage of the common fund in this case. Although the Court acknowledges its discretion to use the lodestar method, the Court finds that the percentage-of-the-fund method is the more appropriate method in this case, especially when employed with a lodestar cross-check. Here, a substantial common fund has been established for the benefit of class members through the efforts of class counsel. Given the commitment of time and resources committed by class counsel and the complexity of this litigation, it simply would not have been practicable for individual members of this class to pursue litigation challenging the alleged illegal conduct in this case. Given the clear trend in the Sixth Circuit and the Court's belief that the percentage-of-the-fund method, when employed in connection with a lodestar cross-check, accounts for both the amount of the work done and reflects the results achieved by class counsel, this Court will use the percentage-of-the funds method and a lodestar cross-check. [3] In addition, given the number of hours expended by counsel in this case (approximately 113,000) use of a percentage-of-the-fund method here is much more efficient and less time consuming for the Court to administer.

2. The Reasonableness of the Requested Fee

As noted above, the attorneys' fees requested represent 33.33 percent of the settlement fund. Although the total fee requested is a very large amount, the percentage requested is certainly within the range of fees often awarded in common fund cases, both nationwide and in the Sixth Circuit. Bessey v. Packerland Plainwell, Inc., 2007 WL 3173972, at *4 (W.D. Mich. Oct.

[3] Counsel have provided to the Court summary schedules indicating the number of hours spent by the attorneys involved in this litigation and the lodestar calculation based on historical billing rates. Those schedules were prepared from contemporaneous time records not produced by counsel. Unlike the situation when the Court employs the lodestar method in full, "the hours documented by counsel need not be exhaustively scrutinized by the district court" where a lodestar cross-check is used. In re WorldCom Sec. Litig., 388 F. Supp.2d 319, 355 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (citing Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 50 (2d Cir. 2000)).

26, 2007) (approving an award of 33 percent and noting that "[e]mpirical studies show that . . . fee awards in class actions average around one-third of recovery") (quoting Shaw v. Toshiba America Inf. Sys., Inc. 91 F.Supp.2d 942, 972 (E.D. Tex. 2000)); Worthington v. CDW Corp. 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23100, at *22 (S.D. Ohio May 22, 2006); MCL § 14.121 ("[a]ttorney fees awarded under the percentage method are often between 25% and 30% of the fund."); see also Brian T. Fitzpatrick, Do Class Action Lawyers Make Too Little? 158 U. Pa. L. Rev. 2043, 2063 (2010) ("although the mean and median fee awards in federal court are 25%, there are many awards at the 33% level, ...").

In the Sixth Circuit, several factors have been identified for consideration in determining the reasonableness of the requested fee. These include:

> (1) the value of the benefit rendered to the plaintiff class . . . ; (2) the value of services on an hourly basis; (3) whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis; (4) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others; (5) the complexity of the litigation; and (6) the professional skill and standing of counsel involved on both sides."

Bowling, 102 F.3d at 780. See also Smillie v. Park Chemical Co., 710 F.2d 271, 275 (6th Cir. 1983).

All of the relevant factors here support the requested fee. First, the result obtained by counsel for the plaintiff class is extraordinary and will result in an average cash payment to each class member of approximately $13,000.00. The total settlement fund is approximately one-third of the total damages calculated by plaintiffs' damages expert.[4] In addition, the settlement with Baird and SMA will result in significant structural changes in the way milk is marketed in the future in the Southeast. One part of that relief alone has been estimated by SMA to generate value of approximately $0.10 to $0.12/cwt to Southeast dairy farmers, totaling millions of dollars over the next several years. The value of the settlement to the class is further illustrated by the lack of objection from any class member to the requested fees. Of the roughly 7000 members of the class, only one objected to the settlement, and that objector voiced no objection to the requested fees.

[4] Plaintiffs claim the settlement is likely the largest settlement of any antitrust case litigated in this district. Although the Court has not attempted to confirm the accuracy of that claim, the Court is not aware of any settlement for a larger amount.

Second, there is absolutely no question that counsel has spent a remarkable amount of time preparing and litigating this case–over 113,000 hours of legal work. Counsel spent a year investigating the antitrust allegations, consulting experts and mapping strategy before filing suit. The case has been extensively and vigorously litigated for four years and the settling defendants have aggressively defended the suit. Counsel has reviewed and organized over 5,000,000 pages of documents and multiple motions to compel discovery have been litigated. Over 100 depositions have been conducted, including those of numerous plaintiff and defense experts. The Court's docket entries for the case are approaching 2,000, fully illustrating the extensive nature of the legal work done, from the initial motions to dismiss through the summary judgment stage and extensive litigation of a host of other pretrial motions. Counsel have participated in extensive and lengthy court ordered mediation sessions, as well as settlement discussions with defendants. The quality of the work done by class counsel has been exceptional, not only with respect to the pleadings filed but also the oral advocacy during oral argument on various motions.

Using the lodestar method as a cross-check on the reasonableness of the requested fee likewise supports the award of fees requested. As noted above, counsel spent over 113,000 hours on this case, which, when multiplied by a reasonable hourly rate, results in a lodestar of $46,702,830. The requested fee-- $48,333,333-- represents a lodestar multiplier of only 1.03, minimal when compared to typical lodestar multipliers. See In re Cardinal Health, Inc. Sec. Litig., 528 F. Supp.2d 752, 767 (S.D. Ohio 2007) (typical lodestar in large securities class actions ranges from 1.3 to 4.5); Newberg on Class Action § 14.6 (4th ed. 2009) ("Multiples ranging from one to four frequently are awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied.").

The complexity of the litigation also supports the requested fees. This Court has observed several times the complexity of the case. Almost every aspect of this case has been hotly contested and litigated extensively and the case presents several somewhat novel issues. The complexity of the case is further illustrated by the number of pages of documents produced, as noted above, a list of potential trial exhibits that numbers in the thousands and literally hundreds of potential witnesses who have been interviewed and/or deposed in preparation for trial. Class counsel, who have extensive experience in complex class action litigation, have efficiently and competently managed their enormous task and have vigorously and effectively prosecuted the case on behalf of the class. They have also been opposed by equally experienced and highly competent counsel for defendants and have achieved an excellent result for their clients.

Furthermore, counsel undertook this case on a contingency-fee basis and accepted a substantial risk of non-payment for legal work and reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses advanced. This Court finds that the fee awarded should fully reflect the risk taken by these lawyers and is a very substantial factor in this case which weighs in favor of the requested fee. Not only did counsel risk not being paid for more than $46 million in legal work, they also ran the risk of losing nearly $7.5 million in out-of-pocket expenses. If counsel are not rewarded for this risk, few attorneys will undertake "the representation of a class client given the investment of substantial time, effort, and money, especially in light of the risks of recovering nothing." Behrens v. Wometco Enter., Inc., 118 F.R.D. 534, 548 (S.D. Fla. 1988).

Finally, failing to fully compensate class counsel for the excellent work done and the various substantial risks taken would undermine society's interest in the private litigation of antitrust cases. Society's interests are clearly furthered by the private prosecution of civil cases which further important public policy goals, such as vigorous competition by marketplace competitors. See Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983) ("This court has emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes, including the federal antitrust laws.").

Simply put, anti-competitive conduct such as that alleged in this case would likely go unchallenged absent the willingness of attorneys to undertake the risks associated with such expensive and complex litigation. No single class member could have undertaken the litigation prosecuted here on his own. The sheer size of the outlay for out-of-pocket expenses by class counsel illustrates the reason why. Awards of substantial attorney's fees in cases like this are necessary to incentivize attorneys to shoulder the risk of nonpayment to expose violations of the law and to achieve compensation for injured parties.

One final issue should be addressed. Some studies have identified the size of the underlying class action settlement as the factor with the most influence on the fee and have found an inverse relationship between fee percentage and size of the settlement fund. See Fitzpatrick, Do Class Action Lawyers Make too Little?, at 2055 (citing Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey P. Miller, Attorney Fees In Class Action Settlements: An Empirical Study, 1 J. Empirical Legal Stud. 27, 35-36 (2004)). Indeed, it is fairly widely recognized that lower percentages are appropriate in cases in which large settlements serve as the basis for calculating a percentage. MCL, § 14.121 (citing In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Amer. Sales Practices Litig. 148 F.3d 283, 339-40 (3d Cir. 1998) (remanding award of 6.7% of common fund for further consideration "in light of the magnitude of the recovery")). In cases involving settlements exceeding 100,000,000, fee percentages have ranged from 4.1% to 17.92%. Id.

This Court finds, however, that such an inverse approach would not be appropriate in this case for several reasons. First, the Court has not found any Sixth Circuit case endorsing such an approach. Second, a declining percentage-of-the fund based on the size of the settlement "can create an incentive to settle quickly and cheaply when the returns to effort are highest" and discourage counsel from "investing additional time and maximizing plaintiffs' recovery." In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 197 F.R.D. 71, 80 (S.D. N.Y. 2000). In addition, the Court sees no good reason why class action lawyers who represent clients on a contingency-fee basis in a case such as this should receive lower fees on a percentage basis than due contingency-fee lawyers in litigation representing individual clients, which typically amount to 33% or more of the recovery. Lastly, such an approach would penalize these class action attorneys given the actual number of hours spent on the case, rather than compensate them fairly. In other words, the requested fees do not result in a windfall for class counsel.

After consideration of all these factors and the entire and lengthy record of this complex litigation, the Court concludes that, although the requested fee is a very, very substantial amount, it is fair and reasonable under the circumstances. Accordingly, the Court will approve the requested fees in the amount of thirty-three and one-third percent (33 1/3%) of the common fund, i.e. $48,333,333.00[5] and will authorize lead counsel to allocate fees to specific firms.[6]

[5] The Dean settlement is to be paid over four years. Plaintiffs do not propose to take all of their fees up front but rather the fees will be paid proportionally as Dean's payments are made to the settlement fund.

[6] The Court, of course, retains jurisdiction to resolve any fee disputes which may arise.

B. Reimbursement of Expenses

In addition to their petition for attorney's fees, class counsel seek reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses incurred during the representation of the class in the amount of $7,408,920.39. "Expense awards are customary when litigants have created a common settlement fund for the benefit of a class." See In re F & M Distributors, Inc., 19 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *19 (E.D. Mich. June 29, 1999). Based upon the Court's review of the various affidavits submitted by class counsel, it appears that the requested expenses are the type typically billed by attorneys to paying clients in similar cases, see In re Synthroid Marketing Litig., 264 F.3d 712, 722 (7th Cir. 2001), and are fair and reasonable under the circumstances of this case. A large percentage of the expenses consist of fees paid to experts who were crucial to the prosecution of the case, travel to depositions, hearings, and meetings with witnesses, experts and class representatives, and payments to court reporters for depositions, computerized research, copying costs, and delivery charges. Although the affidavits submitted by class counsel are not itemizations of all of the expenses incurred but rather an aggregate listing of the expenses for each category, the Court finds the affidavits submitted sufficiently detailed and the Court is persuaded that the expenses are legitimate and are reasonable in the case and will approve payment to class counsel from the common settlement fund in the amount of $7,408,920.39 as reimbursement for their out-of-pocket expenses.

C. Incentive Awards to Class Representatives

Plaintiffs request that the Court approve incentive awards for the fifteen (15) class representatives in the amount of $10,000 each. "Such awards are discretionary and are intended to compensate class representatives for work done on behalf of the class, to make up for financial or reputational risk undertaken in bringing the action, and, sometimes, to recognize their willingness to act as a private attorney general." Rodriguez v. West Publ'g. Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 958-59 (9th Cir. 2009) (citations omitted). Based on this Court's knowledge of these lengthy proceedings, it appears that the class representatives have had extensive involvement in this litigation and deserve compensation above and beyond the amounts they will be entitled to by virtue of class membership alone.[7] They have been crucial in the preparation of the case and the requested incentive awards are reasonable in light of other incentive awards approved by courts in this circuit. See Hainey v. Parrott, 2007 WL 3308027 at * 5 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 6, 2007) (approving $50,000 incentive awards); Worthington, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32100, at *24 (approving $10,000 incentive awards); In re F&M Distributors, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at * 20-21 (approving $2,500 incentive awards).

III. Conclusion

For all the foregoing reasons, plaintiffs' motion for award of attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses, and incentive awards for class representatives, [Doc. 1808], will be GRANTED and the Court will award $48,333,333 in attorneys' fees, reimbursement for out-of-pocket expenses in the amount of $7,408,920.39, and$10,000.00 as an incentive award to each of the class representatives.

So ordered.

[7] No affidavits or other documentation have been submitted in support of the incentive award request. Class representatives, however, have clearly been extensively involved in the litigation, settlement discussions and court proceedings and have committed substantial time to the case as confirmed by the Court's own observations. See also Declaration of Robert G. Abrams, [Doc. 1809]. ("Class representatives have communicated with class counsel regarding case issues, produced documents and information, been deposed, and prepared for trial.")

Worthington v. CDW Corp.,
2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32100 (S.D. Ohio May 22, 2006) 4, 11, 19

Following four years of intense litigation and over one year of pre-filing investigation, Plaintiffs' counsel, on behalf of the class of Southeast Dairy Farmers, successfully negotiated settlements in the amount of $140,000,000 with Defendant Dean Foods and $5,000,000 and substantial structural changes with Defendants SMA and Baird (collectively, "Settling Defendants"). Plaintiffs believe this is the largest and most substantial antitrust settlement obtained in this District. In accordance with Sixth Circuit guidance, Plaintiffs respectfully request an award of $48,333,333 in attorneys' fees (one-third of the recovery from Settling Defendants) and $7,408,920 as reimbursement for Class Counsel's out-of-pocket expenses.

The requested fee award is consistent with the percentage awards approved by courts in the Sixth Circuit in similar antitrust and complex class action cases, is supported by Class Counsel's actual lodestar (out of pocket costs and fees absent any multiplier), and is strongly supported by the factors considered by the Sixth Circuit for determining the reasonableness of a fee award. Of particular significance are the following considerations:

- Numerous decisions in the Sixth Circuit and other jurisdictions establish that the percentage award requested here, 33.3% of the settlements, plus reimbursement of out-of pocket expenses, is well within the range of awards approved as reasonable in large contingency cases.
- Class Counsel's lodestar in this matter is over $46,000,000, and out-of-pocket expenses of more than $7,000,000 have been incurred. Thus, although courts within the Sixth Circuit support calculation of a reasonable fee using a multiplier of lodestar of over 2 to compensate for risk borne by plaintiffs and other factors, here the requested award is 1.03 of the total lodestar.
- The requested award is particularly appropriate in an antitrust matter such as this because of the complexity of the matter and the critical public policies advanced by private actions to enforce the antitrust laws.

- The requested fee award also is appropriate because of the degree of risk entailed in this litigation. Class Counsel represented the class on a contingency basis, and received no revenue from outside sources. As the Court is well aware, every claim and issue in this case has been vigorously contested by Defendants who are represented by premier law firms – Williams & Connolly (DC), Dechert (DC), Winston & Strawn (Chicago), Andrews Kurth (Dallas), Stinson Morrison Hecker (Kansas City), and Patton Tidwell Schroeder (Texas). There is no doubt that Plaintiffs and their counsel have invested significant time and resources in the prosecution of this litigation.
- Finally, Plaintiffs believe the quality of the representation in this case strongly supports such an award. Plaintiffs achieved settlements with the Settling Defendants, while litigating against able defense counsel represented by major law firms that devoted enormous resources to the defense.

The factual predicate for this fee and expense request are set forth in the accompanying declarations by Class Counsel. See Declaration of Robert G. Abrams, Lead Class Counsel Baker & Hostetler ("Abrams Decl."), and attached supporting Declarations from individual Plaintiffs' firms.[1]

[1] The Petition is supported with the lodestar and expense information for nine firms: Baker & Hostetler LLP/Howrey LLP; Boies Schiller & Flexner LLP; Brewer & Terry P.C.; Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll, PLLC; Fine, Kaplan, & Black R.P.C.; Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC; Hausfeld LLP; Jessee & Jessee; and Whitfield Bryson & Mason LLP.

I. THE REQUESTED AWARD OF FEES IS FAIR AND REASONABLE

A. An Award of Fees Based on a Percentage of the Common Fund Created by the Settlement Is Appropriate

Class Counsel created a benefit for the Settlement Class and are entitled to recover reasonable attorneys' fees. See Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980) ("a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole."); Stanley v. U.S. Steel Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *4 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 8, 2009) ("[W]here counsel's efforts create a substantial common fund for the benefit of [ ] a class, they are entitled to payment from the fund based on a percentage of that fund.").

This award is particularly appropriate here, where Defendants' conduct could not practicably have been challenged without the commitment of significant time and resources by Plaintiffs and Class Counsel. (See 9/7/10 Order, Dkt No. 934 (As this Court recognized: "This litigation is complex, its prosecution costly, and the [class] members with smaller damages claims likely have fewer resources with which to fund individual litigation.")) Defendants vigorously defended – and non-settling Defendants continue to defend – the case and had great resources at their disposal, requiring Class Counsel to devote immense amounts of time and resources on a contingency basis and at a significant risk.

In awarding fees paid out of a common fund, the Sixth Circuit "trend[s] towards adoption of a percentage of the fund method in cases," Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *4 (quoting Rawlings v. Prudential-Bach Props. Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 515 (6th Cir. 1993)),[2] although the Court has the discretion to apply either the percentage of the fund or lodestar method[s] in determining the appropriate amount of the award, Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *3-4; In re Sulzer Ortho. Inc., 398 F.3d 778, 780 (6th Cir. 2005) ("[I]t is within the district court's discretion to determine the appropriate method for calculating attorney's fees in light of the unique characteristics of class actions in general, and of the unique circumstances of the actual cases before it") (quoting Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516-17). When courts employ the percentage of the fund method, the lodestar may still be useful to cross-check the reasonableness of the percentage. Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *9-10 (citing Manual for Complex Litig. (Third) § 14.121, n.504 (1995)); Cardinal Health, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 767 (performing a lodestar cross-check). Under either method, the fees requested here are appropriate. Plaintiffs accordingly seek fees based on a percentage of the common fund, with a lodestar cross-check.

B. Application of the Sixth Circuit's Test for Reasonableness Strongly Supports the Requested Award

Plaintiffs' requested fee of 33.3% of the settlement fund falls well within the 20-50% range of fees awarded in the Sixth Circuit on a percentage basis in complex common fund cases. See Worthington v. CDW Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32100, at *22 (S.D. Ohio May 22, 2006) ("[C]ounsel's requested percentage of 38 and one-third of the total gross settlement is solidly within the typical 20 to 50 percent range."); Rotuna, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58912, at *23 ("one-third of the total award[] is . . . reasonable"); Bessey v. Packerland Plainwell, Inc., 2007 WL 3173972, at *4 (W.D. Mich. Oct. 26, 2007) (approving award of approximately 33% and noting that "[e]mpirical studies show that . . . fee awards in class actions average around one-third of the fund method is also advantageous because it "establish[es] reasonable expectations on the part of class counsel as to their expected recovery and encourag[es] early settlement before substantial fees and expenses have accumulated." Rotuna v. West Customer Mgm't Group, LLC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58912, at *20 (N.D. Ohio June 15, 2010). In addition, the percentage of the fund approach "more accurately reflects the results achieved." Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516.

recovery") (internal quotations omitted); In re Sulzer Ortho., Inc., 398 F.3d at 779, 782 (affirming award of "thirty-two per cent of the settlement fund"); Kogan v. AIMCO Fox Chase, L.P., 193 F.R.D. 496, 505 (E.D. Mich. 2000) (awarding approximately 31%); In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., Case No. 99-md-1278 (E.D. Mich. Nov. 26, 2002) (unreported, Edmunds, J.) (awarding 30% of settlement to counsel for "Sherman Act Plaintiffs")[3]; In re F&M Distrib., Inc. Sec. Litig., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *10 (E.D. Mich. June 29, 1999) ("the excellent performance of the attorneys merits an award of thirty percent of the settlement fund"); In re Foundry Resins Antitrust Litig., Case No. 2:04-md-1638 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 31, 2008) (unreported, Frost, J.) (awarding approximately 30%).[4]

Plaintiffs' requested fee is fair and reasonable compensation for Class Counsel's efforts in light of the following factors considered by the Sixth Circuit: (1) "the value of the benefit rendered to the plaintiff class"; (2) "the value of the services on an hourly basis"; (3) "the complexity of the litigation"; (4) "whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis"; (5) "the professional skill and standing of counsel involved on both sides"; and (6) "society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others." Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 102 F.3d 777, 780 (6th Cir. 1996); see also Kogan, 193 F.R.D. at 503 (laying out factors).

1. Class Counsel Secured a Valuable Benefit for the Class

A recovery of $145,000,000 from three Defendants is a significant success and of substantial benefit to the class. This settlement is likely the largest settlement of any antitrust case litigated in this District. Each class member will be eligible to receive proportional shares of the settlement based on the volume of milk within the class, estimated to be, on average, $13,000 per class member. (2/14/12 Order, at Ex. A ¶ 15, Dkt No. 1782-1.) In addition, $145,000,000 is approximately one-third of the total damages calculated by Plaintiffs' expert as of August 2011. (See, e.g., Supp. Rpt. of Rausser, 9.) It is unquestionable that this monetary recovery is of substantial benefit to the class. See Lazy Oil Co. v. Witco Corp., 95 F. Supp. 2d 290, 339 (W.D. Pa. 1997) ("[C]ourts have determined that a settlement can be approved even if the benefits amount to a small percentage of the recovery sought . . . . '[T]here is no reason . . . why a satisfactory settlement could not amount to a hundredth or even a thousandth part of a single percent of the potential recovery.'") (quoting Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 455 n.2 (2d Cir. 1974)).

[3] This unreported decision (hereafter "Cardizem (unreported)") is attached hereto as Exhibit A.

In addition, the settlement with SMA and Baird includes valuable and significant structural changes to the manner in which SMA is operated and managed, the way in which milk is marketed in the Southeast, and how SMA interacts with Southeast dairy farmers. (SMA/Baird Settlement Agmt, Dkt No. 1678-1.) First, SMA will undergo a broad annual audit of its activities conducted by an independent auditor, the results of which shall be made available to SMA's Board of Directors and the managers of SMA's member cooperatives. (Id., ¶ 7.3.) Second, SMA will use its best efforts to increase Class I utilization percentages in Federal Orders 5 and 7 by reducing milk supply commitments to certain manufacturing plants within those Orders. SMA estimates that this change alone may generate value to Southeast dairy farmers of approximately $0.10 to $0.12/cwt of milk – which could amount to millions of dollars per year of benefits to members of the class. (Id., ¶ 7.4.) Third, SMA and Baird also will maintain, for at least three years, a production incentive program for the dairy farmer members of SMA's cooperatives in Orders 5 and 7 designed to increase prices paid to these farmers for the purpose of increasing their local production of milk. (Id., ¶ 7.5.) Fourth, SMA will change the procedures for the election of its board of directors, implement term limits for most directors, and disclose potential and actual conflicts of interest. (Id., ¶ 7.6.) Fifth, SMA will no longer handle, pool or otherwise be involved with milk marketed by DMS for independent farmers. (Id., ¶ 7.8.) Sixth, SMA and Baird will terminate without cause the management agreement between SMA's member cooperatives and VFC Management, LLC (Baird's management company), and a competitive bidding process will be implemented for the selection of SMA's General Manager. (Id., ¶ 7.6.) Seventh, SMA and Baird will establish a Dispute Resolution Committee consisting of three independent parties authorized to hear and resolve complaints and disputes over SMA and Baird's compliance with certain provisions of the Settlement Agreement. (Id., ¶ 7.7.) This important structural relief, which would not have been undertaken absent this litigation, will provide significant long-term economic benefits to all Southeast dairy farmers in addition to the $145,000,000 cash payments. Achieving this substantial benefit for thousands of dairy farmers similarly supports Class Counsel's fee request here. See In re Visa Check/ Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 297 F. Supp. 2d 503, 524 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (considering the injunctive relief awarded in determining an appropriate fee award).

2. Class Counsel Expended Significant Time and Labor

Final approval of the settlements with Dean, SMA, and Baird will represent a benefit obtained from over 113,000 hours of legal work. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.) This matter involves very complex issues, which where vigorously litigated by all nine Defendants. Unquestionably, Class Counsel's efforts in this case have been extensive. Class Counsel began prosecuting this case over four years ago, after a one-year investigation of the dairy industry in the Southeast. The formidable defense began shortly after the complaints were filed, when Class Counsel (and separate counsel prior to consolidation) responded to numerous motions to dismiss. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 4.)

During discovery, Class Counsel reviewed, analyzed, and organized for use over 5,000,000 pages of documents produced by Defendants, in addition to the over 95,000 pages produced by third parties. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 5.) Obtaining these documents from Defendants and third parties required hundreds of hours of Class Counsel's time participating in meet and confer sessions and exchanging dozens of letters, in an effort to resolve discovery issues without Court intervention. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 5.) While disputes were sometimes resolved informally, the parties were often unable to reach agreement, forcing Plaintiffs to file seventeen motions to compel and other discovery motions. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 6.) Many of these motions were subject to another round of briefing after both sides moved to reconsider or appeal Magistrate Judge Inman's decisions, and sometimes decisions of this Court. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 6.) In addition, Named Plaintiffs produced over ten thousand pages of documents, (Abrams Decl., ¶ 5), and opposed several discovery motions filed by Defendants. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 6.) Class Counsel and Plaintiffs also produced hundreds of pages of interrogatory responses. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 5.)

During discovery, Class Counsel took 80 depositions of fact witnesses, and defended or otherwise attended 30 depositions taken by Defendants. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 5.) Plaintiffs also conducted extensive expert discovery. In the class certification phase of the case, Class Counsel consulted extensively with John Beyer, Plaintiffs' expert, and deposed Defendant's class expert, Catherine Morrison-Paul. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 7.) Towards the end of discovery and throughout trial preparation, Class Counsel frequently consulted with its two experts, Frank Scott and Gordon Rausser. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 7.) In addition, Class Counsel deposed Defendants' five experts (Kalt, Elzinga, Peterson, Ortego, and Herbein). (Abrams Decl., ¶ 7.) Class Counsel also filed three Daubert motions to exclude Defendants' experts, and opposed Defendants' five motions to exclude Professors Scott and Rausser. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 7.)

Class Counsel filed extensive briefs and evidence in support of class certification and responded to Defendants' six motions for summary judgment and voluminous statements of fact.[5] (Abrams Decl., ¶ 7.) Class Counsel also performed significant work in oppositions to Defendants' Rule 23(f) Petition for Leave to Appeal as well as several motions to decertify the class. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 7.)

Class Counsel's ability to prosecute this case was further complicated by the robust protection afforded by the Protective Order. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 8.) Defendants designated significant parts of their document productions and almost all deposition transcripts as "Confidential" or "Highly Confidential." (Abrams Decl., ¶ 8.) These designations prohibited Class Counsel from filing many of its briefs and supporting evidence on the public record. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 8.) Plaintiffs filed multiple motions requesting the Court modify the Protective Order, and were also required to follow the sealing procedures put in place by the Court. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 8.) Accordingly, for many of Plaintiffs' filings, Class Counsel would: (1) file a brief and exhibits under seal, which required multiple hard copies and a CD hand delivered to the Court; (2) confer with Defendants and third parties about the materials contained in the briefs to determine whether information must remain sealed; (3) file a redacted version of the brief and exhibits, redacting all purported "Confidential" and "Highly Confidential" information; and (4) draft responses to Defendants' objections to unsealing the information.

[5]Although the Court granted in part summary judgment on Counts 2-4, it should be noted that Defendants understood that Plaintiffs' claims remained essentially unaltered as the case proceeded to trial. (Exhibit C, 7/18/11 NE Milk Hearing Tr., 61 ("MR. FRIEDMAN: [In the Southeast case], [m]otions for Summary Judgment briefed, argued, decided. Three counts were dismissed . . . but two counts survived. And those two counts . . . frankly, are sufficiently large enough to encompass everything that the plaintiffs in Tennessee were complaining about."))

(Abrams Decl., ¶ 8.) Complying with this procedure required a significant amount of time and resources by Class Counsel. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 8.)

As trial approached, Class Counsel prepared pretrial submissions including over 1,000 exhibits and hundreds of deposition designations, and identified dozens of potential witnesses. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 9.) Class Counsel filed 18 motions in limine, and opposed Defendants' 57 motions in limine. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 9.) Plaintiffs and Class Counsel were prepared to commence the 6-7 week trial when the trial was postponed in August 2011. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 9.) In a very real sense, settlements with Dean, SMA, and Baird did not occur until the parties were on the Courthouse steps.

Finally, Class Counsel participated in many mediation sessions over the past four years. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 10.) Each of these sessions required preparation of materials for the mediator's consideration and took the time of Class Counsel's most senior lawyers. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 10.) Class Counsel also participated in countless settlement meetings and discussions with Dean, SMA, and Baird to secure the settlements.

In total, Class Counsel spent over 113,000 hours prosecuting this case.

Courts in the Sixth Circuit recognize the lodestar method as a check of the reasonableness of the fee calculated as a percentage of the fund. Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *9-10. The great amount of time spent by Class Counsel to achieve these settlements makes clear that the fee requested is supported by the amount of work contributed to the recovery. A lodestar calculation requires the court to multiply the number of hours counsel reasonably expended on the case by their reasonable hourly rate. See Isabel v. City of Memphis, 404 F.3d 404, 415 (6th Cir. 2005). The Sixth Circuit also typically adds on to that number to account for the risk in handling the case on a contingency basis. Id.; see also Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *9. Here, Class Counsel expended over 113,000 hours over the course of the litigation. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.) Simply multiplying historical rates charged by counsel (with no multiplier) results in a lodestar of $46,702,830. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.)

Class Counsel seeks one-third of the settlement amount recovered, ensuring that most of the settlement goes to the dairy farmer class members for whom the benefit was recovered. This amount - $48,333,333 – is equal to a minimal lodestar multiplier of only 1.03, well within the range permitted in this Circuit. See In re Cardinal Health, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 767 (noting that "[m]ost courts agree that the typical lodestar multiplier in a large . . . class action[] ranges from is 1.3 to 4.5"); Worthington, at *19 (range of 1.5 to 5 is appropriate lodestar multiplier); Cardizem (unreported) (approving 30% fee award that equates to lodestar multiplier of 3.7). Notably, in Cardinal Health, counsel and their staff worked 51,970 hours at a "reasonable average hourly billing rate of approximately $353.63" for a total lodestar of $18,378,122.75. 528 F. Supp. 2d at 767. The court approved a $108,000,000 fee award – 18% of the settlement, but almost six times the counsel's lodestar. Id. at 768. The court reasoned that it was "not uncomfortable with deviating from the normal range of lodestar multipliers . . . . [g]iven the outstanding settlement in this case and the noticeable skill of counsel." Id.

3. The Complexity of the Litigation Supports the Requested Award

Antitrust class actions are "arguably the most complex action[s] to prosecute. The legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome." In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 296 F. Supp. 2d 568, 577 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (quoting In re Motorsports Merchandise Antitrust Litig., 112 F. Supp. 2d 1329, 1337 (N.D. Ga. 2000)); see also In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 533 (E.D. Mich. 2003) (observing that "[a]ntitrust class actions are inherently complex"); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 122 (2d Cir. 2005) (affirming district court's [fee award] because, inter alia, "antitrust cases, by their nature, are highly complex"); In re Shopping Carts Antitrust Litig., 1983 WL 1950, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 18, 1983) ("antitrust price fixing actions are generally complex, expensive and lengthy").

In addition to antitrust issues, this case required Class Counsel to become well-versed in the "inner workings of the dairy industry [which] are complicated in the extreme." (12/8/10 Order, Dkt No. 1186.) Class Counsel consulted extensively with Named Plaintiffs, industry and economic experts, and other witnesses to master the complex concepts at issue in this case. The Court repeatedly acknowledged the complexity of this case: "This is an incredibly complex case, involving arcane issues far beyond the understanding of the average juror." (12/8/10 Order, Dkt No. 1193; see also 1/6/09 Tr., at 13, Dkt No. 214 ("THE COURT: I don't think in the years I practiced law I was ever involved in a case that is quite this complicated"); 8/17/10 Order, at 23, Dkt No. 934 ("This litigation is complex."))

The litigation began with six different dockets, all of which were consolidated into one MDL. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 4.) Defendants were located in several different states, requiring substantial coordination and negotiation with defense counsel on scheduling matters – including the dates and locations of over 100 depositions. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 5.) As described in part I.B.2, supra, millions of pages of documents were reviewed, over 100 depositions taken or defended, scores of briefs filed – including multiple motions to dismiss, class certification, summary judgment, and Daubert motions – and nine different expert opinions provided. (Abrams Decl., ¶¶ 4-7.)

The Cardizem court's reasoning for awarding a 30% fee to the Sherman Act plaintiffs is instructive. In that case, the court explained:

> The complexity of this case cannot be overstated. Antitrust class actions are inherently complex. The complexity of this antitrust case was enhanced by additional, highly technical, causation-related issues; i.e., regulatory issues . . . . Despite its complexity, Class Counsel was able to efficiently and effectively prosecute and settle this matter.

Cardizem (unreported), at 20-21. The extensive amount of work and coordination by Class Counsel supports the award here. F&M, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *12 (approving fee award because attorneys had to "survive numerous motions to dismiss," "face[] vigorous opposition to their efforts to obtain class certification," and "manage complex discovery").

4. The Contingent Nature of the Fee and the Financial Risk Carried by Class Counsel

Courts in this Circuit recognize that the risk of the litigation is an important factor to consider when awarding fees. Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS, at *8 ("Numerous cases recognize that the contingent fee risk is an important factor in determining the fee award."). Class Counsel undertook this case on a contingency basis with the expectation that a successful result would be rewarded with a fee to reflect the risk of non-payment. "Lawyers who are to be compensated only in the event of victory expect and are entitled to be paid more when successful than those who are assured of compensation regardless of the result." Jones v. Diamond, 636 F.2d 1364, 1382 (5th Cir. 1981), overruled on other grounds by Int'l Woodworkers of Am. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 790 F.2d 1174 (5th Cir. 1986). "If this 'bonus' methodology did not exist, very few lawyers could take on the representation of a class client given the investment of substantial time, effort, and money, especially in light of the risks of recovering nothing." Behrens v. Wometco Enter., Inc., 118 F.R.D. 534, 548 (S.D. Fla. 1988).

An antitrust case of this complexity and magnitude, in which the defendants have significant resources, experienced counsel, and a track record of litigating rather than settling, posed very significant risks for Plaintiffs. Even though Plaintiffs successfully navigated

Defendants' pretrial challenges over the course of four years (including motions to dismiss, class certification, and summary judgment), and if they succeed in establishing liability at trial, they risk recovering minimal – or no – damages. See, e.g., United States Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 644 F. Supp. 1040, 1042 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (finding liability, but awarding nominal damages). Even if Plaintiffs establish liability and damages at trial, they are still at risk of having the judgment overturned after years of appeal.

This case is no exception to the rule. Here, Class Counsel have invested tens of thousands of hours and advanced many millions of dollars, despite the very real risk of recovering nothing for their efforts. Class Counsel alone have borne the risk of the case being dismissed or of not prevailing at trial. Class Counsel have received no compensation over the course of five years, but have spent over 113,000 hours prosecuting this case, and incurred over $7,000,000 in out-of-pocket-expenses. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.) This risk carried by Class Counsel supports the requested fee award. Kogan, 193 F.R.D. at 504 (factor weighed in favor of fee where "[p]laintiffs' counsel undertook this action on a contingency fee basis and made significant cash outlays to finance it"); Stanley, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *8 (awarding fees because, inter alia, "class counsel worked for over four years without payment, risking recovery of nothing in the event they were to generate no benefit for the class").

5. Skill and Experience of Class Counsel

Class Counsel – and defense counsel – have extensive experience in complex litigation, antitrust litigation, and class actions. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.) The Settlements were reached only after vigorous prosecution of the case and significant arms-length negotiations with highly-competent and experienced opposing counsel. A recovery of $145,000,000 plus substantial and valuable structural relief is a significant success and of enormous benefit to class members, and speaks volumes to Class Counsel's competence, experience, and diligence in obtaining the Settlements. As the Court previously observed, "Class Counsel in this case are experienced in antitrust and class action litigation . . . and they have to date aggressively and vigorously prosecuted this case." (9/7/10 Order, Dkt No. 934.) Class Counsel have been confronted with highly skilled attorneys and have achieved an excellent result for the class in the face of such challenges. F&M, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *19 ("The skill and competence of the attorneys for the plaintiffs was evident, especially when viewed on the basis of the results that they obtained in this case, while the excellent advocacy skills of the defense counsel . . . were equally evident").

6. Society Has an Important Stake in this Lawsuit

It is well-established that there is a "need in making fee awards to encourage attorneys to bring class actions to vindicate public policy (e.g., the antitrust laws) as well as the specific rights of private individuals." In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 84 F.R.D. 245, 260 (N.D. Ill. 1979). Courts in the Sixth Circuit weigh "society's stake in rewarding attorneys who [win favorable outcomes] in order to maintain an incentive to others . . . . Society's stake in rewarding attorneys who can produce such benefits in complex litigation such as in the case at bar counsels in favor of a generous fee . . . . Society also benefits from the prosecution and settlement of private antitrust litigation." In re Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 534 (quoting F&M, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *18).

Further, the Supreme Court has recognized the need for private litigation to enforce the antitrust laws. Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983) ("This Court has emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes, including the federal antitrust laws."). Here, the significant recovery Class Counsel achieved makes clear to the dairy industry, and to other businesses, that collusion will not be tolerated. Society as a whole stands to benefit from the work of Class Counsel.

Fee awards in cases like this incentivize attorneys to act as private attorneys' general to enforce compliance with the antitrust laws and secure relief for injured parties (particularly injured parties challenging anticompetitive conduct by defendants with far greater resources). Awards of attorneys' fees allow and ensure the zealous enforcement of class members' legal rights. Kogan, at 504 (approving 31% fee because "the amount . . . is substantial and therefore, would create an incentive for other attorneys to take on similar cases").

C. The Court Should Authorize Lead Counsel to Determine Allocations to Specific Firms

Class Counsel have collaborated on this litigation under the supervision of Lead Counsel appointed by the Court in this case in accordance with the Court's Case Management Order. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.) Courts generally approve joint fee applications which request a single aggregate fee award with allocations to specific firms determined by lead counsel. In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 WL 1221350, at *17-18 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (approving joint fee petition with specific allocations to be determined by liaison counsel); In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 148 F.R.D. 297, 357 (N.D. Ga. 1993) ("Ideally, allocation is a private matter to be handled among class counsel."). Class Counsel has directed this case from its inception and are "better able to describe the weight and merit of each [counsel's] contribution." Linerboard, 2004 WL 1221350, at *18. Allowing lead counsel to allocate the fee award "relieves the Court of the difficult task of assessing counsels' relative contributions." Id. (internal quotations omitted).

Plaintiffs request the Court approve the aggregate amount of the fee award, and allow Lead Counsel to allocate the fee among the firms representing Plaintiffs, in Lead Counsel's good faith judgment, and consistent with the authority delegated to Lead Counsel by the Case Management Order. The Court would, of course, retain jurisdiction for any disputes that cannot be resolved by counsel over the allocation of the award. See In re Automotive Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litigation, 2008 WL 63269, at *8 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 3, 2008) (holding lead counsel shall allocate the fees, but the court will retain jurisdiction to address any disputes).

II. THE EXPENSES REQUESTED ARE REASONABLE

Plaintiffs request reimbursement of costs incurred in litigating this case and obtaining the settlements through February 29, 2011, in the amount of $7,408,920.39. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 3.) It is well-settled that plaintiffs who have created a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to be reimbursed for their out-of-pocket expenses reasonably incurred in creating the fund. F&M, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *20 ("Expense awards are customary when litigants have created a common settlement fund for the benefit of a class."). The touchstone for reimbursing expenses is whether they are of the type typically billed to paying clients in the similar cases. Cardizem (unreported), at 22.

Here, a large percentage of Class Counsel's out-of-pocket expenses consist of fees paid to experts who were pivotal in helping Plaintiffs to certify the class, defend against summary judgment, prepare for trial, and obtain these settlements. (Abrams Decl., ¶¶ 13-14.) In addition, Class Counsel have had to travel across the country for depositions, hearings, and meetings with witnesses, experts and class representatives. (Abrams Decl., ¶¶ 13-14.) Other expenses include the cost of payments to court reporters for depositions, computerized research, copying costs, and delivery. (Id., ¶¶ 13-14.) These are the types of expenses customarily charged to paying clients. Class Counsel's expenses, detailed in the attached declarations, are reasonable and should be reimbursed in full. Cardizem (unreported) at 22 ("The Court finds that the categories of expenses for which Class Counsel seek reimbursement are the type routinely charged to their hourly fee-paying clients and thus should be reimbursed out of the Settlement Fund.").

III. THE COURT SHOULD APPROVE THE REQUESTED INCENTIVE AWARD TO CLASS REPRESENTATIVES

Plaintiffs request that the Court approve incentive awards for the fifteen class representatives, in the amount of $10,000 each, or $150,000 total.[6] The Notice to the Settlement Class advised class members that Class Counsel would apply for incentive awards for the class representatives. (See 2/14/11 Order, Ex. A, ¶ 20, Dkt No. 1782-1.)

"Incentive awards are fairly typical in class action cases. Such awards are discretionary and are intended to compensate class representatives for work done on behalf of the class, to make up for financial or reputational risk undertaken in bringing the action, and sometimes, to recognize their willingness to act as a private attorney general." Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 958-59 (9th Cir. 2009) (citations omitted). The common fund theory allows courts to award additional compensation to the class representatives for their efforts including investigation, document production, and deposition appearances. Hainey v. Parrott, 2007 WL 3308027, at *5-6 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 6, 2007) (approving incentive awards of $50,000 each for class representatives out of a settlement fund of $6 million); Lonardo v. Travelers Indem. Co., 706 F. Supp. 2d 766, 787 (N.D. Ohio 2010) ("Courts within the Sixth Circuit . . . recognize that, in common fund cases and where the settlement agreement provides for incentive awards, class representatives who have had extensive involvement in a class action litigation deserve compensation above and beyond amounts to which they are entitled to by virtue of class membership alone.").

Throughout this litigation, the class representatives have communicated closely with

Class Counsel, provided documents and information essential to the litigation of this case, submitted to depositions, and assisted with the preparation of this case for settlement and trial. (Abrams Decl., ¶ 15.) The amounts requested by Plaintiffs are reasonable in light of other incentive awards approved by courts in this Circuit. See Hainey, 2007 WL 3308027, at *5 (approving $50,000 incentive awards); Cardizem (unreported) at 23 (approving $20,000 incentive awards); Worthington, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32100, at *24 (approving $10,000 incentive awards); F&M, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, at *20-21 (approving $7500 incentive awards).

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs respectfully request the Court grants its motion and award $48,333,333 in attorneys' fees, reimburse $7,408,920.39 in expenses, and award $150,000 in incentive awards for the class representatives.

ORDER NO. 49

MEMORANDUM OPINION GRANTING SHERMAN ACT CLASS PLAINTIFFS' MOTIONS FOR FINAL APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENT AND PLAN OF ALLOCATION, AND SHERMAN ACT CLASS COUNSEL'S JOINT PETITION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES, REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES, AND INCENTIVE AWARDS FOR NAMED PLAINTIFFS

This matter came before the Court on November 20, 2002 on Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs' motions for (1) final approval of settlement; (2) approval of plan of allocation; and (3) Class Counsel's joint petition for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses and incentive awards for named Plaintiffs. The Court preliminarily approved the Settlement on September 24, 2002. On November 20, 2002, a fairness hearing was conducted. For the reasons stated below, this Court GRANTS Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs' motions.

I. Background

Class Counsel filed class action suits on behalf of Plaintiffs and the Class on November 18, 1998 and February 22, 1999. These suits were consolidated in this Court by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation on June 11, 1999. The Plaintiffs' consolidated actions (the "Class Actions") arise out of Defendants' September 1997 Agreement, pursuant to which Aventis agreed to pay Andrx, inter alia, $10 million per quarter in return for Andrx's agreement not to manufacture and sell its generic version of Cardizem CD. Plaintiffs have alleged that this Agreement kept less expensive generic versions of Cardizem CD off the market, thereby forcing direct purchasers to pay artificially inflated prices for Cardizem CD and its AB-rated generic equivalents.

On December 10, 1999, Class Counsel moved for certification of the Sherman Act Class. After a period of class-related discovery, including expert depositions (and motion practice relating thereto), and briefing on Plaintiffs' motion, the Court conducted an evidentiary hearing and oral argument on class certification. On March 14, 2001, the Court granted Class Counsel's motion allowing the litigation to proceed on a classwide basis and certified a class consisting of:

> all persons (or assignees of such persons) who at any time during the period July 9, 1998 through June 23, 1999 ("Class Period") directly purchased Cardizem CD from HMRI [now Aventis]; and who also, after the first generic version of Cardizem CD entered the market on June 23, 1999, either: (1) purchased one or more generic versions of Cardizem CD; or (2) obtained increased discounts for their direct purchases of Cardizem CD [the "Sherman Act Class" or "Class"].

See Order No. 24 at 3, 59. Excluded from the Class are all Defendants in this lawsuit, and their officers, directors, management and employees, subsidiaries or affiliates. See id. Also excluded are those direct purchasers who have already opted out of the Class on or before the opt-out deadline of January 25, 2002 ordered by the Court, including those who brought their own separate actions against Defendants, which are currently being coordinated with the Class's case before this Court. Notice of the class certification decision was sent to Class members on or about December 11, 2001, pursuant to a notice program approved by the Court. On March 28, 2001, Defendants filed a petition with the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals for permission to appeal the Court's class certification ruling pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f). On June 18, 2001, the Court of Appeals denied Defendants' petition.

On December 10, 1999, Class Counsel also filed a motion for partial summary judgment asking the Court to rule that the Defendants' September 1997 Agreement was a per se violation of the antitrust laws. On February 8, 2000, Class Counsel argued the merits of the motion, and on June 6, 2000, the Court granted it, holding that the Defendants' agreement "constitutes a restraint of trade that has long been held illegal per se under established Supreme Court precedent." Order No. 13 at 1. On June 20, 2000, Defendants asked for permission to immediately appeal this decision to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Defendants' request was granted, and on December 12, 2000, the Sixth Circuit agreed to hear Defendants' appeal. The appeal has been fully briefed and argued, and the parties are currently awaiting decision by the Sixth Circuit.

In December 1999, Defendants also moved to dismiss the consolidated complaint filed by the Plaintiffs. After substantial briefing and oral argument on these motions, the Court denied Defendants' motions to dismiss on May 11, 2000. See Order No. 12 at 4.

In addition to this significant motion practice, Class Counsel also conducted a coordinated and efficient discovery effort that included the filing of numerous motions to compel, the review of over a million pages of documents and conducting over 25 depositions of witnesses.

After lengthy negotiations, including a protracted mediation with Professor Eric Green, a highly experienced mediator approved by the Court, and following substantial discovery, investigation and substantive briefing on the legal issues, Class Counsel entered into a final settlement agreement and side letter with Defendants on August 13, 2002 (the "Settlement Agreement").

II. Analysis

A. Final Approval of Settlement

Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs come before this Court seeking final approval, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e) of the proposed settlement of this antitrust class action as embodied in the Settlement Agreement dated August 13, 2002 ("Settlement"). The Settlement provides for a cash payment of $110 million, plus interest (the "Settlement Fund") to the class certified by this Court on November 26, 2001. The Settlement comes after almost four years of vigorous litigation, including months of mediation under the aegis of the nationally recognized mediator, Professor Eric D. Green, in an extraordinarily complex case raising a multitude of difficult issues in the areas of antitrust law, patent law, and laws governing pharmaceutical drugs.

This Court preliminarily approved the proposed Settlement on September 24, 2002. It also approved the form and manner of notice for dissemination to the Class. Pursuant to the approved notice, all entities identified as potential Class members from Defendants' sales database were advised of their rights under the Settlement, including their right to exclude themselves from the Class, to object to any or all terms of the Settlement, the Plan of Allocation, the award of attorneys' fees and costs, and incentive awards to the named Plaintiffs. Copies of the Notice of Proposed Class Settlement and Hearing Regarding Settlement (the "Notice") were disseminated by first class mail to Class members, and a Summary Notice was published in two trade publications well known to entities within the pharmaceutical industry: the Pink Sheet and the Chain Drug Review. The Summary Notice notified potential Class members of, inter alia, the proposed settlement and instructed them where to obtain a more detailed Class Notice. The deadline for submitting objections was November 13, 2002. No Class members objected in writing or at the fairness hearing held on November 20, 2002.

1. Standards for Court Approval of Settlement

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e) provides that "[a] class action shall not be dismissed or compromised without approval of the court . . . ." In deciding whether to approve a proposed class action settlement, the Court must determine, after the fairness hearing, whether the settlement is "fair, adequate, and reasonable, as well as consistent with the public interest." Bailey v. Great Lakes Canning, Inc., 908 F.2d 38, 42 (6th Cir. 1990). The Court's determination requires consideration of "whether the interests of the class as a whole are better served if the litigation is resolved by the settlement rather than pursued." Manual for Complex Litigation (Third) § 30.42 (1995).

Other relevant factors considered by the Court include: (1) the likelihood of success on the merits weighed against the amount and form of the relief offered in the settlement; (2) the risks, expense, and delay of further litigation; (3) the judgment of experienced counsel who have competently evaluated the strength of their proofs; (4) the amount of discovery completed and the character of the evidence uncovered; (5) whether the settlement is fair to the unnamed class members; (6) whether the settlement is consistent with the public interest; (7) objections raised by class members; and (8) whether the settlement is the product of arm's length negotiations as opposed to collusive bargaining. See Granada Investments, Inc. v. DWG Corp., 962 F.2d 1203, 1205 (6th Cir. 1992); Williams v. Vukovich, 720 F.2d 909, 922-23 (6th Cir. 1983); Kogan v. AIMCO Fox Chase, L.P., 193 F.R.D. 496, 501-02 (E.D. Mich. 2000); Steiner v. Fruehauf Corp., 121 F.R.D. 304, 305-06 (E.D. Mich. 1988).

2. Evaluation of the Settlement Under Applicable Standards

Considering the above, this Court finds that the proposed Settlement is fair, adequate, and reasonable. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' motion is GRANTED, and the Settlement is APPROVED for the following reasons.

a. The Benefits of the Settlement Weigh in Favor of Approval

Pursuant to the proposed Settlement, the Class will obtain an immediate and certain benefit of $110 million in cash, plus interest ($539,116.96 as of October 31, 2002). The Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs' expert economist has estimated that this amount represents more than 200% of the total amount the Class was overcharged during the period the Defendants' September 1997 Agreement was in effect (September 24, 1997 through June 9, 1999), and more than 95% of overcharge damages accrued through August 13, 2002, the date the Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs and Defendants signed the proposed Settlement Agreement.[1] The recovery to the Class under the negotiated Settlement is well beyond the percentage of claimed damages found by other courts to be satisfactory. See In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., ___ F. Supp.2d ___, ___, 2002 WL 2007850, *26 (D. Del. Aug. 30, 2002) (observing that "[t]he settlement amount of $44.5 million represents more than 33% of the maximum possible recovery," and finding that this is "a very reasonable settlement when compared with recovery percentages in other class actions."). In light of the above, this Court finds that the benefits the Settlement confers on the Class weigh in favor of approval.

[1]The Settlement Agreement also provides "most favored nation" protection against a settlement with any other direct private purchaser on better monetary terms for a comparable release than the Settlement with the Class. If Defendants were to enter into such a settlement, additional payments on behalf of the Class would be required to make

b. The Risks, Expenses, and Delay of Continued Litigation Favor Approval

As part of the approval process, the Court also evaluates the proposed Settlement's fairness and adequacy "by weighing the plaintiff's likelihood of success on the merits against the amount and form of the relief offered in the settlement." Williams, 720 F.2d at 922. Settlements should represent "a compromise which has been reached after the risks, expense and delay of further litigation have been assessed." Id. Accordingly, this Court examines the risks, expense, and delay Plaintiffs would face if they continued to prosecute this complex litigation through trial and appeal and weighs those factors against the amount of recovery provided to the Class in the proposed Settlement.

The prospect of a trial necessarily involves the risk that Plaintiffs would obtain little or no recovery. Experience proves that, no matter how confident trial counsel may be, they cannot predict with 100% accuracy a jury's favorable verdict. Moreover, Plaintiffs', while up the difference. See Settlement Agreement ¶ 7. The mediator, Eric Green, has already determined that the Individual Sherman Act Plaintiffs' settlement with Defendant Aventis does not trigger Aventis' obligation to make additional payments to the Class under this "most favored nation" clause.

emphasizing the strengths of their case, candidly admit there were hurdles that would have to be overcome for successful prosecution at trial and on appeal.

First, there is the risk that the Sixth Circuit might reverse this Court's ruling that Defendants' September 1997 Agreement was a per se violation of the Sherman Act. This issue is pending on appeal, and, if reversed, would add significantly to the risks Plaintiffs would face at trial. For example, Plaintiffs would have to prove their case under a more difficult "quick look" or "rule of reason" analysis. They would also have to rebut Defendants' pro-competitive justifications for the Agreement and define a relevant market.

Second, Plaintiffs faced risks regarding the causation element of their claims. The FTC, in its "Analysis to Aid Public Comment" accompanying the announcement of its settlement with Defendants, stated that, based on its investigation, it did not believe that the Defendants' September 1997 Agreement delayed the entry of Andrx's generic Cardizem CD product onto the market. Sherman Act Class counsel disagree with this statement and observe that it has no precedential value. Nonetheless, they acknowledge that it highlights one of the primary risks Plaintiffs would face absent the Settlement. During the course of this litigation, Defendants have vigorously challenged Plaintiffs' claims with multi-faceted and complex causation arguments; i.e., that, regardless of the September 1997 Agreement, Andrx had no intention of coming to market while its patent litigation with Aventis (formerly HMRI) was pending, and furthermore, Andrx could not have come to market any earlier due to various financial and technical reasons. Class Counsel contend that they developed persuasive evidence to refute these defenses (and thus obtained a favorable settlement) but cannot dismiss the fact that there is no way to assure that they would have succeeded on their claims if they had proceeded to trial.

If the jury came to the conclusion that the Defendants' September 1997 Agreement did not delay Andrx (or any other generic company) from entering the market, then the Class would recover nothing – even if the Court's ruling that the Agreement was a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act is upheld on appeal. To recover monetary damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, the Class must not only establish that Defendants' September 1997 Agreement was illegal but also that it caused the Class economic harm. Here, the economic harm claimed by the Class is overcharges incurred because of the alleged delay in generic entry caused by the Defendants' September 1997 Agreement. Accordingly, a jury's determination that the Agreement did not delay generic entry would result in no recovery for the Class. Plaintiffs would also likely face additional defenses at trial; i.e., that Class members, especially wholesalers, did not suffer any economic injury as a result of the Agreement ("bypass" argument raised by Defendants in the class certification context). The possibility that a jury could agree with Defendants at trial on any of these issues presents a risk to be weighed against the amount and form of relief offered in the settlement.

Continued prosecution through trial and appeal would also create substantial additional expense and delay. Although significant discovery has already taken place (Class counsel contends that it has already reviewed approximately one million documents and taken numerous depositions), substantial additional effort and expense would be required to prepare this matter for trial. This would include: (1) completion of fact and expert discovery; (2) preparing witnesses, experts and exhibits; and (3) completing pre-trial motion practice, including possible motions for summary judgment.

In light of the above, this Court finds that the certain and immediate benefits to the Class represented by the Settlement outweigh the possibility of obtaining a better result at trial, particularly when factoring in the additional expense and long delay inherent in prosecuting this complex litigation through trial and appeal.

c. The Judgment of Experienced Counsel and the Amount and Character of Discovery Weigh in Favor of Approval

In approving a proposed Settlement, the Court also considers the opinion of experienced counsel as to the merits of the settlement. As the Sixth Circuit observed, "[t]he court should defer to the judgment of experienced counsel who has competently evaluated the strength of his proofs. Significantly, however, the deference afforded counsel should correspond to the amount of discovery completed and the character of the evidence uncovered." Williams, 720 F.2d at 922-23 (internal citations omitted).

This Court finds that counsel for the Sherman Act Class, who have extensive experience in antitrust and other complex class action litigation, negotiated the proposed settlement at arm's length, after extensive discovery and independent analysis of all relevant matters, and thus it defers to Class Counsel's conclusion that the proposed Settlement is fair, adequate, and reasonable. At the time the parties entered into the Settlement Agreement, fact discovery relevant to the Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs' action had almost been completed. Class Counsel's Affidavits reveal that they had (1) thoroughly investigated the claims against Defendants; (2) retained and worked with expert witnesses in evaluating aggregate damages to the Class and Defendants' highly technical production-related causation defenses; and (3) sufficiently developed the facts concerning Defendants' liability and damages to make a highly informed decision regarding the proposed Settlement. All of this weighs in favor of the Court's approval of the Settlement.

d. The Fact that the Settlement Is the Product of Arm's Length Negotiations as Opposed to Collusive Bargaining and Consideration of the Fairness of the Settlement to the Unnamed Members of the Class Also Favor Approval

This Settlement comes after almost four years of vigorous litigation and is the product of arm's length settlement negotiations between Class Counsel and Defendants that lasted several months. These negotiations and the ultimate Settlement Agreement were closely monitored by Professor Eric D. Green, an experienced and respected mediator. He opines in his Mediation Report to the Court that "this settlement was the result of hard-fought and difficult negotiations. All counsel did an excellent job in the litigation and the mediation, and in my opinion the process was such as would lead to a fair and reasonable settlement." Eric Green 11/18/02 Mediation Report at 4.

As to the Settlement's fairness to unnamed members of the Class, Plaintiffs' expert economist estimates that the $110 million Settlement (plus interest) is more than enough to cover all of the Class's overcharge damages. Moreover, pursuant to the proposed Plan of Allocation, the Settlement Fund is to be distributed pro rata to all Class members based on their proportion of the Class's aggregate damages. The fact that the two named Plaintiffs are to receive an incentive award in the amount of $20,000 does not render the Settlement unfair to unnamed members of the Class. In light of the above, this Court finds that the Settlement was negotiated at arm's length and would be fair to the unnamed Class members. Accordingly, these factors also weigh in favor of approval.

e. The Settlement's Consistency with Public Interest Favors Approval

There is a strong public interest in private antitrust litigation. See e.g., Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983). Likewise, there is a strong public interest in encouraging settlement of complex litigation and class action suits because they are "notoriously difficult and unpredictable" and settlement conserves judicial resources. See Granda, 962 F.2d at 1205 (internal quotes and citation omitted). Accord, In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., ___ F.Supp.2d at ___, 2002 WL 2007850 at *21; Steiner, 121 F.R.D. at 305. Settlement of this antitrust action serves the public interest by ensuring effective enforcement of the antitrust laws and deterrence of anti-competitive conduct in the marketplace. See Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 318 (1965). This is particularly important in the pharmaceutical industry where the potential harm to society caused by agreements to prevent or delay entry of cheaper generic products has recently received considerable attention.

f. The Lack of Class Member Objections Weighs Heavily in Favor of Approval

Notice of the Settlement included a description of the Class, the procedural status of the litigation, description of the Class members' rights under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3), the significant terms of the Settlement, a general description of the proposed plan of allocation of the settlement proceeds, and a description of the process of court approval. Notice was mailed to each Class member at its last known address (for whom such address was known). The Summary Notice was also published in two industry publications, and the Settlement Agreement and Notices were posted on the websites of Co-Lead Counsel. No Class member objected to the terms of the Settlement in writing or at the fairness hearing held on November 20, 2002. The Court finds that the positive Class response to the proposed Settlement weighs heavily in support of its approval. See Kogan, 193 F.R.D. at 502.

3. Conclusion

Having considered the above factors, this Court finds that the proposed Settlement merits FINAL APPROVAL. For the reasons stated on the record at the November 20, 2002 fairness hearing, this Court's approval is without prejudice to the Individual Sherman Act Plaintiffs' right to assert arguments against application of the release language contained in the Settlement Agreement to the claims asserted in their separate, on-going litigation.[2] Defendant Andrx's arguments regarding the legal effect of that release language present affirmative defenses that are properly considered in the context of that separate, on-going litigation. See Abbott Labs. v. CVS Pharmacy, Inc., 290 F.3d 854 (7th Cir. 2002).

B. Approval of Allocation Plan

Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs also seek approval of their Plan of Allocation which allocates the settlement funds, net of Court-approved attorneys' fees, incentive awards, and expenses ("Net Settlement Fund"), in proportion to the overcharge damages incurred by each Class member due to Defendants' alleged anti-competitive conduct. For the following reasons, this Court GRANTS Plaintiffs' motion and APPROVES Plaintiffs' Plan of Allocation.

[2]As clarified at the November 20, 2002 fairness hearing, Individual Sherman Act Plaintiffs have no objection to this Court's approval of the proposed Settlement in this action.

First, no Class member has objected to the Plan. Second, it provides a fair and reasonable method of calculating Class member overcharge damages based on each Class member's actual purchases of generic Cardizem CD and/or any increased discounts on Cardizem CD that the Class members actually received, in conformance with Plaintiffs' experts' damage calculation methodology; and also provides a fair and reasonable method for determining each Class member's pro rata share of the Net Settlement Fund.

Third, the Plan adequately describes: (1) the method of calculating each Class member's overcharge damages and pro rata share of the Net Settlement Fund; (2) the contents and method of disseminating a Claims Notice form; (3) the manner in which claims will be initially reviewed and processed; (4) the method of notifying Class members of the amount that each Class member will receive from the Net Settlement Fund ("Notice of Class Member Distribution Amount"); and (5) the process for handling and resolving challenged claims. It also includes deadlines for completing tasks related to distributing each Class member's pro rata share of the Net Settlement Fund: (1) preparation and dissemination of the Claims Notice form; (2) receipt by the Settlement Administrator of completed Claims Notice forms and supporting documentation; (3) curing deficiencies in any Claims Notice form or supporting documentation submitted by Class members; (4) disseminating the Notice of Class Member Distribution Amount; and (5) challenging and resolving disputes over the Settlement Administrator's determination of each Class member's distribution amount.

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' Plan of Allocation is approved with one minor amendment. Consistent with Paragraph 23 of the parties' Settlement Agreement, the term "alleged" (or, where appropriate, "allegedly") shall be inserted in the Plan at page 2 (before references to "the illegal Agreement," "the illegal behavior" and "the collusive period"), page 3 (before reference to "the anti-competitive Agreement"), page 4 (before reference to "delay[ed] generic entry [and] delayed competition"), and page 9 n.5 (before reference to "the collusive conduct").

C. Approval of Requested Attorneys' Fees, Expenses and Incentive Awards

Class Counsel also filed a Joint Petition for Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses and Incentive Awards for Named Plaintiffs. Specifically, Class Counsel request a fee in the amount of 30% of the Settlement Fund plus interest, for a total of $33,161,734.80 through October 31, 2002, plus 30% of additional interest as accrued. Counsel for the Sherman Act Class also request reimbursement of $1,089,371.73 in out-of-pocket expenses incurred in the representation of the Sherman Act Class. Finally, Class Counsel request an incentive award of $20,000 each to the named Plaintiffs, Louisiana Wholesale Drug Company, Inc. and Duane Reade, Inc., for their participation as representatives of the Sherman Act Class. For the reasons set forth below, this Court GRANTS Class Counsel's requests.

1. Attorneys' Fees

The Class members' claims against Defendants in this consolidated action have been settled for $110 million in cash, plus interest since July 1, 2002 (as of October 31, 2002, $539,116.96 of interest has accrued). As discussed above, this represents an excellent settlement for the Class and reflects the outstanding effort on the part of highly experienced, skilled, and hard working Class Counsel. As Class Counsel's affidavits show, their efforts were not only successful, but were highly organized and efficient in addressing numerous complex issues raised in this litigation, including highly technical Federal Drug Administration ("FDA") regulatory issues, patent, manufacturing, financial and related causation issues. To date, Class Counsel have been without compensation of any kind. They have expended more than 27,000 hours over a four-year period, with compensation wholly contingent on the result achieved.

This Court finds that the percentage-of-the-fund method is the proper method for compensating Class Counsel, and that an attorneys' fee award of 30% of the Settlement Fund is reasonable under the circumstances presented here. Courts in the Sixth Circuit have approved similar percentage awards, and consideration of factors identified by the Sixth Circuit justify such an award.

The Settlement Fund is a "common fund", and the courts have long recognized that a lawyer who recovers such a fund is entitled to a reasonable attorneys' fee from the fund as a whole. See Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980). "In a common fund case, the 'fees are not assessed against the unsuccessful litigant (fee shifting), but rather are taken from the fund or damage recovery (fee spreading), thereby avoiding the unjust enrichment of those who otherwise would be benefited by the fund without sharing in the expenses incurred by the successful litigant.'" Fournier v. PFS Investments, Inc., 997 F. Supp. 828, 830 (E.D. Mich. 1998) (quoting Court Awarded Attorneys Fees, Report of the Third Circuit Task Force, 108 F.R.D. 237, 250 (1985)). "The common fund exception to the American Rule is grounded in the equitable powers of the courts under the doctrines of quantum meruit and unjust enrichment. It applies where a common fund has been created by the efforts of plaintiffs' attorney and rests on the principle that persons who obtain the benefit of a lawsuit without contributing to its cost are unjustly enriched at the successful litigant's expense." Manual for Complex Litigation (Third) § 24.121 (1995) (internal quotes and footnotes omitted).

The Sixth Circuit leaves it to the Court's discretion as to whether it will apply the lodestar or percentage-of-the-fund method to awards of attorneys fees, requiring "only that awards of attorney's fees by federal courts in common fund cases be reasonable under the circumstances." Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Properties, Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 516 (6th Cir. 1993). It noted, however, that the recent trend has been towards application of a percentage-of-the-fund method in common fund cases. See id. Courts within the Sixth Circuit have likewise indicated their preference for the percentage-of-the-fund method. See, e.g., In re F & M Distributors, Inc. Sec. Litig., Case No. 95-CV-71778-DT, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, [1999 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 90,621 (E.D. Mich. June 29, 1999) (choosing percentage-of-the-fund as the better method for determining attorneys' fees in a securities class action); In re Rio Hair Naturalizer Products Liability Litig., MDL No. 1055, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20440 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 20, 1996) (observing that "more commonly, fee awards in common fund cases are calculated as a percentage of the fund created, typically ranging from 20 to 50 percent of the fund"); Fournier, 997 F. Supp. at 832-33 (choosing percentage-of-the-fund method in class action securities litigation). This Court agrees with Judge Cook's observations in F & M Distributors that (1) "the lodestar method is too cumbersome and time-consuming of the resources of the Court"; and (2) "more importantly, the 'percentage of the fund' approach more accurately reflects the result achieved." 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090 at *8 (internal quotes and citations omitted). This Court's decision to apply the percentage-of-the-fund method is consistent with the majority trend, and, more importantly, is reasonable under the circumstances presented here.

As the Third Circuit Task Force recently concluded, "[m]ost courts use the percentage of the fund method." Third Circuit Task Force on the Selection of Class Counsel, Final Report of the Third Circuit Task Force at 103 (January 2002). The Task Force concluded that "[a] percentage fee, tailored to the realities of the particular case, remains superior to any other means of determining a reasonable fee for class counsel." Id. at 19. It explained why the lodestar method is inferior to the percentage fee approach:

> The lodestar remains difficult and burdensome to apply, and it positively encourages counsel to run up the bill, expending hours that are of no benefit to the class. Moreover, use of the lodestar may result in undercompensation of talented attorneys. Experienced practitioners know that a highly qualified and dedicated attorney may do more for a class in an hour than another attorney could do in ten. The lodestar can end up prejudicing lawyers who are more efficient with a less expenditure of time.

Id. at 104. These observations apply here. The percentage fee method is preferred so as not to undercompensate extremely talented and efficient Class Counsel.

This Court also finds that the requested 30% fee is fair and reasonable and is justified by the excellent performance of Class Counsel in obtaining an extraordinary result for the Class in this complex litigation. This is within the ordinary range of between 20-30% typically awarded in common fund cases. See F & M Distributors, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090 at *8-10 (awarding 30% of the gross settlement fund after reviewing other awards in the Sixth Circuit and finding 30% award consistent with the trend). It is also within the range of fee awards in settlements with common funds of comparable size to the $110 million Settlement Fund at issue here. See Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1050 n.4 (9th Cir.) (upholding a 28% fee award of a $96.885 million settlement fund, and observing that its survey of percentage fee awards "from 34 common fund settlements of $50-200 million from 1996-2001," show a majority clustered in the 20-30% range), cert. denied, ___ S. Ct. ___, 2002 WL 1968819, 71 U.S.L.W. 3154 (U.S. Nov. 12, 2002).

A lower percentage is not required simply because the Settlement obtained on behalf of the Class is large. As recently observed by the District Court for the Southern District of New York, blind adherence to a declining percentage-of-fund method under these circumstances "can create an incentive to settle quickly and cheaply when the returns to effort are highest," and can create an undesirable situation where counsel is inadequately rewarded for "investing additional time and maximizing plaintiffs' recovery." In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 197 F.R.D. 71, 80 (S.D. N.Y. 2000).

This Court determines the reasonableness of the percentage requested by Class Counsel by examining factors identified by the Sixth Circuit. These include: "(1) the value of the benefit rendered to the plaintiff class . . .; (2) the value of services on an hourly basis; (3) whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis; (4) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others; (5) the complexity of the litigation; and (6) the professional skill and standing of counsel involved on both sides." Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 102 F.3d 777, 780 (6th Cir. 1996) (internal quotes and citations omitted). Accord, Smillie v. Park Chem. Co., 710 F.2d 271, 275 (6th Cir. 1983).

Considering the above factors, this Court finds that Class Counsel's requested fee award is reasonable under the circumstances. First, as discussed above, the result Class Counsel obtained on behalf of the Class is extraordinary. Second, there is no question that Class Counsel spent thousands of hours litigating this complex case over the past four years. Their work at all times has been of the highest quality. The Court is also mindful that the significant amount of time spent on this action precluded Class Counsel from working on other matters. Moreover, the fact that the 30% fee recovery in this case would equate to a lodestar multiplier of approximately 3.7 does not render it unreasonable. Similar multipliers have been accepted as fair and reasonable in complex matters with large settlement funds such as this. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1051 (examining cases and determining that a 3.65 multiplier on a $96.885 million settlement was appropriate and within the range applied in large common fund cases).

The third through sixth factors also support the requested attorneys' fee. Class Counsel undertook representation of the Class on a contingent fee basis and thus bore the risk of recovery (detailed above) and the outlay of large out-of-pocket expenses for almost four years. The complexity of this case cannot be overstated. Antitrust class actions are inherently complex. The complexity of this antitrust case was enhanced by additional, highly technical, causation-related issues; i.e., regulatory issues arising out of the Hatch-Waxman Act; patent law issues relevant to the Aventis/Andrx patent litigation underlying the Defendants' September 1997 Agreement; the intricacies of the pharmaceutical industry from a sales and marketing perspective; the scientific and production processes involved with inventing and commercializing branded and generic pharmaceutical products; and the FDA regulations applicable to reviewing and approving pharmaceutical products and new manufacturing facilities/processes. Despite its complexity, Class Counsel was able to efficiently and effectively prosecute and settle this matter. A review of Class Counsel's affidavits, submitted in support of the petition, reveals that they were able to streamline and focus their discovery and litigation efforts through standing weekly conference calls in which tasks were assigned and reviewed and through discovery agendas where the internal discovery committee was required to justify the need for each piece of discovery before pursuing it.

Furthermore, this Court would be remiss if it failed to acknowledge the experience, hard work, and skill demonstrated by Class Counsel in this matter. Their excellent performance on behalf of the Class in this hotly contested case justifies the award they seek. The Court is appreciative of the professionalism, skill, and competency displayed by counsel for both sides throughout this litigation. Professor Eric Green, the mediator in this matter, likewise observed that the skill and professionalism of counsel for the Defendants and the Plaintiff Class during the mediation was of the highest caliber.

Finally, this Court considers society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others. As already noted, Class Counsel obtained an excellent settlement for the Class in a complex and hard-fought case. "Society's stake in rewarding attorneys who can produce such benefits in complex litigation such as in the case at bar counsels in favor of a generous fee. . . ." F & M Distributors, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090 at *18. Society also benefits from the prosecution and settlement of private antitrust litigation. See e.g., Pillsbury Co., 459 U.S. at 262-63; Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 381 U.S. at 318. Class Counsel brought this private antitrust action seeking to enforce the antitrust laws and alleging that a brand-name drug manufacturer had colluded with a generic competitor to block cheaper generic versions of the brand-name drug from coming to market. This case has helped put prescription drug pricing and marketing tactics at the forefront of media, Congressional scrutiny, and judicial scrutiny. Encouraging qualified counsel to bring inherently difficult and risky but beneficial class actions like this case benefits society.

Taking into consideration the above factors and also observing that there are no objections to the requested fee, this Court awards counsel for the Sherman Act Class 30% of the Settlement Fund plus interest, for a total of $33,161,734.80 through October 31, 2002, plus 30% of additional interest as accrued.

2. Reimbursement of Expenses

In addition to their petition for attorneys' fees, Class Counsel seek reimbursement of $1,089,371.73 in out-of-pocket expenses incurred in the representation of the Sherman Act Class. Upon review of the numerous affidavits submitted by Class Counsel in support of this request, the Court finds this amount to be fair and reasonable. "Expense awards are customary when litigants have created a common settlement fund for the benefit of a class." F & M Distributors, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090 at *19. In determining whether the requested expenses are compensable in this common fund, the Court has considered whether the particular costs are of the type typically billed by attorneys to paying clients in similar cases. See In re Synthroid Marketing Litig., 264 F.3d 712, 722 (7th Cir. 2001). The Court finds that the categories of expenses for which Class Counsel seek reimbursement are the type routinely charged to their hourly fee-paying clients and thus should be reimbursed out of the Settlement Fund. Likewise, considering the detailed affidavits submitted in support of the request for reimbursement, this Court is persuaded the these expenses are reasonable.

3. Incentive Awards to Named Plaintiffs

Finally, Class Counsel request the Court to approve incentive awards in the amount of $20,000 each for the two named Plaintiffs, Louisiana Wholesale Drug Company, Inc. and Duane Reade, Inc. The Court GRANTS Class Counsel's request. Such awards are also common in class actions such as this. See F & M Distributors, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090 at *20. The Notice to the Class advised that Class Counsel would apply for these incentive awards, and no objections were received. Moreover, the Court finds these incentive awards to be reasonable and justified in light of the discovery, mediation, settlement, and other litigation burdens placed on Louisiana Wholesale and Duane Reade, Inc.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, this Court GRANTS Sherman Act Class Plaintiffs' motions for (1) final approval of settlement; (2) approval of plan of allocation; and (3) Class Counsel's joint petition for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses and incentive awards for named Plaintiffs.

IN RE: FOUNDRY RESINS ANTITRUST LITIGATION	Case No. 2:04-md-1638 Master Docket No. 2:04-cv-415 CLASS ACTION
This Document Relates To: ALL CASES EXCEPT Caterpillar Inc. v. Ashland Inc., et al., Court File No. 2:04-cv-01165-GLF-MRA	Judge Gregory L. Frost Magistrate Judge Mark R. Abel

ORDER

This matter is before the Court for consideration of the February 15, 2008 Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses and Payment of Incentive Awards to Class Representatives (Doc. # 242) and the March 25, 2008 Plaintiffs' Notice of Filing Supplemental Time and Expense Information in Support of Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses and Payment of Incentive Awards to Class Representatives (Doc. # 244). Upon consideration, the Court GRANTS the motion as supplemented.

It is therefore hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, and DECREED as follows:

(1) The Court awards Plaintiffs' Counsel attorneys' fees in the amount of 33⅓% of the Ashland Settlement Fund ($7,900,000.00) and 33⅓% of the HAI Settlement Fund ($6,256,421.00 after reduction pursuant to the applicable "most favored nation" provision), for a total fee of $4,718,807.00, plus accrued interest.

(2) The Court authorizes Co-Lead Counsel to distribute such fees to Plaintiffs' Counsel in a manner which, in the opinion of Co-Lead Counsel, fairly compensates each Plaintiffs'

Counsel firm in view of its contribution to the prosecution of Plaintiffs' claims. The Court retains jurisdiction over any disputes among Plaintiffs' Counsel concerning the allocation of such awarded attorneys' fees.

(3) In addition to the attorneys' fees awarded by the Court, the Court approves a payment of unreimbursed litigation expenses in the amount of $891,185.20 from the Ashland and HAI Settlement Funds to Plaintiffs' Counsel.

(4) The Court approves incentive awards of $5,000 each to Plaintiffs State Line Foundries, Kore Mart, Lancaster Foundry Supply, Kulp Foundry, AmeriCast Technologies, and Tri-Cast Limited from the Ashland and HAI Settlement Funds for their service as Class Representatives.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

posture of the case because clearly it makes, it makes a big difference. And I will preface what I'm about to say, I'll say it once so I don't have to keep repeating it. Judge Grear in Tennessee has made a substantial number of rulings and moved the case forward. And we disagree with many of his rulings, but they are the rulings of the Court. And they put us in the posture we found ourselves last week.

So the hurdles that the plaintiffs in Tennessee passed, that have not been even crossed yet by the plaintiffs here, include class certification. And in Tennessee we petitioned for interlocutory appeal. The Sixth Circuit turned it down so they survived that. There are two pending motions to decertify the class. The Court hasn't ruled on those yet. [Motions for Summary Judgment briefed, argued, decided. Three counts were dismissed, from my perspective that was great, but two counts survived. And those two counts, conspiracy in restraint of trade under Section 1 and conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2, frankly, are sufficiently large to encompass everything that the plaintiffs in Tennessee were complaining about.]

There were 70, don't blanch, but 70 motions in limine that were filed. The Court held argument on those over the course of two days and delivered oral rulings on many of them. So we knew -- the, the written rulings were

This document relates to: All End Payer Plaintiff Actions	ORDER GRANTING END PAYER PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES AND COSTS

Pending before the Court is the End Payer Plaintiffs' ("EPPs") motion for an award of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of litigation expenses made in connection with their class action settlement with Defendants StarKist Co. and Dongwon Industries Co., Ltd. (collectively, "StarKist and DWI") and Defendants Lion Capital (Americas), Inc., Lion Capital LLP, and Big Catch Cayman LP[1] (collectively, the "Lion Companies"). The EPPs also seek incentive awards from the settlement fund in varying amounts ranging from $3,000, $6,000 and $9,000 for consumers who acted as Class Representatives for their service in this case.

Having considered the EPPs' motion, the record in this case, and the supporting papers, the Court finds EPPs' request for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of litigation expenses, and incentive awards for each of the Class Representatives for their service in this case is fair and reasonable considering the outstanding settlements obtained, the substantial efforts Class Counsel have taken, the considerable litigation risks faced by Class Counsel, and the extent of time and work that the Class Representatives have put into this case over the last nine years. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the EPPs' motion and ORDERS the following:

(1) The Class Representatives shall each receive an incentive award as follows:

a. $3,000 each to Louise Adams, Nay Alidad, Jessica Bartling, Barbara Blumstein, Barbara Buenning, Scott Caldwell, Jade Canterbury, Casey Christensen, Jody Cooper, Sundé Daniels, Brian Depperschmidt, Vivek Dravid, Rob Etten, Ana Gabriela Felix Garcia, John Frick, Kathleen Garner, Stephanie Gipson, Tina Grant, Tya Hughes, Amy Jackson, Marissa Jacobus, Danielle Johnson, Zenda Johnston, Michael Juetten, Steven Kratky, Kathy Lingnofski, Katherine McMahon, Diana Mey, Liza Milliner, Laura Montoya, Kirsten Peck, Elizabeth Perron, Valerie Peters, John Peychal, Audra Rickman, Erica Rodriguez, Joelyna A San Agustin, Amber Sartori, Rebecca Lee Simoens, Nancy Stiller, Christopher Todd, John Trent, Nigel Warren, Thomas E. Willoughby III, and Dan Zwirlein.

[1] Big Catch Cayman LP was previously dismissed from the Action by the Court with prejudice. ECF No. 3103.

b. $6,000 each to Melissa Bowman, Michael Buff, Kathy Durand (f/k/a Gore), Kim Eason (f/k/a Craig), Gloria Emery, Edgardo Gutierrez, Carla Lown, Rick Musgrave, Corey Norris, John Pels, Rob Skaff, Greg Stearns, Bonnie Vander Laan, and Julie Wiese.

c. $9,000 each to Gay Birnbaum, Laura Childs, Andrew Gorman, Lisa Hall, Mary Hudson, Jennifer Nelson, Barbara Olson, and Elizabeth Twitchell.

(2) Class Counsel is awarded a total of $1,618,489.24 in past litigation expenses since May of 2021 and fees of $48,320,739.40.

(3) The fees and expenses shall be allocated among Class Counsel by the EPPs' Lead Counsel (Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP) in a manner that, in the Lead Counsel's good-faith judgment, reflects each firm's contribution to the institution, prosecution, and resolution of the litigation.

(4) This order shall be entered of this date pursuant to Rule 54(b) and (d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court finding that there is no just reason for delay.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

I. INTRODUCTION

Class Counsel for the End Payer Plaintiffs ("EPPs"), Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP, respectfully submits this brief in support of the EPPs' motion for an award of reasonable attorneys' fees, reimbursement of litigation expenses, and modest incentive awards for each Class Representative (tiered in relation to their time and service in this case).

To bring more than nine years of hard-fought litigation to a close, Class Counsel have presented the Court with two final settlements, which the Court preliminarily approved on August 23, 2024. ECF No. 3302. Subject to the Court's final approval, these proposed settlements, with a combined cash value of $136,000,000 and in addition to the previously approved COSI Partial Settlement, will provide total settlement cash benefits of $152,200,000 to the EPP consumers.[1] As the Court is well aware, Class Counsel and their co-counsel devoted significant time and substantial resources to this lengthy, complex, and highly successful antitrust litigation, and the settlements provide a substantial benefit to the EPPs. This exceptional recovery arose only from Class Counsel's skillful and dedicated litigation of this complex case.

The Court previously approved a partial settlement with COSI that ultimately yielded $16.2 million in settlement benefits to the EPPs. ECF No. 2871. As part of the partial settlement with COSI, the Court previously approved an Expense Award of $4,155,027.67 to reimburse Class litigation costs incurred as of May 2021. ECF No. 2872 at 4:17-19. Class Counsel did not request a Fee Award in connection with the COSI partial settlement, continuing to prosecute the case vigorously with their fees entirely at risk. Id. at 2:19-22; ECF 2827, Ex. F (Class Notice) at 48, 52. Class Counsel reserved their right to seek an award of attorneys' fees from any monies recovered from the Non-Settling Defendants (i.e., StarKist and the Lion Companies) and to include the monies received from the COSI partial settlement in any subsequent fee request. Id.; 2845-1 at 4 n.6.

For the excellent result they have achieved, EPPs' counsel seek reimbursement of their additional out-of-pocket expenses in the amount of $1,618,489.24 and an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $48,320,739.40, which is 33% of the net cash settlement amount after deducting all expenses awarded by the Court. While a slight upward departure from the 9th Circuit's 25% fee benchmark, an award of 33% of the net recovery for the Consumer Class is amply supported by the time and effort expended by counsel for the EPPs and by the tremendous settlements achieved, and represents a negative multiplier of 0.82 on their time expended over nine years in this hard-fought litigation.[2] Class Counsel propose to withdraw the payment of any Fee Award over time in proportion to the receipt of settlement monies from the Defendants. See § IV.D below.

In addition, counsel for the EPPs seek reimbursement of $1,618,489.24 in additional expenses incurred since May 2021 to prosecute this case to its successful conclusion. Id. EPPs request that $206,379.11 of that amount be returned to COSI to reimburse it for administration costs that will be common to the proposed new settlements and the prior COSI partial settlement. ECF No. 3286-2 at 4, ¶7.

The proposed fee and expense request is consistent with other fee and expense awards in this District and the Ninth Circuit generally. Furthermore, the request is fair and reasonable considering the outstanding settlement obtained, the substantial efforts by Class Counsel, and the considerable litigation risks faced by Class Counsel at every stage of this nine-year old complex antitrust litigation.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

[2] Counsel for the EPPs have excluded all time spent seeking appointment of lead counsel and all time spent seeking an award of fees and expenses from their time submitted in support of the fee application. See Declaration of Mark C. Rifkin in Support of the End Payer Plaintiffs' Motion for Fees and Costs ("Rifkin Decl."), ¶¶ 9-10.

Having presided over this complex litigation for many years, the Court is well familiar with the factual background and procedural history of the case. A summary of relevant events is included in the accompanying Declaration of Betsy C. Manifold ("Manifold Decl.") in Support of the EPPs' Motion for Preliminary. Only key events are highlighted here.

A. Lead Counsel Coordinated and Conducted Substantial Discovery

Wolf Haldenstein was appointed by the Court as the EPPs' Interim Lead Counsel on March 24, 2016, and was tasked with several important responsibilities, including the duty to conduct and oversee the prosecution of all aspects of the Action for the EPP Classes, to retain and work with experts and consultants, and to coordinate and supervise the conduct of other counsel for the EPPs to ensure that the litigation was conducted effectively and efficiently. See ECF No. 119. As Class Counsel, Wolf Haldenstein also was given the duty to collect and review lodestar and expense information from all counsel for the EPPs and to allocate fees and expenses among all counsel for the EPPs in the event of a successful outcome. Id.

B. Class Certification Was Hard-Fought and the Decision Widely Cited

Notably, class certification of the EPP Consumer Classes was especially hard-fought, involving three highly respected economists retained by Plaintiffs, Dr. Russel Mangum (DPPs), Dr. Michael Williams (CFPs); and Dr. David Sunding (EPPs), and countered by two equally respected economists hired by Defendants, Dr. John Johnson and Dr. Laila Haider. Manifold Decl., ¶31; ECF No. 2846-2 at ¶12. EPP Class Counsel prepped and defended 16 individual EPP Class Representative depositions. Manifold Decl., ¶31. On January 14-16, 2019, the Court conducted a three-day evidentiary hearing on class certification. Id., ¶32. The Court ultimately certified a Cartwright Act Class consisting of all persons and entities who resided in one of the states identified in the EPPs' operative complaint and indirectly purchased Packaged Tuna in consumer-sized cans or pouches produced by any Defendant during the period June 1, 2011 through July 1, 2015 (the "Class Period"). ECF No. 1931 at

46. The Court also certified a statewide damages class for each State identified in the operative complaint. Id. The Court appointed Wolf Haldenstein as Class Counsel. Id. at 58-59.

The Court's class certification decision withstood extensive appeals in the Ninth Circuit, resulting in a comprehensive decision that has become the nation's leading antitrust class certification order, having been cited no fewer than 994 times by district courts throughout the United States. Manifold Decl., ¶33. The Supreme Court denied a petition for certiorari from the Ninth Circuit's decision. Id.

C. Expert Discovery and Successful Dispositive Motions

In preparation for trial, EPPs engaged two experts: Dr. Sunding (economist) and Adoria Lim (forensic accountant). Manifold Decl., ¶34. The Defendants hired seven experts: Dr. Randal Heeb (economist), Dr. Michael Moore (economist), Gary Kleinrichert (accountant), Andres Lerner (economist), Janusz Ordover (economist), Robert Daines (law professor), and Ilya A. Strebulaev (private equity professor). Id. Extensive expert discovery concluded on February 23, 2023. ECF No. 2980.

After the close of discovery, in September 2019, the seven Defendants, three Plaintiff Classes, and 53 Direct Action Plaintiffs who remained in the case filed various dispositive motions and engaged in substantial briefing. Wolf Haldenstein played a substantial and leading role in organizing, coordinating, drafting, and filing the documents associated with over twenty (20) dispositive motions. Manifold Decl., ¶35. Plaintiffs filed four motions for partial summary judgment [ECF Nos. 1976, 1993, 2009, 2035] and three narrow Daubert motions [ECF Nos. 1970, 1987, 2034], including a motion for summary judgment motion filed by the EPPs against StarKist, which the Court granted on liability. Defendants filed thirteen dispositive motions: ten joint motions for summary judgment [ECF No. 1973, 1992, 1998, 1999, 2001, 2007, 2010, 2015, 2023, 2025] and three Daubert motions [1967, 1981, 1984].

Plaintiffs largely prevailed on the Daubert and summary judgment motions. Manifold Decl., ¶37.

D. Preparations for Trial Were Substantially Complete

Preparations for the trial scheduled to begin on July 16, 2024, were substantially complete when the proposed settlements were reached. The extensive trial preparation included numerous motions in limine filed by all parties, the Local Rule 16.1(f) meeting held on June 3, 2024, the preparation of joint jury instructions, which Plaintiffs presented to the Court along with their respective supplemental instructions and objections on May 31, 2024, and preparation of the proposed Pre-Trial Order, which Class Counsel lodged with the Court on June 14, 2024, in anticipation of a final Pretrial Conference on June 21, 2024. Virtually all pre-trial proceedings were completed before these settlements were reached.

In sum, as amply reflected in more than 3,300 docket entries filed by the parties and entered by the Court over the last nine years, this MDL has been vigorously, efficiently, and successfully litigated by Class Counsel at every stage of the proceedings. The EPP Class has been extremely well represented by Class Counsel and the other counsel for the Consumer Class throughout these proceedings.

III. THE SETTLEMENTS

A. Partial COSI Settlement Was Previously Approved by the Court

The COSI "icebreaker" settlement was the first settlement between the EPPs and any Defendant. It adds $16,200,000 to the Total Settlement Benefits of $152,200,000.[3] In granting final approval to the COSI partial settlement, the Court noted "that significantly, Settlement Class Counsel have not requested any attorney fees, just reimbursement of actual litigation costs and expenses." ECF No. 2871 at 14. At that time, counsel for the EPPs reserved their rights to request attorneys from future settlements with the Non-Settling Defendants (StarKist and the Lion Companies) and to base their request upon the total settlement amounts obtained from all settling parties. Id.

[3] Under the COSI Settlement Agreement, the Maximum Settlement Amount was $20 million. ECF No. 2552-3 at 8. Under Paragraph 11(b) and 18, up to $5 million could be used to cover the reasonable costs of the Settlement Notice and administration of the $15 million Settlement Fund. Since the reasonable costs of the Settlement Notice were less than $5 million, the difference will be refunded to COSI. Id. at 14 and 15. The COSI settlement required COSI to pay certain notice and administration, from which COSI has requested reimbursement for $206,379.11 in administrative costs incurred in 2024 that are being shared with the proposed StarKist and Lion settlements. ECF 3286 at 7 n.2. Thus, the actual amount of the COSI settlement is $16.2 million.

B. StarKist and the Lion Companies Settled Just Weeks Before Trial

The parties made notable attempts to settle the matter throughout the litigation. Since mid-2019, Class Counsel engaged in several informal settlement discussions and many more formal settlement negotiations (most presided over with extreme care and exceptional skill by Magistrate Judge Michael S. Berg) with counsel for the Settling Defendants. ECF No. 3286-2 at 7-9 ¶¶ 17, 18, 22 (including Bumble Bee). In particular, the EPPs and StarKist participated in multiple settlement conferences with Judge Berg on October 4, 2023, April 25, 2024, May 22, May 23, 2024, and June 3, 2024. Id. at ¶¶ 20, 21. With the oversight and guidance of Judge Berg, and with most pre-trial proceedings complete and the July 16, 2024, trial looming, the EPPs and StarKist finally reached a settlement-in-principle in the amount of $130 million on June 3, 2024.

The EPPs and the Lion Companies also attended a joint settlement conference before Judge Berg on August 7, 2023. ECF No. 3286-2 at ¶ 23. Counsel for the EPPs and for the Lion Companies continued to conduct informal and formal settlement negotiations, including a lengthy but unsuccessful formal mediation with Judge Michael Weinstein (retired). On June 17, 2024, nearly a year after beginning the settlement process and with the trial imminent, the EPPs again met with the Lion Companies (and their principals and insurers) in a day-long settlement conference with Judge Berg. The settlement conference resulted in the parties reaching a $6,000,000 settlement-in-principle, but only after the Lion Companies' and its founders' financial condition were carefully and thoroughly evaluated by Class Counsel and by Judge Berg. Id., ¶ 24.

C. Preliminary Approval of the Proposed Settlements

Based on this ample record, the Court found that the proposed settlements were the result of arms'-length negotiations. ECF No. 3302 at 4. After carefully reviewing the monetary terms, the Settlement Class definitions, and the releases provided for in both settlement agreements, the Court granted preliminary approval "as each is likely to be finally approved after the Fairness Hearing." Id. at 7.

D. Settlement Terms and Payment Schedule

Complete copies of both the StarKist Settlement Agreement and the Lion Settlement Agreement are attached to the Manifold Decl. as Exhibits 1 and 2, respectively. See ECF No. 3286-2 at 19-46 ("StarKist Settlement Agreement") and 47-72 ("Lion Settlement Agreement"). The Preliminary Approval Motion provided a detailed summary of the key terms in both settlements and is available (along with all the exhibits) on the Settlement Website. See ECF No. 3286-1 at 13-15.[4]

StarKist. The StarKist Settlement provides that StarKist will pay $130 million in cash over a period of time ranging from 30 days after preliminary approval (September 19, 2024) to 500 days after preliminary approval (January 6, 2026). ECF No. 3286-2 at 26, ¶ 1.24, App'x A; Manifold Decl., ¶14. The first payment of $32 million was paid on September 19, 2024, within 30 days after preliminary approval on August 21, 2024. Id. The second payment of $18 million from StarKist is due prior to the Fairness Hearing on November 22, 2024. ECF No. 3286-2 at 26, ¶ 1.24. The remaining settlement payments by StarKist are fixed on certain dates following preliminary approval. Id. For the Court's convenience, the payment schedule is set forth in Appendix A at the end of this Memorandum.

[4] Once the final approval motion is filed on or before November 15, 2024, the motion and all supporting papers also will be posted on the settlement website, concurrently with the filing. ECF No. 3302 at 19.

Lion Companies. Under the terms of the Lion Settlement Agreement, the Lion Companies have deposited $3 million in the Settlement Fund Escrow. ECF No. 3286-2 (Lion SA) at 54, ¶ 1.22; Manifold Decl., ¶15. The final $3 million will be deposited within 45 days after final approval of the settlement. Id., App'x A attached hereto.

The payment terms for the settlement monies and their timing is relevant here because, to share the burden of the delayed payment and the small risk of non-payment with the EPP Class, Class Counsel propose (see §IV.D. below) that the attorneys' fees awarded to them by the Court will be paid out to them over time in proportion to the monies actually received from the Settling Defendants.

IV. CLASS COUNSEL ARE ENTITLED TO A FEE AWARD

Counsel for the EPPs seek attorneys' fees in the amount of $48,320,739.40, which is 33% of the net settlement fund of $146,426,833.09 (after deducting expenses of $5,773,516.91). The requested fee is $10,338,011 less than the total lodestar of EPPs' counsel in the amount of $58,658,750.84 expended in diligent service of the Consumer Class over nine years and represents a negative multiplier of 0.82 on their professional time.

A. Applicable Legal Standard Governing the Award of Attorney Fees in Common Fund Cases

District courts may award reasonable attorney's fees and expenses from the settlement of a class action upon motion under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(h) and 54(d)(2). Counsel who successfully represent a class and produce a benefit for the class members are entitled to be compensated for their services. As the Supreme Court has held, "a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorneys' fee from a fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); see also Mills v. Elec. Auto-Lite Co., 396 U.S. 375, 393 (1970). In Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 900 n.16 (1984), the Supreme Court recognized that under the common fund doctrine, a reasonable fee may be based "on a percentage of the fund bestowed on the class." The purpose of the common fund doctrine is that "those who benefit from the creation of the fund should share the wealth with the lawyers whose skill and effort helped create it." In re Washington Pub. Power Supply Sys. Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1300 (9th Cir. 1994). See also Boeing, 444 U.S. at 478 ("persons who obtain the benefit of a lawsuit without contributing to its costs are unjustly enriched at the successful litigants' expense.")

The common fund doctrine is fully consistent with the strong public policy favoring vigorous enforcement of unfair competition laws. Courts have recognized the importance of private litigation as an effective enforcement of antitrust laws. See Pillsbury v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983). Antitrust laws are best served by ensuring that private action "will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws." Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. Int'l Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968).

In the Ninth Circuit, there are two primary methods used to calculate attorneys' fees: the lodestar method and the percentage-of-recovery method. "Whether to use one method over the other is in the court's discretion; however, the use of the percentage method in common fund cases appears to be dominant." Ahlman v. Barnes, No. SA-CV-20-835 (JGB), 2022 WL 16957837, at *4 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 12, 2022). See also Six (6) Mexican Workers v. Arizona Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1311 (9th Cir. 1990) (courts regularly award fees as a percent-of-the recovery in common fund cases). The percentage-of-the-fund method is generally recognized as the superior method of calculating attorneys' fees in common fund settlements like this one because it "aligns the interests of class counsel and the class, rather than rewarding attorneys for hours spent on cases, as the lodestar method does." In re Brooktree Secs. Litig., 915 F. Supp. 193, 196 (S.D. Cal. 1996).

Under the percentage-of-the-fund approach, the district court awards a percentage of the fund created by the attorneys' efforts as their attorneys' fee. Stanger v. China Elec. Motor, Inc., 812 F.3d 734, 738 (9th Cir. 2016) ("Stanger"). The percentage-of-recovery for fee computation purposes is based on the total amount of that fund made available. Boeing, 444 U.S. at 479-80. Cases in the Ninth Circuit often treat 25% as the benchmark percentage. See, e.g, In re Google Inc. Street View Elec. Commc'ns Litig., 21 F.4th 1102, 1120 (9th Cir. 2021); Asner v. SAG-AFTRA Health Fund, No. 2:20-cv-10914, 2023 WL 6984582, at *12 (C.D. Cal Oct. 19, 2023), reconsideration denied, 2023 WL 8529996 (Dec.7, 2023).

However, courts in this Circuit and elsewhere often permit an upward departure from the benchmark due to the results achieved, the inherent complexities of the legal issues involved, and the risks assumed by attorneys involved. See In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 2521, 2018 WL 4620695, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 20, 2018) ("As to the fifth factor, a fee award of one-third is within the range of awards in this Circuit."); see also Larsen v. Trader Joe's Co., No. 11-cv-05188, 2014 WL 3404531, at *9 (N.D. Cal. July 11, 2014) (citing multiple cases awarding fees of 32% or greater); In re Pac. Enters. Sec. Litig., 47 F.3d 373, 379 (9th Cir. 1995) (affirming award of one-third); Carlin v. DairyAmerica, Inc., 380 F. Supp. 3d 998, 1023 (E.D. Cal. 2019) (finding an attorney's fees award of one-third reasonable because of the case complexity, lengthy procedural history, and class wide results) (collecting cases awarding 33% in attorneys' fees).[5]

B. The Requested 33% Fee Award is Reasonable Under the Percentage-of-Recovery Method

In common fund cases, "[s]election of benchmark or any other rate must be supported by the findings that take into account all of the circumstances of the case." Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1048 (9th Cir. 2002); Ziegler v. GW

Pharm, PLC., No. 21-cv-1019, 2024 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52979, at *19 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 25, 2024)(awarding one-third).[6] Counsel for the EPPs seek a fee of 33% of the net settlement fund. While slightly higher than the 25% "benchmark," the $48,320,739.40 requested fee is $10,338,011.44 less than the total lodestar of EPP's counsel and represents a negative multiplier of 0.82 on their professional time expended over nine years.

In setting an appropriate percentage fee, courts typically analyze the following non-exhaustive factors: the results achieved for the class; the risks of litigation; the skill, experience, and performance of counsel (both sides); and the contingent nature of the fee. In re: Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1917, 2016 WL 4126533, at *4 n.8 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 3, 2016) ("CRT") (providing discussion on why these factors apply in the percentage of recovery context, in addition to lodestar analysis), dismissed sub nom. In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., No. 16-16368, 2017 WL 3468376 (9th Cir. Mar. 2, 2017); see also Stanger, 812 F. 3d at 740. All four factors support the 33% fee request here.

1. Class Counsel Achieved Excellent Results

Results are the primary factor in determining the reasonableness of an attorney's fee request. In re Omnivision Techs., Inc., 559 F. Supp. 2d 1036, 1046 (N.D. Cal. 2008). The total settlement benefit achieved for the Consumer Class is $152,200,000. By any measure, the indirect purchaser settlement achieved here represents an excellent result.

Regression modeling by the EPPs' expert, Dr. David Sunding, showed single damages of approximately $224 million for the entire EPP Class.[7] When trebled (which is not automatic in all state law indirect purchaser cases), this is approximately $672 million. Based on the maximum single damages of $224 million for the entire conspiracy period, a total recovery of $152.2 million is nearly 68% of the maximum single damages and over 20% of the maximum treble damages. It is larger than the penalty amount recovered by the government in the criminal case and substantially higher (in absolute dollars) than the recovery by the DPPs in their direct action against StarKist. See DPP Fee Brief at 14:1-6 (ECF No. 3312-1). The EPPs' recovery also is comparable to the DPPs' percentage recovery as well. See id.

Here, a 68% recovery of single damages is meaningful and exceeds the usual range of recovery of 30-40% which is typical. See Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 954 (9th Cir. 2009) (finding a settlement that was approximately 30% of the estimated damages before trebling fair, adequate, and reasonable); accord Edwards v. Nat'l Milk Producers Fed'n, No. 11-cv-04766-JSW, 2017 WL 3616638, at *3 (N.D. Cal. June 26, 2017) (finding a settlement representing approximately 30% of the total estimated single damages fair and reasonable). Obtaining nearly 68% of single damages, particularly in a case where single damages are as high as they were in this case, is an excellent result and warrants the approval of the requested 33% attorneys' fee award.

2. The Risks of Complex Litigation Were High

Class Counsel endured significant risk in pursuing this litigation. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1048 (degree of risk assumed and complexity relevant to reasonableness of fee request); Stanger, 812 F. 3d at 740 (including risk of litigation as a factor in determining whether requested fees are reasonable). Antitrust class actions are particularly complex matters and inherently risky. See In re NCAA Ath. Grant-In-Aid Cap Antitrust Litig., No. 4:14-cv-02758-CW, 2017 WL 6040065, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 6, 2017) (noting that "antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute. The legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome." (internal quotation omitted)).

With over 3,300 entries, the Court's docket reflects the complexities and risk of this nine-year old antitrust litigation, which survived multiple appeals, motions for reconsideration, Daubert challenges, evidentiary hearings, and disputes as to jury instructions, admissible evidence, and witnesses at trial. Although Class Counsel believe that the EPP Class claims had substantial merit, the risk and expense necessary to prosecute their claims through trial, and subsequent appeal were significant, and the inherent difficulties and delay in any final resolution for a multistate antitrust litigation like this case are substantial and well-known. See, e.g., Torrisi v. Tucson Elec. Power Co., 8 F.3d 1370, 1376 (9th Cir. 1993) (approving settlement based in part on "inherent risks of litigation").

Given the criminal convictions and guilty pleas by COSI, StarKist, and Bumble Bee, liability as to the plea period (November 2011 to December 2013) was strong. However, Bumble Bee was bankrupt and the claims against the parent companies were vigorously disputed and not part of the criminal investigation by the DOJ. StarKist and the Lion Companies vigorously disputed the scope, duration, and effect of the conspiracy. Manifold Decl., ¶41. The EPPs faced added complexities and risks at trial because, as consumers, they needed to prove liability for a multistate Cartwright Act Class claim and multiple individual state law claims as well as proving a pass-through of the overcharge to consumers. Those risks rise the longer litigation progresses. In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., No. M:07-cv-01827, 2012 WL 13209696, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 9, 2012) (finding counsel entitled to a fee award above the 25% benchmark because counsel had litigated for more than six years, which compounded the litigation risk).[8]

Another substantial risk was proving damages at trial through an expert economist, an inherently uncertain process fraught with conflicting expert testimony.

[8] The timing of the settlement and reduction of trial expense is also a relevant factor. See Koenig v. Lime Crime, Inc., No. CV 16-503 PSG (JEMX), 2018 WL 11358228, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 2, 2018) (finding that settlement minimized litigation cost and that going to trial would significantly increase cost and attorney's fees sought).

Achieving maximum damages was based on two key assumptions: the jury would believe the EPPs' expert (not the Defendants' expert) and would award full damages for the entire Class Period and for all the repealer act states. The reaction of a jury, or even a judge, to such complex and disputed expert testimony is highly unpredictable, and in a battle of the experts a jury could find either no damages or just a fraction of the damages sought. Dexter's LLC v. Gruma Corp., No. 23-cv-212, 2023 WL 8790268, at *4 (S.D. Cal. Dec. 19, 2023) ("'The court shall consider the vagaries of litigation and compare the significance of immediately recovery by way of the compromise to the mere possibility of relief in the future, after protracted and expensive litigation.'") (quoting Nat'l Rural Telecomms Coop. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 221 F.R.D. 523, 526 (C.D. Cal. 2004)).

Even a jury verdict is no assurance of success. Antitrust cases with complex expert econometric modeling and treble damages face the very real risks of reversal at trial, after verdict and on appeal, and this case was no exception. In re National Football League's Sunday Ticket Antitrust Litig., 2:15-md-02668-PSG, Judgment (C.D. Cal. Aug. 20, 2024) (ECF No. 1542), is a cautionary tale. From June 5 through June 26, 2024, the Court presided over a jury trial of antitrust claims against the NFL by a commercial class and a residential class of DirecTV subscribers to the NFL Sunday Ticket. Id. at 2. The NFL defendants moved for judgment under Rule 50(a) at the close of the plaintiffs' case, which the Court denied. Id. On June 27, 2024, the jury returned a verdict in Plaintiffs' favor, finding that NFL Defendants had violated the Sherman Act and awarded the commercial class nearly $100 million and the residential class over $4.6 billion in damages. Thereafter, based on the Court's own view of the plaintiffs' experts, the Court granted judgment for the defendants as a matter of law and vacated both verdicts. Id.

Even if successful at trial, the EPPs were concerned that post-trial events would threaten any verdict they obtained. In addition to post-trial motions, the EPPs faced a significant risk that they would be unable to collect or enforce their judgment against either Dongwon Industries Co., Ltd. or the Lion Companies, all foreign defendants who might not have sufficient assets in the United States to satisfy the judgment, and that StarKist might not have sufficient assets itself to satisfy the judgment. See Stanger, 812 F.3d at 740 (assessing reasonableness can include weighing "the risk of nonpayment" and "the difficulty and risks inherent in litigating against defendants in a [foreign nation]"). The litigation risks at trial, on appeal, and after a judgment were all very real here.

3. The Skill Required and the Quality of the Work Justify the Request

The experience, skill, and reputation of counsel also is relevant to the reasonableness of an attorney's fee request. See In re Animation Workers Antitrust Litig., No. 3:14-CV-4062 LHK, 2016 WL 6663005, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 11, 2016) (finding relevance in the plaintiff's nationally recognized antitrust and class action litigation in assessing counsel's fee petition); CRT, 2016 WL 4126533, at *4 (finding relevance in counsel's 30 years of experience in antitrust cases and the experience of the other participating law firms); LCD, 2012 WL 13209696, at *4 (finding that counsel's skills and experience in antitrust warranted an upward adjustment from the 25% benchmark).

This multistate antitrust litigation involved significant factual investigations, research, complex econometric modeling, representation of over 65 Class Representatives, coordination among multiple plaintiff groups, tens of millions of documents, 200 depositions and related criminal and bankruptcy proceedings. As a result of Counsel's skill and expertise, this case has become a model for econometric regression modeling in complex antitrust matters, particularly when it comes to what an expert has shown related to antitrust injury at class certification.[9]

The proposed settlements were hard-fought, negotiated at arm's-length against highly experienced opposing counsel and only achieved after extensive face-to-face settlement meetings and on the very eve of trial. ECF No. 3286-2, ¶¶ 17-24. The difficulty of achieving such a settlement against such experienced and motivated opposing counsel (Latham & Watkins and Sullivan Cromwell) is substantial. See, e.g. Fernandez v. Corelogic Credco, LLC, No. 20-cv-1262, 2024 WL 3209391, at * 16 (S.D. Cal. June 24, 2024) (analyzing whether defense counsel was "experienced and quality"); In re Heritage Bond Litig., No. 02-ML1475 DT, 2005 WL 1594403, at *20 (C.D. Cal. June 10, 2005) ("The Court also notes that the quality of opposing counsel is important in evaluating the quality of Plaintiff's counsel's work.")

Class Counsel is a nationally recognized antitrust and class action law firm with considerable expertise representing indirect purchaser plaintiff classes in antirust matters. Manifold Decl., ¶45. Such qualifications also should be taken into account when evaluating an appropriate fee award. See Fernandez, 2024 WL 3209391, at *16 (approving a fee award based in part on the experience of counsel); see also Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. 99-197, MDL 1285, 2001 WL 34312839, at *11 (D.D.C. July 16, 2001) ("[T]he attorneys involved are among some of the most highly skilled in the country with extensive experience in similar class action litigation . . . The experience, skill and professionalism of counsel and the performance and quality of opposing counsel all weigh in favor of the requested fee."). Therefore, the skill required and quality of work in the present case weigh in favor of the requested fee award. Manifold Decl., Ex. 2 at 4, 5 (Judge Berg stating, "[I[t is my recommendation that the District Court consider an upward departure from the presumptively reasonable benchmark fee of 25% in common fund cases" and finding that "an award at [one-third] is warranted.")

4. The Contingent Fee Nature and Financial Burden Carried by Class Counsel Also Supports the Fee Request

The contingent nature of Class Counsel's representation further supports the fee request. See In re Lithium Ion Batteries Antitrust Litig., No. 13-md-02420-YGR, 2018 WL 3064391, at *1 (N.D. Cal. May 16, 2018) ("attorneys' fees requested were reasonable and entirely contingent upon success – Plaintiffs' Counsel risked time and effort and advanced costs with no ultimate guarantee of compensation"). Similarly, Class Counsel litigated this case on a wholly contingent basis with no guarantee of payment and recovery only if they were successful. Courts recognize the need to reward plaintiffs' counsel because of the risk of non-payment they face.

Here, the Court should not overlook the real risks faced by Class Counsel in accepting a large scale complicated and time-consuming antitrust action. Antitrust cases inevitably require a tremendous investment of time, energy, and resources. Class Counsel were ready to make, and did make an investment of over $5.7 million, with the very real possibility of an unsuccessful outcome. The demands and risks involved can readily deter participation by traditional class action firms. The fact that significant financial burden was carried for such an extended period supports the reasonableness of the requested fee percentage. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1050 ("These burdens [years of litigation, significant financial expenses, foregoing other work] are relevant circumstances.") (citations omitted).

C. Lodestar Cross-Check Confirms that the Requested Fee Is Reasonable

Although not required, courts often apply a lodestar "cross-check" on the reasonableness of the fee calculated as a percentage of the fund. In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 949 (9th Cir. 2015); Johnson v. MGM Holdings, Inc., 943 F.3d 1239, 1242 (9th Cir. 2019) (encouraging the use of the cross-check method). Lodestar is generally the "number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation multiplied by a reasonable hourly rate." Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 433 (1983). To calculate lodestar, courts "multiply[] the number of hours the prevailing party reasonably expended on the litigation (as supported by adequate documentation) by a reasonable hourly rate for the region and for the experience of the lawyer." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949 (internal quotation omitted). "A lodestar cross-check does not require 'mathematical precision' or 'bean-counting,' and the court 'may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records." In re Optical Disk Drive Prods. Antitrust Litig., No. 10-md-02143-RS, 2021 WL 4124159, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 9, 2021) (citing In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 307 (3rd Cir. 2005)). Courts may "use a rough calculation of the lodestar as a cross-check to assess the reasonableness of the percentage award." Fernandez v. Victoria Secret Stores, LLC, No. CV 06-04149 MMM SHX, 2008 WL 8150856, at *9 (C.D. Cal. July 21, 2008).

The lodestar for the services performed by Class Counsel in this case results in a negative multiplier.[10] Class Counsel expended a total of 74,280.59 hours litigating this case following the appointment of lead counsel on March 24, 2016 for a total lodestar of $58,658,750.84. Rifkin Decl., ¶15. The total lodestar is greater than the percentage fee award that Class Counsel requests. The requested fee of 33% of $146,426,483 is $48,320,739.40, which is just 82% of their reduced lodestar. The negative multiplier of 0.82 supports the reasonableness of the percentage fee request. Schiller v. David's Bridal, Inc., No. 1:10-cv-00616, 2012 WL 2117001, at *23 (E. D. Cal. June 11, 2012) (acknowledging reasonableness when "[n]otwithstanding [a] reduction in hourly rates . . . the resulting lodestar . . . is still greater than the percentage fee award counsel requests.")

There is no question that the requested fee award of 33% is reasonable based on a lodestar cross-check.

D. Class Counsel Propose the Fee Award Be Net of Expenses and Paid Over Time In Proportion to Settlement Monies Received

Class Counsel propose that any fees be awarded net of expenses and be paid

[10] Wolf Haldenstein provides summary hour and lodestar information in the accompanying Declaration of Mark C. Rifkin. Firm-by-firm breakdown of hours and lodestar by timekeeper are included in the additional declarations filed concurrently herewith and submitted for each firm that completed work on this case. At the request of Class Counsel, two of the firms representing EPPs, Kralowec Law Group and Oliver Bell Law Group, that performed specific limited tasks in the Action agreed to submit their lodestars at hourly rates below their regularly hourly rates. The total lodestar for EPPs' counsel includes their time at those reduced hourly rates.

over time at the same rate as settlement monies are received from StarKist and the Lion Companies. See App'x B (attached hereto).

First, Class Counsel propose to "net out" and pay reasonable costs and expenses in the amount of $5,773,516.91, which consists of $4,155,027.67 in expenses previously awarded in the COSI partial settlement plus $1,618,489.24 in additional expenses now being sought (if they are approved by the Court) from the total value of the cash settlement of $152.2 million. Assuming the Court grants the additional expense request in full, the total amount of $5,773,516.91 in expenses will be deducted from the total EPP Class settlement amount of $152,200,000, leaving a net settlement fund of $146,426,483 (the "Net Settlement Amount"). EPPs' counsel seek an attorneys' fee award equal to 33% of the Net Settlement Amount, in the amount of $48,320,739.40.[11]

Second, subject to the Court's approval, Class Counsel will pay the attorneys' fee award over time to coincide with the receipt of settlement monies from StarKist and the Lion Companies in proportion to the settlement funds as they are actually received from Defendants. Rifkin Decl., ¶ 16. See App'x B. While not required, and while Class Counsel would be reasonably justified in taking their entire attorneys' fee from the cash on hand at the time of the fee award, Class Counsel are prepared to share the burden of the delayed payment with the EPP Class and believe the short delay and the small risk of non-payment is warranted here.

To date, Class Counsel have received $32,000,000 from StarKist and $3,000,000 from the Lion Companies, which they are holding together with the $12,000,000 already received from COSI[12] in escrow as a qualified settlement fund.

[11] If the Court awards less than $1,618,489.24 in additional expenses, Class Counsel will adjust the net calculation to reflect the expenses actually awarded by the Court and will calculate the 33% accordingly. Rifkin Decl., ¶20.

[12] The COSI Partial Settlement was for up to a maximum of $20 million. Of that amount, COSI unconditionally agreed to pay $15 million to the EPP Classes. To date, COSI has paid $10 million of that amount plus $2,042,830 for notice and (continued…)

Manifold Decl., ¶¶14-15. StarKist must pay another $18,000,000 into the Net Settlement Fund on the date of the Final Hearing. See App'x A. The remaining $70 million will be paid between November 23, 2024, and January 5, 2026. See id.

The StarKist Settlement Agreement and the Lion Settlement Agreement both permit Class Counsel to be paid attorneys' fees awarded by the Court five days following entry of the Court's award of fees and costs. See ECF No. 3286-2 at 40, ¶14.1; at 68, ¶14.1. At that time, assuming the Court promptly approves the settlement and grants the additional expense request in full, the total amount of settlement proceeds on hand will be approximately $65,042,830 (including interest earned on the settlement proceeds already paid to Class Counsel). Rifkin Decl., ¶ 21. After deducting $5,773,516.91 for allowed expenses, the resulting 33% attorneys' fee on that amount ($59,269,313.09) will be $19,558,873.30, which Class Counsel will be permitted to take five days following the Court's award of fees and costs as permitted by the Settlement Agreements.[13] ECF No. 3286-2 at 40, ¶14.1; at 68, ¶14.1. Thereafter, Class Counsel will withdraw a proportionate 33% share as their Court-awarded attorneys' fees from each subsequent payment from StarKist and the Lion Companies as they are received. Id.

V. EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND SHOULD BE REIMBURSED

Class Counsel respectfully request reimbursement for their additional litigation costs and expenses in the amount of $1,618,489.24 incurred to prosecute this case since May 2021. Rifkin Decl., ¶ 17. They also respectfully request that $206,379.11 administration costs. Manifold Decl., ¶ 8. The balance of the settlement payment from COSI is due to be paid on or before 30 days prior to distribution of the Net Settlement Fund to EPP Class members. Id. In addition, COSI has paid $206,379.11 in administration costs incurred in 2024, which will be returned to it. That sum will be credited against the settlement payment balance still owed to the EPP Classes under the payment terms of the settlement. Id., ¶¶9-10.

[13] That calculation will be changed proportionately if the Court reduces either the amount of expenses to reimburse or the amount of attorneys' fees to award to EPPs' counsel. Rifkin Decl., ¶ 20.

of that amount be returned to COSI in the form of a credit against its remaining payment obligation as reimbursement for administration costs that were common to both the COSI Partial Settlement and the proposed StarKist and Lion Companies settlements. Id; ECF 2386-2 at 2-4 (¶¶ 5-8). After approving the COSI Partial Settlement, the Court separately approved an Expense Award of $4,155,027.67. ECF No. 2872 at 2. Since that date, Class Counsel have advanced $1,618,489.24 in additional reasonable expenses for which they now seek reimbursement. Rifkin Decl., ¶17. Under the common fund doctrine, Class Counsel are entitled to be reimbursed for all reasonable out-of-pocket expenses and costs incurred to prosecute the claims and obtain a settlement. In re Apple Inc. Device Performance Litig., 50 F.4th 769, 785-86 (9th Cir. 2022) (fundamental purpose is to spread a party's burden of litigation expenses among those who benefitted); Fernandez, 2024 WL 3209391, at *21.

These expenses are in line with those approved by courts in this Circuit and are all the type of expenses routinely charged to hourly paying clients. See, e.g., In re LendingClub Sec. Litig., No. C 16-02627 WHA, 2018 WL 4586669, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 24, 2018) (expenses such as expert and consultant fees, court fees, travel and lodging costs, legal research fees, and copying expenses were reasonable and recoverable); Carlin, 380 F. Supp. 3d at 1023-24; Harris v. Marhoefer, 24 F.3d 16, 19 (9th Cir. 1994) (approving expenses normally charged to paying client). Details concerning the expenses incurred are listed in the accompanying declarations. Accordingly, Class Counsel respectfully requests that litigation costs and expenses incurred since May 2021 in the amount of $1,618,489.24 be reimbursed.

VI. SERVICE AWARDS SHOULD BE APPROVED

Throughout nine years of litigation, the individual Class Representatives remained devoted to their duties and actively participated in the litigation. EPPs request a total Service Award in the amount of $294,000. The monies will be distributed to the sixty-seven (67) Class Representatives and three Illinois plaintiffs based on a tier system reflecting the extent of time and work that each put into the case. See ECF No. 3286-2, ¶¶ 25-29. A chart of the Tier Breakdown by Class Representative is attached hereto as App'x C for the convenience of the Court and Settlement Class Members. The requested Service Award amount is insignificant (0.19%) in light of the Total Benefit Amount ($152.2 million).

The requested tiered Service Awards reflect the Class Representatives' specific contributions to this case. All of the forty-five (45) Class Representatives who participated in discovery and provided multiple Class standing declarations will receive a service award of $3,000 (Tier 1) for a total of $135,000. Id. For the fourteen (14) Class Representatives who sat for a deposition as part of the class certification process, the higher award of $6,000 is requested for a total of $84,000. Id. For the eight (8) Class Representatives who were deposed more than once (EPP Drew Gorman), functioned as a plaintiff representative in the Bumble Bee bankruptcy proceedings or were previously deposed and then prepped and prepared to appear at trial, the highest award of $9,000 is appropriate for a total of $72,000. Id.

Courts routinely grant service awards for class representatives. Rodriguez, 563 F.3d at 958-59. Incentive awards are intended to compensate class representatives for work done on behalf of the class, to make up for financial or reputational risk undertaken in bringing the action, and to recognize their willingness to function as private attorneys general. Id. There is no bright line minimum or maximum for service awards, they "typically range from $2,000 to $10,000." Bellinghausen v. Tractor Supply Co., 306 F.R.D. 245, 267 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (collecting cases discussing award amounts); Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 943 (affirming approval of "incentive awards of $5,000 each for nine class representatives" as "well within the usual norms of 'modest compensation' paid to class representatives." (citations omitted)). The Service Awards requested are well within the usual norms and should be approved.

VII. THE COURT SHOULD APPROVE THE REASONABLE SETLEMENT ADMINISTRATION AND NOTICE COSTS

Courts allow for reimbursement of reasonable settlement administration fees and costs and any costs associated with providing class notice. See Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 953. The Settlement Notice Plan, approved by the Court, was robust and provided notice (in various forms) to Settlement Class Members via email, U.S. Mail, posting on the Settlement Website and by digital and print publication. ECF No. 3313-1, ¶¶4-20; ECF No. 3302 at 12-19. The digital and print efforts alone reached more than 70% of potential Settlement Class Members. Id., ¶26.

The costs of a robust notice program to a large consumer class is substantial. For this reason, StarKist advanced $1 million and Lion Companies agreed to pay up to $200,000 to cover the costs of notice administration. Manifold Decl., ¶59. ECF No. 3302 at 15 ("an interim distribution of $1.2 million for notice costs prior to the Fairness Hearing is appropriate and is approved under the terms provided in the Settlement Agreements"). As of October 18, 2024, JND has incurred reasonable expenses in the amount of $726,702.30, slightly below the estimates provided to the Court. Manifold Decl., ¶59. As permitted by the terms of settlements agreements, Class Counsel has paid JND for these reasonable costs of notice administration. Id. ECF No. 3302 at 15; ECF No. 3286-2 at 29, ¶5.3 and at 58, ¶5.3 (advanced Notice Costs not recoverable by the Settling Defendants).

JND has provided an estimate for the costs of processing claims, running fraud analysis, and dispersing the Distribution Funds of $2.1 million to $5.8 million. ECF No. 3302 at 19; ECF No. 3286-2 at 15-16, ¶41. The range is dependent on the number of claims received. Id. For example, the estimated range of processing from 500,000 to 2,000,000 claims could range from $1.3 million or over $5 million. Id. Settlement Class Counsel request permission to pay the periodic costs and expenses of claims processing out of the Settlement Fund and, due to the delayed distribution of the Settlement Funds to authorized claimants, will file periodic reports as directed by the Court to update the Court as to the status and estimated costs for the Distribution Plan.

VIII. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the EPPs respectfully request that, in conjunction with Final Approval of the proposed settlements, the Court grant their request for attorneys' fees in the amount of $48,320,739.40, award reimbursement of their additional litigation expenses in the amount of $1,618,489.24, and approve service awards to the named Class Representatives in the total amount of $294,000.

Court-appointed co-lead class counsel Susman Godfrey L.L.P. and Hausfeld LLP ("Class Counsel") respectfully submit this memorandum in support of the OTC Plaintiffs' application for an award of attorneys' fees, expenses, and class representative service awards on their $90 million settlement with Defendants MUFG Bank, Ltd., The Norinchukin Bank, and Société Générale (the "Settlement").

Introduction

This litigation has been hard-fought by Class Counsel for nearly twelve years. Despite Defendants' repeated attempts to have this case dismiss and to defeat class certification, OTC Plaintiffs have persevered and repeatedly achieved outstanding results for the class. Because of Class Counsel's zealous pursuit of this case, OTC Plaintiffs recently achieved a fifth settlement, shortly followed by a sixth, and recovered nearly $200 million more for the class.

This settlement comes on top of OTC Plaintiffs' $590 million in prior settlements—$120 million from Barclays, $130 million from Citibank, $100 million from HSBC; and $240 million from Deutsche Bank. Two months after reaching this Settlement, OTC Plaintiffs reached yet another combined settlement, totaling $101 million, with four more defendants, namely Lloyds, Rabobank, RBC, and Portigon.

These settlements represent a tremendous recovery for the class: $680 million through the date of this Settlement and $781 million through the date of the subsequent settlement.

OTC Plaintiffs now request an interim award of attorneys' fees from the Settlement with MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen of 25% of the net settlement fund after the deduction of litigation expenses.[1] The 25% interim fee award OTC Plaintiffs request here is well within the range of interim awards regularly granted in comparable multi-defendant antitrust class actions and will, we respectfully submit, fairly compensate Class Counsel for the excellent result they have obtained for the OTC class. This is the same percentage the Court awarded as attorneys' fees from the Exchange Based Plaintiffs' (EBPs) settlements and a lower percentage than the Court awarded on the Lender and Non-Defendant OTC Plaintiffs' settlements. See In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instr. Antitrust Litig. ("EBP Fee Op."), 2020 WL 6891417, at *4–5 (S.D.N.Y. 2020). OTC Plaintiffs' request would result in a lodestar multiplier of 1.56, at the low end of the range awarded in comparable actions.

OTC Plaintiffs additionally seek reimbursement of $2,512,026.10 in unreimbursed costs and expenses incurred by Class Counsel on behalf of the OTC Class between February 15, 2018, the date of the HSBC Settlement (the cut off date for Class Counsel's last reimbursement request) and May 12, 2023 (the date of this Settlement). "[C]ourts in the Second Circuit normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course." ECF 2683, at 2 (alteration in original) (quoting In re IMAX Sec. Litig., 2012 WL 3133476, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. 2012)).

Argument

I. Class Counsel's Fee Request Is Fair and Reasonable

A. Class Counsel Are Entitled to Fees from the Common Fund

"[A] lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980). This principle applies to class action settlements, including interim settlements. See In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *9 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2012) ("Where a class action settlement creates a common fund the plaintiffs' attorneys are entitled to a reasonable fee—set by the court—to be taken from the fund. Fees can be awarded based on an interim settlement fund.").

B. The Requested Fee Is Fair and Reasonable Under the Percentage Method

The Second Circuit's preferred method for calculating a fair and reasonable attorneys' fee is to award "some percentage of the recovery." Goldberger v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 47 (2d Cir. 2000). "The trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method" because it "directly aligns the interests of the class and its counsel and provides a powerful incentive for the efficient prosecution and early resolution of litigation.'" Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir. 2005). This principle and preference hold equally true for interim fee awards drawn from partial settlements with one or more defendants in a multi-defendant action. See In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *9 (noting that "[f]ees can be awarded based on an interim settlement" and recounting the Second Circuit's "trend" of "utiliz[ing] the percentage method" with the lodestar/multiplier method as a cross-check).

The percentage method, by tying the fee award to the result achieved for the class, "allows courts to award fees from the fund 'in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure,'" Sullivan v. DB Invs., Inc., 667 F.3d 273, 330 (3d Cir. 2011); thus, Class Counsel's request also corresponds neatly to the settlement from which it arises. This Settlement—which provides $90 million in cash on top of OTC Plaintiffs' $590 million in prior settlements—is by any measure a substantially favorable result for the OTC Class. As the primary measure of Class Counsel's success is the recovery they have achieved for the OTC Class, granting Class Counsel's application for 25% of that favorable result provides a proportionate and appropriate reward for Class Counsel's efforts. See Laydon I, infra, slip op. ¶ 5(b)-(c), (f) (awarding "fair, reasonable, appropriate" fee of 25% of partial settlement fund, noting that "in the absence of a settlement, [the claims against the settling defendants] would have involved lengthy proceedings with uncertain resolution," and recognizing that "[h]ad Plaintiffs' Counsel not achieved the Settlements, a risk would remain that Plaintiffs and the

1. OTC Plaintiffs' Requested Fee Aligns with Attorneys' Fee Awards in Other Large Antitrust Cases

Courts regularly make successive interim fee awards over the life of a multi-defendant antitrust class action at percentages equivalent to and higher than the 25% requested by Class Counsel here. Table 1 below describes fee awards made in a number of recent antitrust class actions—all cases where these awards were made from partial settlements—in descending order by size of the settlement fund. OTC Plaintiffs' current application for 25% of a $90 million common fund is well within the range of these other interim awards in recent antitrust cases.

Fee awards reaching up to one-third of the proceeds of partial settlements are consistent with fee awards granted in class actions generally, where "fees that are 30 percent or greater" are "routine[]." Velez v. Novartis, 2010 WL 4877852, at *21 (S.D.N.Y. 2010).[3]

[2] In Freight Forwarders I, Judge Gleeson granted an interim fee award of 15% of the initial settlement fund, rejecting class counsel's request for 33-1/3% of that fund. Class counsel later requested and received 25% of the subsequent settlement funds in Freight Forwarders II and III.

[3] See also Hyun v. Ippudo USA Holdings, 2016 WL 1222347, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 24, 2016) ("Fee awards representing one third of the total recovery are common in this District."). This benchmark furthermore holds true for settlements with large common funds like this one. See In re Initial Public Offering Secs. Litig., 671 F. Supp. 2d

Plus, the 25% fee requested here is significantly less than Class Counsel could obtain on the open market. For example, Susman Godfrey regularly takes high-stakes non-class commercial cases on a contingent fee basis, and typically negotiates contingent fee arrangements with individual non-class plaintiff clients equal to 40% of the gross sum recovered in cases where the firm advances expenses, with percentage increases based on the milestones reached at the time of settlement. See ECF 2280 ¶ 7. "This fact is highly relevant to determining the appropriateness of the award because the Court's ultimate task is to 'approximate the reasonable fee that a competitive market would bear.'" Fleisher v. Phoenix Life Ins. Co., 2015 WL 10847814, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (quoting Johnson v. City of New York, 2010 WL 5818290, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. 2010)); accord In re Continental Ill. Secs. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 572 (7th Cir. 1992) ("The class counsel are entitled to the fee they would have received had they handled a similar suit on a contingent fee basis, with a similar outcome, for a paying client.").

2. OTC Plaintiffs' Requested Fee Is Consistent with Other Libor Attorneys' Fee Awards

OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee of 25% of the net settlement fund is consistent with this Court's awards in other Libor cases. The Court awarded 25% of the net $187 million settlement fund from EBPs' settlements with seven defendants in November 2020. See EBP Fee Op., 2020 WL 6891417, at *5; see also Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Bank of Am. Corp., 2018 WL 6250657, at *1 (awarding 26% of a net settlement fund on $504.5 million in settlements in the ISDA fix antitrust litigation). The Court awarded 28.06% of the Non-Defendant OTC Plaintiffs'

467, 516 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (awarding plaintiffs' counsel one-third of the net settlement fund of $170 million); In re Priceline.com, Inc. Secs. Litig., 2007 WL 2115592, at *4 (D. Conn. July 20, 2007) (awarding 30% of an $80 million settlement); In re Deutsche Telekom AG Secs. Litig., 2005 WL 7984326, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. June 14, 2005) (Buchwald, J.) (awarding attorneys' fees of 28% of a $120 million settlement); Kurzweil v. Philip Morris Companies, Inc., 1999 WL 1076105, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 1999) (awarding class counsel 30% of a $123 million settlement); In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 394 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (awarding plaintiffs' counsel attorneys' fees of 27.5% of a $116.6 million settlement).

$21.775 million settlement fund. Id. at *4 (citing ECF 3185). The Court awarded 29.38% and 28.08% in fees from the Lender Plaintiffs' $31 million and $4 million settlement funds, respectively. See id. at *4 (citing ECF 2777 and 3097).

The Court awarded 18.49% and 18.5% of the net settlement fund for OTC Plaintiffs' prior settlements. See ECF 2683 at 9–10; ECF 2745. OTC Plaintiffs respectfully submit that a higher percentage award from this Settlement is appropriate for three reasons. First, an award of 25% of the net settlement fund from the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen settlement would result in a reasonable aggregate percentage award of attorneys' fees from all OTC settlements to date. Combined with the Court's earlier attorneys' fees awards, OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee here would result in a combined fee award of 19.4% of the combined $680 million in settlement funds through the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen settlement. That aggregate fee award is comparable to the Court's prior awards of 18.49% and 18.5% from the Barclays–Citi and Deutsche Bank–HSBC settlements. See Barclays–Citi OTC Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *4.

Second, OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee represents a lower lodestar multiplier (1.56) than OTC Plaintiffs' prior fee awards (1.65 for Barclays–Citi and 3.23 for Deutsche Bank–HSBC). See ECF 2705 at 10; ECF 2745; OTC Barclays-Citi Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *4. This relatively low lodestar multiplier reflects Class Counsel's significant investment of attorney time in prosecuting this action by, among other things, successful appealing the dismissal of all three settling Defendants on personal jurisdiction grounds, reviewing 3.5 million documents produced by Defendants, including the painstaking review of more than 126,000 audio recordings of defendants' phone calls, along with continued litigation in this Court during that appeal and after the Second Circuit's decision. See Joint Decl. ¶ 18.[4] That investment of attorney time ensured Class Counsel were well prepared to pursue the class's claims if and when the Second Circuit ruled in their favor and litigation in this Court re-commenced against the foreign bank defendants. See Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (holding that "the time and labor expended by counsel" and "the magnitude and complexities of the litigation" are factors the Court should consider in evaluating the reasonableness of a requested fee).

On top of that, Class Counsel's increased lodestar—and decreased lodestar multiplier—demonstrates that the premise justifying the so-called "sliding scale" approach simply does not apply to this case. The "sliding scale" approach (i.e., "awarding a smaller percentage for fees as the size of the settlement fund increases") is premised on the concern that "economies of scale could cause windfalls in common fund cases." OTC Barclays–Citi Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *3 (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 120). Class Counsel's increased lodestar, and correspondingly decreased lodestar multiplier, show that granting Class Counsel's requested fee would result in no such "windfall" here. See 5 William Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:81 (6th ed.) (Westlaw 2023) ("Given that a high multiplier is the best measuring stick of a windfall, courts ought to use the high multiplier to police windfalls, regardless of the size of the fund, rather than use the size of the fund as a policing mechanism."). The complexity of this case, reinforced by the Court's statement in Libor VII, 299 F. Supp. 3d 430, 607 n.189 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) that its "decision to certify a class as to OTC plaintiffs' antitrust claims rests on the action in its current form, including on OTC plaintiffs' allegations of a sixteen-bank conspiracy to suppress LIBOR," have meant that achieving additional settlements by pursuing this case through each subsequent phase of the case against the non-settling Defendants has required Class

[4] The Joint Declaration of William C. Carmody and Michael D. Hausfeld in Support of OTC Plaintiffs' Motion for

Counsel to continue to invest substantial time and resources to prosecute the claims of the OTC Class. Hence, far from resulting in a "windfall," awarding 25% of the fund would appropriately reward Class Counsel for that investment of time in proportion to the favorable result Class Counsel have obtained for the class as a result of their efforts.

Third, an award of 25% of the net settlement fund would result in 80.87% of all OTC settlement funds being distributed to class members—representing an increased percentage recovery compared to the recovery for the class from the Barclays–Citi and Deutsche Bank–HSBC settlements. As the Court explained in awarding fees from the Barclays–Citi settlement fund: "Given these amounts of expense reimbursements, incentive awards, and attorneys' fees, the class writ large will receive 76.62% of the aggregate settlement amounts (prior to other expenses, such as those incurred in providing notice to the classes) – a percentage that we find comports with public policy notions of allowing the class, rather than class counsel, to receive a sufficiently significant share of the recovery." OTC Barclays-Citi Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *4; ECF 2705 at 2 (noting the fee award from the DB–HSBC settlements would "result in the class receiving 79.34% of the aggregate settlement amounts for all settlements to date").

3. Empirical Research on Attorneys' Fee Awards Supports OTC Plaintiffs' Requested Fee

OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee is also consistent with empirical research on attorneys' fee awards. A recent empirical study of contingent fee arrangements negotiated by sophisticated clients in non-class cases and class cases where the class representatives and members were sophisticated corporate parties concluded that "[d]ata from sophisticated clients shows both that they choose to pay fixed one-third percentages or even higher escalating percentages based on litigation maturity just like unsophisticated clients do, and they do so even in the most enormous cases." Brian T. Fitzpatrick, A Fiduciary's Guide to Awarding Fees in Class Actions, 90 Fordham L. Rev. 1151, 1170 (2021). The most recent empirical study of fee awards, and one previously cited by this Court, found an average percentile of 22.3% in the highest decile of settlements studied (those greater than $67.5 million). See Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey Miller, Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009–2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 948 (2017). While the Court has previously cited older empirical studies with a lower mean percentage fee award, those studies also found a large standard deviation and the Court thus concluded based on them in the EBP fee opinion that "a reasonable fee for EBP Class Counsel would fall somewhere between approximately 17% and 25% of the settlement fund." See EBP Fee Op., 2020 WL 6891417, at *3, *4 (citing Brian T. Fitzpatrick, An Empirical Study of Class Action Settlements and Their Fee Awards, 7 J. Empirical Legal Stud. 811, 837–39 (2010) and 4 William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:81 fig.2 (5th ed.)).

C. The Requested Fee Is Reasonable Under Lodestar "Crosscheck"

The reasonableness of Class Counsel's requested fee is confirmed by the lodestar "crosscheck," which tests the reasonableness of a percentage method–based fee. See Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50. The "lodestar" is calculated by multiplying the number of hours expended on the litigation by each particular attorney or firm professional by their current hourly rate, and totaling the amounts for all timekeepers.[5] When using this lodestar to crosscheck Class Counsel's requested award, courts employ a multiplier that "represents the risk of the litigation, the complexity of the issues, the contingent nature of the engagement, the skill of the attorneys, and other factors." In re Glob. Crossing Sec. & ERISA Litig., 225 F.R.D. 436, 468 (S.D.N.Y.

2004) (citing Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47).

Class Counsel have spent over 121,000 hours, with a lodestar of $82,265,759, from the inception of this matter through May 12, 2023.[6] See Joint Decl. ¶ 52. That time represents Class Counsel's tireless efforts in investigating and prosecuting the OTC Plaintiffs' claims over a nearly twelve-year period. By way of comparison, in the Yen LIBOR cases, class counsel reported a total lodestar of $54,532,316.55, corresponding to 105,775.61 hours worked, before any briefing on class certification. See Laydon II Br. at 29. Compared to those figures, Class Counsel's lodestar at the far more advanced stage of this case is presumptively reasonable.

This multiplier falls at the lower end of the range considered reasonable by courts in the Second Circuit.[8]

[6] In addition to Class Counsel, six other firms have assisted in this litigation. See Joint Decl. ¶¶ 50-51. Four firms performed work for the benefit of the OTC Class by helping in evaluation of the plan of distribution. See id. ¶¶ 28, 50. Two other firms representing class representatives have also performed work related to those representations as well as other work at the direction of Class Counsel. See id. ¶ 51. These firms' time is not included in the lodestar reported in this application. OTC Plaintiffs request that the Court grant Class Counsel authority to allocate and distribute any attorneys' fees and expenses awarded from the settlement funds among counsel who performed work on behalf of OTC Plaintiffs as is customary in class action litigation.

[8] See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 123 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding a multiplier of 3.5 to be reasonable in an antitrust class action); In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig., 2016 WL 2731524, at *16 (S.D.N.Y. April 26, 2016) (approving fee award in complex antitrust action where lodestar was "just over 6"); Colgate, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 353 (holding a multiplier of 5 was "on the high end" but "not unreasonable"); Beckman v. KeyBank N.A., 293 F.R.D. 467, 481 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (approving an award of 33% of the common fund, representing a multiplier of 6.3, and explaining that "[c]ourts regularly award lodestar multipliers of up to eight times the Class counsel's requested fee award would result in a lower lodestar multiplier than the average reported in empirical studies. This Court previously noted that "one study identifies an average multiplier of 3.18 for settlements above $175.5 million and a second study identifies an average multiplier of 2.39 for settlements above $44.6 million." ECF 2683 at 11 (citing 4 William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:89 tbl. 2). Professor Eisenberg's 2017 study found an average multiplier of 2.72 for cases with a settlement fund of greater than $75 million. See Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey Miller, Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009–2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 967 tbl.13 (2017).

Further, all the work performed by Class Counsel through May 12, 2023, contributed to Class Counsel's analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the claims against MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen, and furthered Class Counsel's ability to negotiate a favorable settlement. As the Court recognized at the fairness hearing for the settlement with Barclays, OTC Plaintiffs have "alleged a conspiracy" and "the same action against everybody." ECF 2352-1, Tr. 66:23-24. Class Counsel's efforts to strengthen the OTC Plaintiffs' litigation position as to all Defendants, including MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen. These efforts—which included motion practice, appeals, discovery efforts, and document review—generally involved all of the Defendants or had case-wide implications. Moreover, all of the work performed by Class Counsel was undertaken to benefit the same OTC Class. See ECF 2863 at 3 ("Further, attribution of these expenses to Barclays and Citi is appropriate – even though some portion undoubtedly pertains to other defendants also – given the joint and several liability in this action."). Thus, lodestar, and in some cases, even higher multipliers"); Sewell v. Bovis Lend Lease, Inc., 2012 WL 1320124, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 16, 2012) ("Courts commonly award lodestar multipliers between two and six."); Johnson v. Brennan, 2011 WL 4357376, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 16, 2011) ("Courts routinely award counsel two to three times lodestar in class action settlements."); In re Lloyd's Am. Trust Fund Litig., 2002 WL 31663577, at *27 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 26, 2002) ("Here, the resulting multiplier of 2.09 is at the lower end of the range of multipliers awarded by courts within the Second Circuit.").

courts consider cumulatively, when performing the lodestar crosscheck, all of class counsel's time from the beginning of an action. See supra note 7.[9]

Finally, Class Counsel's hourly rates are also reasonable. The rates for Class Counsel who billed meaningful time to this case are Class Counsel's standard hourly rates and are regularly charged to (and paid by) clients who engage Class Counsel on an hourly basis. Joint Decl. ¶¶ 46-47; Luciano v. Olsten Corp., 109 F.3d 111, 115 (2d Cir. 1997) ("The 'lodestar' figure should be in line with those [rates] prevailing in the community for similar services by lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience, and reputation."). Class Counsel's hourly rates are market rates for plaintiff- and defense-side law firms of similar quality litigating matters of similar complexity and magnitude in New York City.[10] Thus, OTC Plaintiffs' request for an award of 25% of the net settlement fund is fair and reasonable using a lodestar multiplier. Colgate, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 353.

D. The Goldberger Factors Support the Requested Fee Award

Under either the percentage method or the lodestar multiplier approach, the "'Goldberger factors' ultimately determine the reasonableness of a common fund fee," Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 121. The Goldberger factors, which the Court weighs in its discretion, are:

> (1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation . . . ; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy

[9] See also Auto Parts II, 2017 WL 3525415, at *4 n.2 ("The Court rejects the argument . . . that time included with the Round 1 Settlement fee request should not be included in the lodestar cross-check for the Round 2 Settlements. In calculating the lodestar for purposes of the cross-check, it would be impractical to compartmentalize and isolate the work that EPPs' counsel did in any particular case at any particular time because all of their work assisted in achieving all of the settlements and has provided and will continue to provide a significant benefit to all of the EPPs classes.").

[10] See Sara Randazzo & Jacqueline Palank, Legal Fees Cross New Mark: $1,500 an Hour, The Wall Street Journal, Feb. 16, 2016 (finding that "[f]or lawyers at the very top of th[e] fields [of antitrust and high-stakes litigation and appeals], hourly rates can hit $1,800 or even $1,950" and citing a 2011 article and observing that the increases in hourly rates "mak[e] the $1,000-an-hour legal fees that once seemed so steep look quaint by comparison"), available at https://www.wsj.com/articles/legal-fees-reach-new-pinnacle-1-500-an-hour-1454960708.

Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (citation omitted). Courts regularly apply the Goldberger factors when considering applications for interim awards. See, e.g., In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *9-10. Each of these factors confirms the requested fee is reasonable.

1. Time & Labor Expended by Counsel (Goldberger Factor 1)

The first Goldberger factor—the "time and labor expended by counsel"—strongly supports approval of the requested fee. Class Counsel have spent over 121,000 hours prosecuting this case and, as discussed above, the lodestar multiplier is within the range approved by courts in this Circuit. The substantial time devoted to this litigation over nearly twelve years reflects the immense effort Class Counsel have exerted in prosecuting this case and is reasonable, particularly given the complex nature of this action. Class Counsel have, among other things:

- Conducted an initial investigation of this case to develop the facts and legal theories that formed the basis of the allegations in the complaint and drafted and filed the complaint, amended complaint, second amended complaint, proposed third amended complaint, third amended complaint, and fourth amended complaint.

- Defended the complaint against eight Rule 12(b) motions to dismiss and Defendants' opposition to the OTC Plaintiffs' motions for leave to amend the complaint.

- Written scores of letters to the Court, on numerous matters, including providing supplemental authority, addressing discovery disputes, and presenting scheduling issues.

- Appealed the dismissal of the OTC Plaintiffs' antitrust claims to the Second Circuit, and successfully filed an amicus brief to the Supreme Court on an issue of appellate jurisdiction.

- Attended multiple full-day, in-person mediation sessions conducted by highly experienced mediators, preceded by mediation briefing, to achieve the Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC Settlements.

- Successfully briefed motions for preliminary and final approval of the Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC Settlements and worked with experts to develop a comprehensive notice program and plan of distribution.

- Reviewed more than 3.5 million documents produced by the Defendants and third parties, as well as trial transcripts and evidence from civil and criminal trials in the United States and the United Kingdom relating to LIBOR manipulation.

- Listened to more than 125,000 audio files produced by the defendants.

- Drafted discovery requests to the Defendants for trading, cash-flow, and borrowing data on the Defendants' financial instruments and participated in scores of meet and confers to obtain the production of that data.

- Diligently pursued discovery from four third-party brokers that formed an important component of the OTC Plaintiffs' expert witness analysis.

- Defended six 30(b)(6) depositions of the named plaintiffs; defended three depositions of OTC Plaintiffs' experts; conducted two depositions of the Defendants' experts.

- Worked with the OTC Plaintiffs' expert witnesses to draft extensive 30(b)(6) notices setting out questions essential to understanding the trade, cash-flow, and borrowing data produced by the defendants.

- Assisted the OTC Plaintiffs' economic experts in analyzing 686 gigabytes of data and developing two expert witness reports totaling more than 300 pages.

- Prepared more than sixty pages of briefing, more than sixty pages of attorney declarations, and 149 exhibits in support of the OTC Plaintiffs' motion for class certification and vigorously defended against challenges thereto by the defendants.

- Attended a full-day, in-person mediation session conducted by the Honorable Layn Phillips, preceded by mediation briefing, and followed by extensive telephonic discussions and negotiations, to achieve the Citibank Settlement.

- Leveraged experience from the Barclays Settlement to successfully brief a motion for preliminary approval of the Citibank Settlement and adapt previously successful notice program for this second settlement.

- Attended a full-day, in-person mediation session conducted by the Honorable Layn Phillips, preceded by mediation briefing, and followed by extensive telephonic discussions and negotiations, to achieve the Deutsche Bank Settlement.

- Attended a full-day, in-person mediation session conducted by the Honorable Layn Phillips, preceded by mediation briefing, and followed by extensive telephonic discussions and negotiations, to achieve the HSBC Settlement.

- Successfully briefed motions for preliminary and final approval of both the Deutsche Bank and HSBC Settlements and designed a joint notice program for those two settlements as well as for the litigation class that saved substantial expense to the class.

- Collected, reviewed, and produced to the Defendants thousands of pages of documents from the named plaintiffs, and prepared supplemental class certification briefing regarding one named plaintiff's adequacy as a class representative.

- Appealed the dismissal of the OTC Plaintiffs' antitrust claims on personal jurisdiction grounds to the Second Circuit, including supplemental briefing on the Second Circuit's decision in Schwab and the Supreme Court's decision in Ford Motor Co. v. Montana 8th Judicial Dist., No. 19-368.

- Briefed disputed issues concerning the case schedule after the Second Circuit's personal jurisdiction ruling and negotiated with Liaison Counsel for Defendants a proposed schedule for merits discovery, expert reports, class certification as to the foreign-bank Defendants, and summary judgment briefing.

- Drafted with the Direct-Action Plaintiffs a consolidated set of document requests to all defendants for merits discovery on "Upstream" issues.

- Worked with experts and the claims administrator to administer the Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC settlement funds and briefed the motion for distribution resulting in the successful distribution of those settlement funds to the members of the OTC Class.

- Proposed and negotiated search terms and custodians for merits discovery on "Upstream" issues with the twelve non-settling OTC Defendants and briefed a motion to compel on disputed search terms and custodians.

- Engaged in extensive negotiations and discussions mediated by the Honorable Layn Phillips to achieve the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen Settlement and then the Lloyds, Rabobank, RBC, and Portigon Settlement.

- Briefed a motion for preliminary approval of this Settlement and worked with experts to develop a comprehensive notice program and plan of distribution that leverages prior claims submissions and extensive prior claims administration work.

In sum, Class Counsel have devoted considerable time and financial resources in prosecuting this case on behalf of the OTC Class.

2. Magnitude & Complexity of the Litigation (Goldberger Factor 2)

The second Goldberger factor—"the magnitude and complexities of the litigation"—also strongly supports approval of the requested fee. No other case better embodies the challenges faced by plaintiffs in antitrust litigation than this one. See Virgin Atl. Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 263 (2d Cir. 2011) (noting the "factual complexities of antitrust cases"); Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 118 ("Federal antitrust cases are complicated, lengthy, and bitterly fought."); In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *4 ("Federal antitrust cases are complicated lengthy, and bitterly fought, as well as costly."). This action was initially filed nearly twelve years ago and has undergone multiple rounds of briefing on eight motions to dismiss, a motion for judgment on the pleadings, and an opposition to leave to amend that functioned as the equivalent to a motion to dismiss.

Meanwhile, the briefing of the OTC Plaintiffs' successful motion for class certification was extensive, and OTC Plaintiffs successfully opposed Defendants' Rule 23(f) petition. After class certification, the OTC Plaintiffs faced (and continue to face) the monumental task of completing merits discovery, including additional expert discovery, summary judgment briefing, class certification briefing as to the foreign bank Defendants, and ultimately a trial likely lasting weeks (if not months) from which the losing party will almost certainly appeal. See, e.g., In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *4 ("This litigation has been pending since 2005 and has involved the production of thousands of documents, at least 17 fact witness depositions, expert discovery, and extensive motion practice. The Certified Classes are scheduled for a trial against the non-settling defendants that is expected to take at least three weeks.").

3. Risk of the Litigation (Goldberger Factor 3)

The third Goldberger factor—the "risk of the litigation"—also strongly supports approval of the requested fee. The Second Circuit has identified "the risk of success as perhaps the foremost factor to be considered in determining [a reasonable fee award]." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54. Class Counsel have taken on and overcome significant risks in this litigation.

a. Contingency Risk

"No one expects a lawyer whose compensation is contingent upon his success to charge, when successful, as little as he would charge a client who in advance had agreed to pay for his services, regardless of success." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *21 (quoting City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 470 (2d Cir. 1974)). Here, OTC Counsel have invested more than 121,000 hours of time with a lodestar value of more than $82 million without any guarantee they would be compensated for their continued efforts or reimbursed for any of the millions of dollars in litigation expenses they have incurred. See In re High-Crush Ptrs. L.P. Secs. Litig., 2014 WL 7323417, at *16 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2014) ("Lead Counsel undertook the representation of Lead Plaintiffs and the Class in this Action on a wholly contingent basis, investing substantial time and funds to prosecute this Action, without any guarantee of compensation or of recovering out-of-pocket expenses."); Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *21 ("[T]he firm would not have been compensated for its time or expenses at all had it been unsuccessful in this litigation.").

Moreover, Class Counsel would not have been compensated their additional time or expenses at all had they been unsuccessful in this litigation. See Grinnell, 495 F.2d at 471 ("[D]espite the most vigorous and competent of efforts, success is never guaranteed."); In re Beacon Assocs. Litig., 2013 WL 2450960, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) ("And all of these matters were taken on contingency, so in view of the novelty of the issues there was some possibility that counsel would recover nothing at all."); Maley v. Del Glob. Techs. Corp., 186 F. Supp. 2d 358, 366 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("The enormous risks of litigation are why settlement is frequently preferred. Settling avoids delay as well as uncertain outcome . . . ."). The risk of no recovery in complex class actions is real and supports Class Counsel's request.

Contingency risk takes on an additional layer in multi-defendant actions such as this one, where class counsel's efforts in securing partial settlements with certain defendants protect against the risk that there might never be any recovery from other defendants. Courts recognize this dynamic when awarding fees—and cite it as a reason to reward class counsel for the risk they take. For instance, in the Online DVD Rental case, plaintiffs settled with one defendant for $27.25 million and then lost the entire case against the remaining defendant a few months later, when the court granted that defendant's motion for summary judgment. See In re Online DVD

Rental Antitrust Litig., No. 09-md-2029 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 2, 2011), ECF 492 (granting preliminary approval to settlement); In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., 2011 WL 5883772, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 23, 2011) (granting motion for summary judgment). The court not only granted class counsel's fee request for 25% of the settlement fund, see In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., No. 09-md-2029, slip op. ¶ 1 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 29, 2012), ECF 607, aff'd, 779 F.3d 934, 955 (9th Cir. 2015), but in fact, specifically cited the summary judgment order as one reason to approve the fee request as reasonable:

> At this time, I'm prepared to find that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate given the totality of the circumstances, particularly given the fact that half the case has been kind of wiped off the books for the plaintiffs, I find that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate, that something's better than nothing in this kind of case, and that the bench mark is a reasonable fee for this case. So I approve.

Transcript of Hearing, In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., No. 09-md-2029 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 14, 2012), ECF 602 (emphasis added). In that case, class counsel's diligence in pursuing what turned out to be an unsuccessful claim was a compelling reason to reward class counsel for the contingency risk it took on and award the requested fees from the recovery that class counsel did achieve. Although Class Counsel are confident in the merits of the OTC Class's claims against the non-settling Defendants, there still remains significant contingency risk associated with those claims, which favors granting an interim fee award from the substantial and concrete recovery Class Counsel have obtained to date.

b. Liability Risk

"Little about litigation is risk-free, and class actions confront even more substantial risks than other forms of litigation." City of Providence v. Aeropostale, Inc., 2014 WL 1883494, at *14 (S.D.N.Y. 2014). The OTC Plaintiffs face significant risks in continuing to litigate, amplified by the complexity of the market for LIBOR-linked financial instruments and the fact that Deutsche Bank and HSBC are global financial institutions with virtually unlimited litigation resources. Indeed, this case presents the Court, the parties, and eventually a jury with the task of understanding complex derivative instruments in an opaque, unregulated market, during a period of extraordinary economic upheaval. "The complexity of Plaintiff's claims ipso facto creates uncertainty . . . . A trial on these issues would likely be confusing to a jury." Park v. The Thomson Corp., 2008 WL 4684232, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 22, 2008); see 31 No. 7 Futures & Derivatives L. Rep. 1 ("Derivative instruments, in most cases, are highly complex and difficult to understand for even highly sophisticated and intelligent investors.").

Although the OTC Plaintiffs believe fervently in the merit of their case, at the time the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen Settlement was reached, merits discovery, merits expert work, class certification as to those foreign-bank Defendants, summary judgment, and ultimately a trial lay ahead along with corresponding risks at each phase. See Athale v. Sinotech Energy Ltd., 2013 WL 11310686, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 4, 2013) ("Absent settlement, there is no assurance that Lead Plaintiff's motion for class certification would be granted or that Class status, if granted, would be maintained throughout trial.").[11]

c. Damages Risk

Equally as significant as the risks in establishing liability in this case were the OTC Plaintiffs' risks in establishing damages. The damages estimates in this case are heavily expert-driven, and, although the OTC Plaintiffs are confident in their ability to prove damages, the expert battle at class certification and the anticipated merits expert battle adds substantial risk to the OTC Plaintiffs' claims. See In re Flag Telecom Holdings, Ltd. Sec. Litig., 2010 WL 4537550, [11] Sykes v. Harris, 2016 WL 3030156, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. May 24, 2016) ("Defendants asserted numerous novel defenses to Lead Plaintiffs' claims which put recovery for Class Members and Class Counsel at risk."); West Virginia v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 314 F. Supp. 710, 743-44 (S.D.N.Y. 1970) ("[N]o matter how confident one may be of the outcome of litigation, such confidence is often misplaced.").

at *18 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (noting that the burden in proving the extent of the class's damages weighed in favor of approving fee request, and that "[t]he jury's verdict . . . would . . . depend on its reaction to the complex testimony of experts, a reaction that is inherently uncertain and unpredictable"); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 476 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (observing that "[d]amages at trial would inevitably involve a battle of the experts" and noting that it is "difficult to predict with any certainty which testimony would be credited").

The only certainties from the outset of this litigation were that there would be no attorneys' fees or reimbursement of expenses without a successful result, and that a successful result, if any, could be achieved only after lengthy, difficult, and expensive effort.

4. Quality of the Representation (Goldberger Factor 4)

The fourth Goldberger factor, "the quality of representation," also supports approval of the requested fee. Courts have consistently recognized that the result achieved is a major factor to be considered in making a fee award and in assessing the quality of the representation. See, e.g., Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436 (1983). Class Counsel respectfully submits that the $90 million settlement amount, the $680 million achieved through this settlement, and the $781 million in total settlement funds achieved through the subsequent settlement is strong evidence of the quality of Class Counsel's representation. That is particularly true because none of MUFG, Norinchukin, or SocGen were the subject of regulatory orders relating to persistent suppression of LIBOR during the financial crisis—the subject of OTC Plaintiffs' claims.

"To determine the 'quality of the representation,' courts review, among other things, the recovery obtained and the backgrounds of the lawyers involved in the lawsuit." Taft v. Ackermans, 2007 WL 414493, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 31, 2007). "Susman Godfrey has significant experience with . . . class actions, including settlements thereof . . . [and] [t]he lawyers working for the Class have substantial experience prosecuting large-scale class actions." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *22; see also Joint Decl. Ex. A. Hausfeld LLP's attorneys "are highly experienced practitioners in complex litigation generally and antitrust litigation specifically." Air Cargo IV, 2015 WL 5918273, at *7; see also Joint Decl. Ex. B.

"The quality of opposing counsel is also important in evaluating the quality of Lead Counsel's work." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *22. Courts recognize that the caliber of the opposition faced by plaintiffs' counsel aids assessment of the quality of the plaintiffs' counsel's performance. See Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich Ltd., 2012 WL 1981505, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2012) (considering "the quality and vigor of opposing counsel"). All three settling defendants represented by skilled and highly regarded counsel from Sullivan & Cromwell LLP, Sidley Austin LLP, and Mayer Brown LLP—prestigious firms with well-deserved reputations for vigorous advocacy in the defense of complex civil cases, and the same is true of the other defendants in this action. See In re WorldCom, Inc. Sec. Litig., 388 F. Supp. 2d at 357–58 ("Lead Counsel obtained remarkable settlements for the Class while facing formidable opposing counsel from some of the best defense firms in the country.").

5. Requested Fee in Relation to the Settlement (Goldberger Factor 5)

The fifth Goldberger factor—"the requested fee in relation to the settlement"—also supports approval of the requested fee, as discussed supra at Section I.B.

6. Public Policy Considerations (Goldberger Factor 6)

Finally, the sixth Goldberger factor—public policy considerations—weighs heavily in favor of the requested fee. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50. Public policy considerations strongly favor incentivizing skilled private attorneys to undertake class action litigation both to vindicate the rights of class members and the law enforcement function of private action litigation. See In re WorldCom, Inc. Sec. Litig., 388 F. Supp. 2d at 359 ("[T]o attract well-qualified plaintiffs' counsel who are able to take a case to trial, and who defendants understand are able and willing to do so, it is necessary to provide appropriate financial incentives."); Hicks v. Stanley, 2005 WL 2757792, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 24, 2005) ("To make certain that the public is represented by talented and experienced trial counsel, the remuneration should be both fair and rewarding."); In re Sumitomo, 74 F. Supp. 2d at 399 ("[T]he Second Circuit and courts in this district also have taken into account the social and economic value of class actions, and the need to encourage experienced and able counsel to undertake such litigation.").

Those interests are particularly salient in this case, which has required continual investments of large amounts of attorney time and expenses by Class Counsel. To incentivize the very best private attorneys to take on complex, lengthy, difficult, and expensive class actions, the fee awarded must be sufficient to justify the opportunity cost of foregoing hourly and fixed-fee cases where counsel are assured of compensation regardless of outcome.

II. Class Counsel's Request for Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses Is Reasonable

Class Counsel also request reimbursement in the amount of $2,512,026.10 for out-of-pocket expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this case between February 15, 2018 (the date of the HSBC Settlement) and May 12, 2023 (the date of the MUFG-Norinchukin-SocGen Settlement). Joint Decl. ¶ 53.

"[C]ourts in the Second Circuit normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course." ECF 2683 at 2 (alteration in original). The expenses incurred by Class Counsel include fees charged by experts, electronic document hosting services, translators, the mediator, court fees, electronic research services like Westlaw and Lexis, photocopy services, and travel providers in connection with this litigation. Courts regularly approve similar cost applications in large, complex antitrust class actions.[12] Indeed, "[t]he fact that Class Counsel [were] willing to [incur these expenses], where reimbursement was entirely contingent on the success of this litigation, is perhaps the best indicator that the expenditures were reasonable and necessary." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *23.

III. The Court Should Grant Service Awards to the Class Representatives

The OTC Plaintiffs also seek incentive awards of $100,000 for named plaintiffs the Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, the City of New Britain, Vistra Energy Corp., Yale University, and Jennie Stuart Medical Center Inc., as stated in the notice. "Courts consistently approve awards in class action lawsuits to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provide and burdens they endure during litigation." Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich, Ltd., 2012 WL 1981505, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. 2012).

The named plaintiffs' service to the class over the twelve years of litigation so far was critical in achieving the $680 million recovered for absent class members through this Settlement and the prior settlements. They provided evidence to assist in the development of the OTC Plaintiffs' claims, collected thousands of documents in response to defendants' expansive discovery requests, responded to scores of questions from counsel about the documents and data produced, prepared and sat for lengthy 30(b)(6) depositions by Defendants, and have continued throughout to monitor the litigation alongside with class counsel. Providing this service to the class required the named plaintiffs to dedicate considerable time and take key personnel away from their normal duties—at an immediate cost that was not borne by the members of the class but that benefitted those class members to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars. Courts routinely approve incentive awards to class representatives who provide these types of services to the Class. See, e.g., Sewell v. Bovis Lend Lease, Inc., 2012 WL 1320124, at *15 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (approving incentive awards where the named plaintiffs "served class members by providing counsel with relevant documents in their possession, assisting counsel to prepare for the mediation, participating in litigation strategy, and reviewing and commenting on the terms of the settlement" (internal quotation marks omitted)).

[12] See, e.g., In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig., 2016 WL 2731524, at *18 (approving $10 million in expenses "[m]ost of" which "were incurred in connection with retention of experts" where the case settled just prior to the due date for class certification motions); In re Bank of Am. Corp. Secs., Derivatives & ERISA Litig., 2013 WL 12091355, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 8, 2013) (approving $8 million in litigation expenses); In re Citigroup Inc. Bond Litig., 988 F. Supp. 2d 371, 380 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (approving $7.3 million in litigation expenses); In re IPO, 671 F. Supp. 2d at 505 (approving $46 million in expenses).

Courts have approved similar and higher incentive awards in numerous cases. See, e.g., Pearlstein v. Blackberry Ltd., 2022 WL 4554858, at *11 (S.D.N.Y. 2022) (awarding $100,000 to each class representative and finding "The award amount is consistent with similar awards granted in this district"); In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., 2018 WL 11375216, at *3 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (awarding as "fair and reasonable" service awards to class representatives of "$100,000, to be paid out of the Settlement Fund, for representing the Direct Purchaser Class"); In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., 2019 WL 13213700, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. 2019) (approving service awards of between $50,000 and $200,000). Combined with the Court's earlier service award of $25,000 to each class representative, the service awards requested represent less than 0.12% of the settlement funds achieve for class members as a result of their efforts, net of attorneys' fees and litigation expenses (including those requested here).

Conclusion

OTC Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court award from the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen settlement the requested attorneys' fees equal to 25% of the net settlement fund, plus a pro rata share of interest thereon, and reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $2,512,026.10, and service awards of $100,000 for each of the class representatives.

Court-appointed co-lead class counsel Susman Godfrey L.L.P. and Hausfeld LLP ("Class Counsel") respectfully submit this memorandum in support of the OTC Plaintiffs' application for an award of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of litigation expenses on their $101 million settlement (the "Settlement") with Defendants Coöperatieve Centrale Raiffeisen-Boerenleenbank B.A. (n/k/a Coöperatieve Rabobank U.A.) ("Rabobank"), Lloyds Banking Group plc, Lloyds Bank plc, HBOS plc, and Bank of Scotland plc (together, "Lloyds"), Royal Bank of Canada ("RBC"), and WestLB AG (n/k/a Portigon AG) and Westdeutsche Immobilienbank AG (n/k/a Westdeutsche Immobilien Servicing AG (together, "Portigon" and, with Rabobank, Lloyds, and RBC, the "Settling Defendants").

Introduction

This litigation has been hard-fought by Class Counsel for nearly twelve years. Despite Defendants' repeated attempts to have this case dismissed and to defeat class certification, OTC Plaintiffs have persevered and repeatedly achieved outstanding results for the class. Because of Class Counsel's zealous pursuit of this case, OTC Plaintiffs recently achieved a sixth settlement for the class. Combined with the prior settlements, OTC Plaintiffs have recovered to date a total of $781 million for the class—a tremendous recovery by any measure.

OTC Plaintiffs now request an interim award of attorneys' fees from the Settlement with Rabobank, Lloyds, RBC, and Portigon of 25% of the net settlement fund after the deduction of litigation expenses.[1] That request is exactly in line with the percentage the Court recently awarded from the MUFG, Norinchukin, and Société Générale settlement. ECF 3781. It is also the same percentage the Court awarded as attorneys' fees from the Exchange Based Plaintiffs' (EBPs) settlements and a lower percentage than the Court awarded on the Lender and Non-Defendant OTC Plaintiffs' settlements. See In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instr. Antitrust Litig. ("EBP Fee Op."), 2020 WL 6891417, at *4–5 (S.D.N.Y. 2020). OTC Plaintiffs' request would result in a lodestar multiplier of 1.83, at the low end of the range awarded in comparable actions, and would result in the OTC Class receiving 77.58% of all settlement funds to date, a higher percentage than the Court previously found comports with public policy. ECF 2683, at 10.

OTC Plaintiffs also seek $85,613.16 in unreimbursed costs and expenses incurred by Class Counsel on behalf of the OTC Class between May 12, 2023 (the date of the MUFG-Norinchukin-SocGen Settlement and the cut off date for Class Counsel's last reimbursement request) and July 21, 2023 (the date of this Settlement). "[C]ourts in the Second Circuit normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course." ECF 2683, at 2 (alteration in original) (quoting In re IMAX Sec. Litig., 2012 WL 3133476, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. 2012)).

Argument

I. Class Counsel's Fee Request Is Fair and Reasonable

A. Class Counsel Are Entitled to Fees from the Common Fund

"[A] lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980). This principle applies to class action settlements, including interim settlements. See In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *9 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2012) ("Where a class action settlement creates a common fund the plaintiffs' attorneys are entitled to a reasonable fee—set by the court—to be taken from the fund. Fees can be awarded based on an interim settlement fund.").

B. The Requested Fee Is Fair and Reasonable Under the Percentage Method

is to award "some percentage of the recovery." Goldberger v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 47 (2d Cir. 2000). "The trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method" because it "directly aligns the interests of the class and its counsel and provides a powerful incentive for the efficient prosecution and early resolution of litigation.'" Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir. 2005). This principle and preference hold equally true for interim fee awards drawn from partial settlements with one or more defendants in a multi-defendant action. See In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *9 (noting that "[f]ees can be awarded based on an interim settlement" and recounting the Second Circuit's "trend" of "utiliz[ing] the percentage method" with the lodestar/multiplier method as a cross-check).

The percentage method, by tying the fee award to the result achieved for the class, "allows courts to award fees from the fund 'in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure,'" Sullivan v. DB Invs., Inc., 667 F.3d 273, 330 (3d Cir. 2011); thus, Class Counsel's request also corresponds neatly to the settlement from which it arises. This Settlement—which provides $101 million in cash on top of OTC Plaintiffs' $680 million in prior settlements—is by any measure a substantially favorable result for the OTC Class. As the primary measure of Class Counsel's success is the recovery they have achieved for the OTC Class, granting Class Counsel's application for 25% of that favorable result provides a proportionate and appropriate reward for Class Counsel's efforts. See Laydon I, infra, slip op. ¶ 5(b)-(c), (f) (awarding "fair, reasonable, appropriate" fee of 25% of partial settlement fund, noting that "in the absence of a settlement, [the claims against the settling defendants] would have involved lengthy proceedings with uncertain resolution," and recognizing that "[h]ad Plaintiffs' Counsel not achieved the Settlements, a risk would remain that Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class may have recovered less or nothing from [the settling defendants]").

1. OTC Plaintiffs' Requested Fee Aligns with Attorneys' Fee Awards in Other Large Antitrust Cases

Courts regularly make successive interim fee awards over the life of a multi-defendant antitrust class action at percentages equivalent to and higher than the 25% requested by Class Counsel here. Table 1 below describes fee awards made in a number of recent antitrust class actions—all cases where these awards were made from partial settlements—in descending order by size of the settlement fund. OTC Plaintiffs' current application for 25% of a $101 million common fund is well within the range of these other interim awards in recent antitrust cases.

Fee awards reaching up to one-third of the proceeds of partial settlements are consistent with fee awards granted in class actions generally, where "fees that are 30 percent or greater" are "routine[]." Velez v. Novartis, 2010 WL 4877852, at *21 (S.D.N.Y. 2010).[3]

[3] See also Hyun v. Ippudo USA Holdings, 2016 WL 1222347, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 24, 2016) ("Fee awards representing one third of the total recovery are common in this District."). Plus, the 25% fee requested here is significantly less than Class Counsel could obtain on the open market. For example, Susman Godfrey regularly takes high-stakes non-class commercial cases on a contingent fee basis, and typically negotiates contingent fee arrangements with individual non-class plaintiff clients equal to 40% of the gross sum recovered in cases where the firm advances expenses, with percentage increases based on the milestones reached at the time of settlement. See ECF 2280 ¶ 7. 2. OTC Plaintiffs' Requested Fee Is Consistent with Other Libor Attorneys' Fee Awards

OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee of 25% of the net settlement fund is consistent with this Court's awards in other Libor cases. The Court awarded OTC Plaintiffs 25% of the net $90 million settlement fund from the settlement with MUFG, Norinchukin, and Société Générale on October 17, 2023. ECF 3781. The Court awarded 25% of the net $187 million settlement fund from EBPs' settlements with seven defendants in November 2020. See EBP Fee Op., 2020 WL 6891417, at *5; see also Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Bank of Am. Corp., 2018 WL 6250657, at *1 (awarding Nov. 30, 1999) (awarding class counsel 30% of a $123 million settlement); In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 394 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (awarding plaintiffs' counsel attorneys' fees of 27.5% of a $116.6 million settlement).

26% of a net settlement fund on $504.5 million in settlements in the ISDA fix antitrust litigation). The Court awarded 28.06% of the Non-Defendant OTC Plaintiffs' $21.775 million settlement fund. Id. at *4 (citing ECF 3185). The Court awarded 29.38% and 28.08% in fees from the Lender Plaintiffs' $31 million and $4 million settlement funds, respectively. See id. at *4 (citing ECF 2777 and 3097).

The Court awarded 18.49% and 18.5% of the net settlement fund for OTC Plaintiffs' prior settlements. See ECF 2683 at 9–10; ECF 2745. As with the MUFG, Norinchukin, and Société Générale settlement, OTC Plaintiffs respectfully submit that a higher percentage award from this Settlement is appropriate for three reasons. First, an award of 25% of the net settlement fund from this Settlement would result in a reasonable aggregate percentage award of attorneys' fees from all OTC settlements to date. Combined with the Court's earlier fee awards, OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee here would result in a combined fee award of 20.2% of the combined $781 million in settlement funds through the date of this Settlement. That aggregate fee award is well within the range of percentage awards this Court has previously found reasonable and well within the range of percentage awards Judge Furman found reasonable in the ISDAFix case. See EBP Fee Op., 2020 WL 6891417, at *3, *4 (finding that "a reasonable fee for EBP Class Counsel would fall somewhere between approximately 17% and 25% of the settlement fund"); Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Bank of Am. Corp. (ISDAFix), 2018 WL 6250657, at *1, 3 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (finding "a reasonable fee in this case would fall somewhere between 15% and 25% of the settlement fund" and awarding 26% of a 504.5 million settlement fund).

Second, and again as with OTC Plaintiffs' fee application from the MUFG-Norinchukin-SocGen settlement, OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee represents a lower lodestar multiplier (1.83) than a prior fee award granted to OTC Plaintiffs (3.23 for Deutsche Bank–HSBC). See ECF 2705 at 10; ECF 2745. This relatively low lodestar multiplier reflects Class Counsel's significant investment of attorney time in prosecuting this action by, among other things, successfully appealing the dismissal of all four settling Defendants on personal jurisdiction grounds, reviewing 3.5 million documents produced by Defendants, including the painstaking review of more than 126,000 audio recordings of defendants' phone calls, along with continued litigation in this Court during that appeal and after the Second Circuit's decision. See Joint Decl. ¶ 18.[4] That investment of attorney time ensured Class Counsel were well prepared to pursue the class's claims if and when the Second Circuit ruled in their favor and litigation in this Court re-commenced against the foreign bank defendants. See Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (holding that "the time and labor expended by counsel" and "the magnitude and complexities of the litigation" are factors the Court should consider in evaluating the reasonableness of a requested fee).

On top of that, Class Counsel's increased lodestar—and decreased lodestar multiplier—demonstrates that the premise justifying the so-called "sliding scale" approach simply does not apply to this case. The "sliding scale" approach (i.e., "awarding a smaller percentage for fees as the size of the settlement fund increases") is premised on the concern that "economies of scale could cause windfalls in common fund cases." OTC Barclays–Citi Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *3 (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 120). Class Counsel's increased lodestar, and correspondingly decreased lodestar multiplier, show that granting Class Counsel's requested fee would result in no such "windfall" here. See 5 William Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:81 (6th ed.) (Westlaw 2023) ("Given that a high multiplier is the best measuring stick of a windfall, courts ought to use the high multiplier to police windfalls, regardless of the size of the fund, rather than use the size of the fund as a policing mechanism."). The complexity of this case, reinforced by the Court's statement in Libor VII, 299 F. Supp. 3d 430, 607 n.189 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) that its "decision to certify a class as to OTC plaintiffs' antitrust claims rests on the action in its current form, including on OTC plaintiffs' allegations of a sixteen-bank conspiracy to suppress LIBOR," have meant that achieving additional settlements by pursuing this case through each subsequent phase of the case against the non-settling Defendants has required Class Counsel to continue to invest substantial time and resources to prosecute the claims of the OTC Class. Hence, far from resulting in a "windfall," awarding 25% of the fund would appropriately reward Class Counsel for that investment of time in proportion to the favorable result Class Counsel have obtained for the class as a result of their efforts.

Third, an award of 25% of the net settlement fund would result in 77.58% of all OTC settlement funds being distributed to class members. As the Court explained in awarding fees from the Barclays–Citi settlement fund: "Given these amounts of expense reimbursements, incentive awards, and attorneys' fees, the class writ large will receive 76.62% of the aggregate settlement amounts (prior to other expenses, such as those incurred in providing notice to the classes) – a percentage that we find comports with public policy notions of allowing the class, rather than class counsel, to receive a sufficiently significant share of the recovery." OTC Barclays-Citi Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *4; ECF 2705 at 2 (noting the fee award from the DB–HSBC settlements would "result in the class receiving 79.34% of the aggregate settlement amounts for all settlements to date").

3. Empirical Research on Attorneys' Fee Awards Supports OTC Plaintiffs' Requested Fee

OTC Plaintiffs' requested fee is also consistent with empirical research on attorneys' fee awards. A recent empirical study of contingent fee arrangements negotiated by sophisticated clients in non-class cases and class cases where the class representatives and members were sophisticated corporate parties concluded that "[d]ata from sophisticated clients shows both that they choose to pay fixed one-third percentages or even higher escalating percentages based on litigation maturity just like unsophisticated clients do, and they do so even in the most enormous cases." Brian T. Fitzpatrick, A Fiduciary's Guide to Awarding Fees in Class Actions, 90 Fordham L. Rev. 1151, 1170 (2021). The most recent empirical study of fee awards, and one previously cited by this Court, found an average percentile of 22.3% in the highest decile of settlements studied (those greater than $67.5 million). See Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey Miller, Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009–2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 948 (2017). While the Court has previously cited older empirical studies with a lower mean percentage fee award, those studies also found a large standard deviation and the Court thus concluded based on them in the EBP fee opinion that "a reasonable fee for EBP Class Counsel would fall somewhere between approximately 17% and 25% of the settlement fund." See EBP Fee Op., 2020 WL 6891417, at *3, *4 (citing Brian T. Fitzpatrick, An Empirical Study of Class Action Settlements and Their Fee Awards, 7 J. Empirical Legal Stud. 811, 837–39 (2010) and 4 William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:81 fig.2 (5th ed.)).

C. The Requested Fee Is Reasonable Under Lodestar "Crosscheck"

The reasonableness of Class Counsel's requested fee is confirmed by the lodestar "crosscheck," which tests the reasonableness of a percentage method–based fee. See Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50. The "lodestar" is calculated by multiplying the number of hours expended on the litigation by each particular attorney or firm professional by their current hourly rate, and totaling the amounts for all timekeepers.[5] When using this lodestar to crosscheck Class Counsel's requested award, courts employ a multiplier that "represents the risk of the litigation, the complexity of the issues, the contingent nature of the engagement, the skill of the attorneys, and other factors." In re Glob. Crossing Sec. & ERISA Litig., 225 F.R.D. 436, 468 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (citing Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47).

Class Counsel have spent over 124,000 hours, with a lodestar of $83,590,017, from the inception of this matter through July 21, 2023.[6] See Joint Decl. ¶ 70. That time represents Class Counsel's tireless efforts in investigating and prosecuting the OTC Plaintiffs' claims over a nearly twelve-year period. By way of comparison, in the Yen LIBOR cases, class counsel reported a total lodestar of $54,532,316.55, corresponding to 105,775.61 hours worked, before any briefing on class certification. See Laydon II Br. at 29. Compared to those figures, Class Counsel's lodestar at the far more advanced stage of this case is presumptively reasonable.

When combined with Class Counsel's previous fee awards, Class Counsel's fee request of 25% of the net settlement fund here would correspond to a multiplier of 1.83 over Class Counsel's total lodestar, if the Court grants the requested expense reimbursements.[7]

This multiplier falls at the lower end of the range considered reasonable by courts in the Second Circuit. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 123 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding a multiplier of 3.5 to be reasonable in an antitrust class action); In re Credit Default Swaps

[6] In addition to Class Counsel, six other firms have assisted in this litigation. See Joint Decl. ¶¶ 68-69. Four firms performed work for the benefit of the OTC Class by helping in evaluation of the plan of distribution. See id. ¶¶ 68. Two other firms representing class representatives have also performed work related to those representations as well as other work at the direction of Class Counsel. See id. ¶ 69. These firms' time is not included in the lodestar reported in this application. OTC Plaintiffs request that the Court grant Class Counsel authority to allocate and distribute any attorneys' fees and expenses awarded from the settlement funds among counsel who performed work on behalf of OTC Plaintiffs as is customary in class action litigation.

Antitrust Litig., 2016 WL 2731524, at *16 (S.D.N.Y. April 26, 2016) (approving fee award in complex antitrust action where lodestar was "just over 6"); Colgate, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 353 (holding a multiplier of 5 was "on the high end" but "not unreasonable"); Beckman v. KeyBank N.A., 293 F.R.D. 467, 481 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (approving an award of 33% of the common fund, representing a multiplier of 6.3, and explaining that "[c]ourts regularly award lodestar multipliers of up to eight times the lodestar, and in some cases, even higher multipliers"); Sewell v. Bovis Lend Lease, Inc., 2012 WL 1320124, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 16, 2012) ("Courts commonly award lodestar multipliers between two and six."); Johnson v. Brennan, 2011 WL 4357376, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 16, 2011) ("Courts routinely award counsel two to three times lodestar in class action settlements."); In re Lloyd's Am. Trust Fund Litig., 2002 WL 31663577, at *27 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 26, 2002) ("Here, the resulting multiplier of 2.09 is at the lower end of the range of multipliers awarded by courts within the Second Circuit.").

Class counsel's requested fee award would result in a lower lodestar multiplier than the average reported in empirical studies. This Court previously noted that "one study identifies an average multiplier of 3.18 for settlements above $175.5 million and a second study identifies an average multiplier of 2.39 for settlements above $44.6 million." ECF 2683 at 11 (citing 4 William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:89 tbl. 2). Professor Eisenberg's 2017 study found an average multiplier of 2.72 for cases with a settlement fund of greater than $75 million. See Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey Miller, Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009–2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 967 tbl.13 (2017).

Further, all the work performed by Class Counsel through July 21, 2023, contributed to Class Counsel's analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the claims against Rabobank, Lloyds, RBC, and Portigon, and furthered Class Counsel's ability to negotiate a favorable settlement. As the Court recognized at the fairness hearing for the settlement with Barclays, OTC Plaintiffs have "alleged a conspiracy" and "the same action against everybody." ECF 2352-1, Tr. 66:23-24. Class Counsel's efforts to strengthen the OTC Plaintiffs' litigation position—which included motion practice, appeals, discovery efforts, and document review—generally involved all of the Defendants or had case-wide implications. Consequently, those efforts strengthened OTC Plaintiffs' case against each defendant and contributed to the recovery here from Rabobank, Lloyds, RBC, and Portigon. Moreover, all of the work performed by Class Counsel was undertaken to benefit the same OTC Class. See ECF 2863 at 3 ("Further, attribution of these expenses to Barclays and Citi is appropriate – even though some portion undoubtedly pertains to other defendants also – given the joint and several liability in this action."). Thus, courts consider cumulatively, when performing the lodestar crosscheck, all of class counsel's time from the beginning of an action. See supra note 7.[8]

Finally, Class Counsel's hourly rates are also reasonable. The rates for Class Counsel who billed meaningful time to this case are Class Counsel's standard hourly rates and are regularly charged to (and paid by) clients who engage Class Counsel on an hourly basis. Joint Decl. ¶¶ 64-65; Luciano v. Olsten Corp., 109 F.3d 111, 115 (2d Cir. 1997) ("The 'lodestar' figure should be in line with those [rates] prevailing in the community for similar services by lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience, and reputation."). Class Counsel's hourly rates are market rates for plaintiff- and defense-side law firms of similar quality litigating matters of similar complexity and magnitude in New York City.[9] Thus, OTC Plaintiffs' request for an award of 25% of the net

[8] See also Auto Parts II, 2017 WL 3525415, at *4 n.2 ("The Court rejects the argument . . . that time included with the Round 1 Settlement fee request should not be included in the lodestar cross-check for the Round 2 Settlements. In calculating the lodestar for purposes of the cross-check, it would be impractical to compartmentalize and isolate the work that EPPs' counsel did in any particular case at any particular time because all of their work assisted in achieving all of the settlements and has provided and will continue to provide a significant benefit to all of the EPPs classes.").

[9] See Sara Randazzo & Jacqueline Palank, Legal Fees Cross New Mark: $1,500 an Hour, The Wall Street Journal, Feb. 16, 2016 (finding that "[f]or lawyers at the very top of th[e] fields [of antitrust and high-stakes litigation and appeals], hourly rates can hit $1,800 or even $1,950" and citing a 2011 article and observing that the increases in settlement fund is fair and reasonable using a lodestar multiplier. Colgate, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 353.

D. The Goldberger Factors Support the Requested Fee Award

Under either the percentage method or the lodestar multiplier approach, the "'Goldberger factors' ultimately determine the reasonableness of a common fund fee," Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 121. The Goldberger factors, which the Court weighs in its discretion, are:

> (1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation . . . ; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations.

Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (citation omitted). Courts regularly apply the Goldberger factors when considering applications for interim awards. See, e.g., In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *9-10. Each of these factors confirms the requested fee is reasonable.

1. Time & Labor Expended by Counsel (Goldberger Factor 1)

The first Goldberger factor—the "time and labor expended by counsel"—strongly supports approval of the requested fee. Class Counsel have spent over 124,000 hours prosecuting this case and, as discussed above, the lodestar multiplier is within the range approved by courts in this Circuit. The substantial time devoted to this litigation over nearly twelve years reflects the immense effort Class Counsel have exerted in prosecuting this case and is reasonable, particularly given the complex nature of this action. Class Counsel have, among other things:

- Conducted an initial investigation of this case to develop the facts and legal theories that formed the basis of the allegations in the complaint and drafted and filed the complaint, amended complaint, second amended complaint, proposed third amended complaint, third amended complaint, and fourth amended complaint.
- Defended the complaint against eight Rule 12(b) motions to dismiss and Defendants' opposition to the OTC Plaintiffs' motions for leave to amend the complaint.
- Written scores of letters to the Court, on numerous matters, including providing hourly rates "mak[e] the $1,000-an-hour legal fees that once seemed so steep look quaint by comparison"), available at https://www.wsj.com/articles/legal-fees-reach-new-pinnacle-1-500-an-hour-1454960708.

supplemental authority, addressing discovery disputes, and presenting scheduling issues.

- Appealed the dismissal of the OTC Plaintiffs' antitrust claims to the Second Circuit, and successfully filed an amicus brief to the Supreme Court on an issue of appellate jurisdiction.

- Attended multiple full-day, in-person mediation sessions conducted by highly experienced mediators, preceded by mediation briefing, to achieve the Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC Settlements.

- Successfully briefed motions for preliminary and final approval of the Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC Settlements and worked with experts to develop a comprehensive notice program and plan of distribution.

- Reviewed more than 3.5 million documents produced by the Defendants and third parties, as well as trial transcripts and evidence from civil and criminal trials in the United States and the United Kingdom relating to LIBOR manipulation.

- Listened to more than 125,000 audio files produced by the defendants.

- Drafted discovery requests to the Defendants for trading, cash-flow, and borrowing data on the Defendants' financial instruments and participated in scores of meet and confers to obtain the production of that data.

- Diligently pursued discovery from four third-party brokers that formed an important component of the OTC Plaintiffs' expert witness analysis.

- Defended six 30(b)(6) depositions of the named plaintiffs; defended three depositions of OTC Plaintiffs' experts; conducted two depositions of the Defendants' experts.

- Worked with the OTC Plaintiffs' expert witnesses to draft extensive 30(b)(6) notices setting out questions essential to understanding the trade, cash-flow, and borrowing data produced by the defendants.

- Assisted the OTC Plaintiffs' economic experts in analyzing 686 gigabytes of data and developing two expert witness reports totaling more than 300 pages.

- Prepared more than sixty pages of briefing, more than sixty pages of attorney declarations, and 149 exhibits in support of the OTC Plaintiffs' motion for class certification and vigorously defended against challenges thereto by the defendants.

- Attended a full-day, in-person mediation session conducted by the Honorable Layn Phillips, preceded by mediation briefing, and followed by extensive telephonic discussions and negotiations, to achieve the Citibank Settlement.

- Leveraged experience from the Barclays Settlement to successfully brief a motion for preliminary approval of the Citibank Settlement and adapt previously successful notice program for this second settlement.

- Attended a full-day, in-person mediation session conducted by the Honorable Layn Phillips, preceded by mediation briefing, and followed by extensive telephonic discussions and negotiations, to achieve the Deutsche Bank Settlement.

- Attended a full-day, in-person mediation session conducted by the Honorable Layn Phillips, preceded by mediation briefing, and followed by extensive telephonic discussions and negotiations, to achieve the HSBC Settlement.

- Successfully briefed motions for preliminary and final approval of both the Deutsche Bank and HSBC Settlements and designed a joint notice program for those two settlements as well as for the litigation class that saved substantial expense to the class.

- Collected, reviewed, and produced to the Defendants thousands of pages of documents from the named plaintiffs, and prepared supplemental class certification briefing regarding one named plaintiff's adequacy as a class representative.

- Appealed the dismissal of the OTC Plaintiffs' antitrust claims on personal jurisdiction grounds to the Second Circuit, including supplemental briefing on the Second Circuit's decision in Schwab and the Supreme Court's decision in Ford Motor Co. v. Montana 8th Judicial Dist., No. 19-368.

- Briefed disputed issues concerning the case schedule after the Second Circuit's personal jurisdiction ruling and negotiated with Liaison Counsel for Defendants a proposed schedule for merits discovery, expert reports, class certification as to the foreign-bank Defendants, and summary judgment briefing.

- Drafted with the Direct-Action Plaintiffs a consolidated set of document requests to all defendants for merits discovery on "Upstream" issues.

- Worked with experts and the claims administrator to administer the Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, and HSBC settlement funds and briefed the motion for distribution resulting in the successful distribution of those settlement funds to the members of the OTC Class.

- Proposed and negotiated search terms and custodians for merits discovery on "Upstream" issues with the twelve non-settling OTC Defendants and briefed a motion to compel on disputed search terms and custodians.

- Engaged in extensive negotiations and discussions mediated by the Honorable Layn Phillips to achieve the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen Settlement and then the Lloyds, Rabobank, RBC, and Portigon Settlement.

- Briefed a motion for preliminary approval of the MUFG, Norinchukin, and SocGen settlement and subsequently this Settlement and worked with experts to develop a comprehensive notice program and plan of distribution that leverages prior claims submissions and extensive prior claims administration work.

In sum, Class Counsel have devoted considerable time and financial resources in prosecuting this case on behalf of the OTC Class.

2. Magnitude & Complexity of the Litigation (Goldberger Factor 2)

The second Goldberger factor—"the magnitude and complexities of the litigation"—also strongly supports approval of the requested fee. No other case better embodies the challenges faced by plaintiffs in antitrust litigation than this one. See Virgin Atl. Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 263 (2d Cir. 2011) (noting the "factual complexities of antitrust cases"); Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 118 ("Federal antitrust cases are complicated, lengthy, and bitterly fought."); In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *4 ("Federal antitrust cases are complicated lengthy, and bitterly fought, as well as costly."). This action was initially filed nearly twelve years ago and has undergone multiple rounds of briefing on eight motions to dismiss, a motion for judgment on the pleadings, and an opposition to leave to amend that functioned as the equivalent to a motion to dismiss.

Meanwhile, the briefing of the OTC Plaintiffs' successful motion for class certification was extensive, and OTC Plaintiffs successfully opposed Defendants' Rule 23(f) petition. After class certification, the OTC Plaintiffs faced (and continue to face) the monumental task of completing merits discovery, including additional expert discovery, summary judgment briefing, class certification briefing as to the foreign bank Defendants, and ultimately a trial likely lasting weeks (if not months) from which the losing party will almost certainly appeal. See, e.g., In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *4 ("This litigation has been pending since 2005 and has involved the production of thousands of documents, at least 17 fact witness depositions, expert discovery, and extensive motion practice. The Certified Classes are scheduled for a trial against the non-settling defendants that is expected to take at least three weeks.").

3. Risk of the Litigation (Goldberger Factor 3)

The third Goldberger factor—the "risk of the litigation"—also strongly supports approval of the requested fee. The Second Circuit has identified "the risk of success as perhaps the foremost factor to be considered in determining [a reasonable fee award]." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54. Class Counsel have taken on and overcome significant risks in this litigation.

a. Contingency Risk

"No one expects a lawyer whose compensation is contingent upon his success to charge, when successful, as little as he would charge a client who in advance had agreed to pay for his services, regardless of success." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *21 (quoting City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 470 (2d Cir. 1974)). Here, OTC Counsel have invested more than 124,000 hours of time with a lodestar value of more than $83 million without any guarantee they would be compensated for their continued efforts or reimbursed for any of the millions of dollars in litigation expenses they have incurred. See In re High-Crush Ptrs. L.P. Secs. Litig., 2014 WL 7323417, at *16 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2014) ("Lead Counsel undertook the representation of Lead Plaintiffs and the Class in this Action on a wholly contingent basis, investing substantial time and funds to prosecute this Action, without any guarantee of compensation or of recovering out-of-pocket expenses."); Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *21 ("[T]he firm would not have been compensated for its time or expenses at all had it been unsuccessful in this litigation.").

Moreover, Class Counsel would not have been compensated for their additional time or expenses at all had they been unsuccessful in this litigation. See Grinnell, 495 F.2d at 471 ("[D]espite the most vigorous and competent of efforts, success is never guaranteed."); In re Beacon Assocs. Litig., 2013 WL 2450960, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) ("And all of these matters were taken on contingency, so in view of the novelty of the issues there was some possibility that counsel would recover nothing at all."); Maley v. Del Glob. Techs. Corp., 186 F. Supp. 2d 358, 366 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("The enormous risks of litigation are why settlement is frequently preferred. Settling avoids delay as well as uncertain outcome . . . ."). The risk of no recovery in complex class actions is real and supports Class Counsel's request.

Contingency risk takes on an additional layer in multi-defendant actions such as this one, where class counsel's efforts in securing partial settlements with certain defendants protect against the risk that there might never be any recovery from other defendants. Courts recognize this dynamic when awarding fees—and cite it as a reason to reward class counsel for the risk they take. For instance, in the Online DVD Rental case, plaintiffs settled with one defendant for $27.25 million and then lost the entire case against the remaining defendant a few months later, when the court granted that defendant's motion for summary judgment. See In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., No. 09-md-2029 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 2, 2011), ECF 492 (granting preliminary approval to settlement); In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., 2011 WL 5883772, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 23, 2011) (granting motion for summary judgment). The court not only granted class counsel's fee request for 25% of the settlement fund, see In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., No. 09-md-2029, slip op. ¶ 1 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 29, 2012), ECF 607, aff'd, 779 F.3d 934, 955 (9th Cir. 2015), but in fact, specifically cited the summary judgment order as one reason to approve the fee request as reasonable:

> At this time, I'm prepared to find that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate given the totality of the circumstances, particularly given the fact that half the case has been kind of wiped off the books for the plaintiffs, I find that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate, that something's better than nothing in this kind of case, and that the bench mark is a reasonable fee for this case. So I approve.

Transcript of Hearing, In re Online DVD Rental Antitrust Litig., No. 09-md-2029 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 14, 2012), ECF 602 (emphasis added). In that case, class counsel's diligence in pursuing what turned out to be an unsuccessful claim was a compelling reason to reward class counsel for the contingency risk it took on and award the requested fees from the recovery that class counsel did achieve. Although Class Counsel are confident in the merits of the OTC Class's claims against the non-settling Defendants, there still remains significant contingency risk associated with those claims, which favors granting an interim fee award from the substantial and concrete recovery Class Counsel have obtained to date.

b. Liability Risk

"Little about litigation is risk-free, and class actions confront even more substantial risks than other forms of litigation." City of Providence v. Aeropostale, Inc., 2014 WL 1883494, at *14 (S.D.N.Y. 2014). The OTC Plaintiffs face significant risks in continuing to litigate, amplified by the complexity of the market for LIBOR-linked financial instruments and the fact that Defendants are global financial institutions with virtually unlimited litigation resources. Indeed, this case presents the Court, the parties, and eventually a jury with the task of understanding complex derivative instruments in an opaque, unregulated market, during a period of extraordinary economic upheaval. "The complexity of Plaintiff's claims ipso facto creates uncertainty . . . . A trial on these issues would likely be confusing to a jury." Park v. The Thomson Corp., 2008 WL 4684232, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 22, 2008); see 31 No. 7 Futures & Derivatives L. Rep. 1 ("Derivative instruments, in most cases, are highly complex and difficult to understand for even highly sophisticated and intelligent investors.").

Although the OTC Plaintiffs believe fervently in the merit of their case, at the time this Settlement was reached, merits discovery, merits expert work, class certification as to those foreign-bank Defendants, summary judgment, and ultimately a trial lay ahead along with corresponding risks at each phase. See Athale v. Sinotech Energy Ltd., 2013 WL 11310686, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 4, 2013) ("Absent settlement, there is no assurance that Lead Plaintiff's motion for class certification would be granted or that Class status, if granted, would be maintained

c. Damages Risk

Equally as significant as the risks in establishing liability in this case were the OTC Plaintiffs' risks in establishing damages. The damages estimates in this case are heavily expert-driven, and, although the OTC Plaintiffs are confident in their ability to prove damages, the expert battle at class certification and the anticipated merits expert battle adds substantial risk to the OTC Plaintiffs' claims. See In re Flag Telecom Holdings, Ltd. Sec. Litig., 2010 WL 4537550, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (noting that the burden in proving the extent of the class's damages weighed in favor of approving the fee request, and that "[t]he jury's verdict . . . would . . . depend on its reaction to the complex testimony of experts, a reaction that is inherently uncertain and unpredictable"); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 476 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (observing that "[d]amages at trial would inevitably involve a battle of the experts" and noting that it is "difficult to predict with any certainty which testimony would be credited").

* * *

The only certainties from the outset of this litigation were that there would be no attorneys' fees or reimbursement of expenses without a successful result, and that a successful result, if any, could be achieved only after lengthy, difficult, and expensive effort.

4. Quality of the Representation (Goldberger Factor 4)

The fourth Goldberger factor, "the quality of representation," also supports approval of the requested fee. Courts have consistently recognized that the result achieved is a major factor to be considered in making a fee award and in assessing the quality of the representation. See, e.g.,

[10] Sykes v. Harris, 2016 WL 3030156, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. May 24, 2016) ("Defendants asserted numerous novel defenses to Lead Plaintiffs' claims which put recovery for Class Members and Class Counsel at risk."); West Virginia v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 314 F. Supp. 710, 743-44 (S.D.N.Y. 1970) ("[N]o matter how confident one may be of the outcome of litigation, such confidence is often misplaced.").

Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436 (1983). Class Counsel respectfully submits that the $101 million settlement amount and the $781 million in total settlement funds achieved through the subsequent settlement is strong evidence of the quality of Class Counsel's representation.

"To determine the 'quality of the representation,' courts review, among other things, the recovery obtained and the backgrounds of the lawyers involved in the lawsuit." Taft v. Ackermans, 2007 WL 414493, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 31, 2007). "Susman Godfrey has significant experience with . . . class actions, including settlements thereof . . . [and] [t]he lawyers working for the Class have substantial experience prosecuting large-scale class actions." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *22; see also Joint Decl. Ex. A. Hausfeld LLP's attorneys "are highly experienced practitioners in complex litigation generally and antitrust litigation specifically." Air Cargo IV, 2015 WL 5918273, at *7; see also Joint Decl. Ex. B.

"The quality of opposing counsel is also important in evaluating the quality of Lead Counsel's work." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *22. Courts recognize that the caliber of the opposition faced by plaintiffs' counsel aids assessment of the quality of the plaintiffs' counsel's performance. See Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich Ltd., 2012 WL 1981505, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2012) (considering "the quality and vigor of opposing counsel"). All four settling defendants represented by skilled and highly regarded counsel from Milbank LLP, Herbert Smith Freehills LLP, Hogan Lovells LLP, Steptoe and Johnson LLP, and Katten Muchin Rosenman LLP—prestigious firms with well-deserved reputations for vigorous advocacy in the defense of complex civil cases, and the same is true of the other defendants in this action. See In re WorldCom, Inc. Sec. Litig., 388 F. Supp. 2d at 357–58 ("Lead Counsel obtained remarkable settlements for the Class while facing formidable opposing counsel from some of the best defense firms in the country.").

5. Requested Fee in Relation to the Settlement (Goldberger Factor 5)

The fifth Goldberger factor—"the requested fee in relation to the settlement"—also supports approval of the requested fee, as discussed supra at Section I.B.

6. Public Policy Considerations (Goldberger Factor 6)

Finally, the sixth Goldberger factor—public policy considerations—weighs heavily in favor of the requested fee. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50. Public policy considerations strongly favor incentivizing skilled private attorneys to undertake class action litigation both to vindicate the rights of class members and the law enforcement function of private action litigation. See In re WorldCom, Inc. Sec. Litig., 388 F. Supp. 2d at 359 ("[T]o attract well-qualified plaintiffs' counsel who are able to take a case to trial, and who defendants understand are able and willing to do so, it is necessary to provide appropriate financial incentives."); Hicks v. Stanley, 2005 WL 2757792, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 24, 2005) ("To make certain that the public is represented by talented and experienced trial counsel, the remuneration should be both fair and rewarding."); In re Sumitomo, 74 F. Supp. 2d at 399 ("[T]he Second Circuit and courts in this district also have taken into account the social and economic value of class actions, and the need to encourage experienced and able counsel to undertake such litigation.").

Those interests are particularly salient in this case, which has required continual investments of large amounts of attorney time and expenses by Class Counsel. To incentivize the very best private attorneys to take on complex, lengthy, difficult, and expensive class actions, the fee awarded must be sufficient to justify the opportunity cost of foregoing hourly and fixed-fee cases where counsel are assured of compensation regardless of outcome.

II. Class Counsel's Request for Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses Is Reasonable

Class Counsel also request reimbursement in the amount of $85,613.16 for out-of-pocket expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this case between May 12, 2023 (the date of the MUFG-Norinchukin-SocGen Settlement) and July 21, 2023 (the date of this Settlement). Joint Decl. ¶ 71.

"[C]ourts in the Second Circuit normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course." ECF 2683 at 2 (alteration in original). The expenses incurred by Class Counsel include fees charged by experts, electronic document hosting services, translators, the mediator, court fees, electronic research services like Westlaw and Lexis, photocopy services, and travel providers in connection with this litigation. Courts regularly approve similar cost applications in large, complex antitrust class actions.[11] Indeed, "[t]he fact that Class Counsel [were] willing to [incur these expenses], where reimbursement was entirely contingent on the success of this litigation, is perhaps the best indicator that the expenditures were reasonable and necessary." Fleisher, 2015 WL 10847814, at *23.

Conclusion

OTC Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court award the requested attorneys' fees equal to 25% of the net settlement fund, plus a pro rata share of interest thereon and reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $85,613.16.

INDIRECT PURCHASER CLASS

Case No. 1:10 MD 2196

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER RE: SETTLEMENT MOTIONS

JUDGE JACK ZOUHARY

INTRODUCTION

The Class of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("IPPs") moves for final approval of nine class action settlement agreements listed in the following table. Further, Class Counsel for the IPPs moves for an award of attorney fees, reimbursement of expenses, and incentive awards for representative plaintiffs (Doc. 1908).

Settling Defendants	Gross Settlement Amount	Portions of Settlement Amount that are Contingent or Payable More than 3 Weeks in the Future	Docket Number of Agreement
Carpenter Co.	$63,500,000	$43.5 million is not payable until all appellate rights are exhausted	1751-2
FFP Holdings, LLC	$2,750,000	none	1854, Ex. A
Future Foam, Inc.	$10,500,000	$2.5 million is not due until July 31, 2016; and $4 million is contingent on a successful outcome in separate litigation against Dow Chemical	1854, Ex. C
FXI Holdings, Inc.	$9,500,000	none	1854, Ex. B
Hickory Springs Manufacturing Co.	$10,250,000	$1.5 million is not due until June 30, 2016; another $1.5 million is not due until June 30, 2017; and $5.25 million is contingent on a successful outcome in separate litigation against Dow Chemical	1751-3
Leggett & Platt Incorporated	$26,500,000	none	1751-4

Settling Defendants	Gross Settlement Amount	Portions of Settlement Amount that are Contingent or Payable More than 3 Weeks in the Future	Docket Number of Agreement
Mohawk Industries Inc.	$16,000,000	none	1751-5
Vitafoam Products Canada Limited and Vitafoam, Inc. ("Vitafoam")	$2,750,000	none	1751-6
Woodbridge Foam Corporation, Woodbridge Sales & Engineering, Inc., and Woodbridge Foam Fabricating, Inc. ("Woodbridge")	$9,500,000	$2.25 million is not due until a year from now; and $2.25 million is not due until December 31, 2017	1751-7
TOTAL	$151,250,000	$62.75 million

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs in this multidistrict antitrust litigation asserted claims that numerous dominant firms in the flexible polyurethane foam market engaged in a decade-long conspiracy to fix, raise, and maintain the price of foam products. Plaintiffs bringing these claims included: (1) direct purchasers -- that is, businesses that purchased foam directly from Defendants and incorporated that foam into consumer products, such as furniture, mattresses, or carpet underlay; and (2) indirect purchasers -- that is, individuals and businesses that purchased these foam-containing consumer products.

This Court previously certified both a class of Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") and also a class of Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("IPPs") (Doc. 1102 (redacted version at Doc. 1408); Docs. 1115 & 1117). This Court recently granted final approval to DPP settlement agreements, and also granted in part the fee petition filed by Class Counsel for the DPPs (Doc. 1971).

The IPPs followed a similar pattern of sequential settlements. This Court preliminarily approved nine settlement agreements, along with the plan of notice, claim forms, and Plan of Allocation (Doc. 1861).

The IPP class now moves for final approval of these settlement agreements (Doc. 1988). In addition, Class Counsel submits a fee application, seeking: (1) an award of attorney fees in the amount of $45,375,000, which is 30% of the nine classwide settlements totaling $151,250,000; (2) reimbursement of $5,115,811.72 in expenses; and (3) a total of $200,000 in incentive awards payable to the Class Representatives (Doc. 1908 at 1–2, 18).

This Court received objections to the settlements and/or the fee application from the following class members:[1]

1.	Chris Andrews (pro se)	Doc. 1920 & 1928
2.	Jill Cannata	Doc. 1950
3.	Melissa Holyoak and John Tabin by the Center for Class Action Fairness ("CCAF")	Doc. 1960
4.	Sean Cochran	Doc. 1964
5.	Michael Narkin (pro se)	Doc. 1965
6.	Jennifer Hinojosa (pro se)	Doc. 1967
7.	Patrick Sweeney (pro se)	Doc. 1968

Class Counsel were directed by this Court to answer questions (Docs. 1973 & 1997) as part of a final fairness hearing, at which time this Court heard argument from IPP Class Counsel and two objectors -- Andrews and CCAF. In addition, this Court heard from the IPP Claims Administrator, Eric Miller who, after the hearing, submitted a Declaration elaborating upon some of his comments at the hearing (Doc. 2010).

[1] An attorney also filed a notice of appearance on behalf of "Objector Kelly Marie Spann," but neither Spann nor her attorney ever filed any objection (Doc. 1962).

Sweeney's objection was filed on November 17, 2015. The due date was November 13, 2015, and IPPs assert the objection is untimely. Sweeney indicates in his certificate of service, however, that he mailed his objection on November 11, so this Court accepts it as timely.

Finally, IPPs argue that Andrews and Hinojosa do not have standing to object, because they have not provided sufficient documentation to show they purchased a covered foam-containing product in a covered State. This Court agrees their claim documentation is weak, but nevertheless chooses to simply address their respective objections on the merits.

Based upon all this available information, along with this Court's five-year oversight of this MDL, this Court is prepared to clear the final hurdle in these cases.

THE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS

Before addressing the merits of the IPPs' motions and objections, this Court summarizes the nine settlement agreements and the current claims status. These agreements have a total potential value of $151,250,000. Of this amount, (a) Defendants have already deposited $85 million into escrow accounts; (b) Hickory Springs and Woodbridge will deposit another $3.5 million within 15 days of final approval by this Court; (c) Future Foam, Hickory Springs, and Woodbridge will deposit another $10 million over the next two years; (d) Carpenter will deposit another $43.5 million once all appellate rights are exhausted; and (e) another $9.25 million may eventually become payable, contingent upon whether Hickory Springs and Future Foam succeed in separate litigation against Dow Chemical scheduled to go to trial in mid- to late-2016.[2]

As a general matter, the settlement amounts will be used to pay benefits to class members; common benefit fees and expenses to Class Counsel; expenses to the Claims Administrator; incentive awards to Class Representatives; and "leftovers" to cy pres beneficiaries. The objectors have raised issues regarding all these payment categories (see, e.g., Doc. 2018 at 5–20, 29–33). This Court examines these objections below.

[2] If Hickory Springs succeeds in separate litigation against Dow Chemical, the proceeds are payable as follows: (1) Hickory must use the proceeds to pay certain amounts to the "Sealy Plaintiffs" in this case; (2) if there are additional proceeds, Hickory must pay the $5.25 million contingent amount to the IPP class; and (3) if there are additional proceeds, Hickory must accelerate its guaranteed future payments to the IPP class. By comparison, if Future Foam succeeds in separate litigation against Dow Chemical, provisions (2) and (3) listed above also apply; but there is no analogous requirement as in provision (1) that Future Foam pay the "Sealey Plaintiffs" before the IPP class receives the $4 million contingent amount.

Regarding payments to class members, the claim form is designed so that a class member will participate in all nine settlements, unless the class member affirmatively chooses to be excluded from a particular settlement agreement. Each of the settlement agreements provide for the following allocations and weightings:

- First, each settlement agreement allocates the settlement funds as follows: 36.93% to bedding claims, 30.70% to carpet padding claims, and 32.37% to furniture claims. These percentages represent the proportional volume of commerce that each product category bears to the total volume of polyurethane foam products.

- Second, each class member's claim is "weighted" as follows: bedding claims at 80% of purchase price, carpet padding claims at 90% of purchase price, and furniture claims at 75% of purchase price. These percentages reflect roughly the proportion of the product that is made up of foam (that is, carpet padding contains proportionally more foam overall than does bedding, so the purchase price of carpet padding is weighted higher than the purchase price for bedding, for purposes of claim-valuation).

- Third, bedding claims are paid pro rata from the bedding sub-fund, carpet claims from the carpet sub-fund, and furniture claims from the furniture sub-fund. If any sub-fund is not fully paid out -- which, in light of the claim submission statistics cited below, is extremely unlikely -- it pours over into the other sub-funds. Further, if there is any money left over after all distributions are made, then the remainder goes to cy pres beneficiaries approved by this Court. Any cy pres remainder is forecast to be very small.

CLAIMS TO DATE

The deadline for class members to submit claims is February 29, 2016. The Claims Administrator reports the following statistics as of December 23, 2015:

Total Claims Received:	$27,473 million
From Individuals:	$26,402 million
From Businesses:	$ 1,071 million
Total Gross Claim Amount:	$456.9 million
Carpet Claims:	$ 93 million
Bedding Claims:	$151.6 million
Furniture Claims:	$212.3 million

The Claims Administrator believes these figures are likely to increase substantially, because: (1) there is one more month for class members to submit claims; (2) class members with larger claims (businesses) tend to take longer to submit their claims than class members with smaller claims (individuals), since businesses have more records to gather -- thus, many of the largest claims are probably not yet filed; and (3) historically, in class actions, a large proportion of class members wait until the deadline to file claims (Doc. 2018 at 64; Doc. 2010-1 at 2–3).

These figures reveal the total value of claims made so far ($456.9 million) already exceeds the total value of potential settlement funds ($151.25 million), and also that the value of claims made for each category (carpet, bedding, and furniture) exceed, respectively, the total value of potential settlement funds for each category. This suggests every sub-fund will be fully paid out -- there will not be any "pour-over" from one sub-fund to another.

These figures reflect that claimants will definitely not receive full reimbursement for their claims. Rather, claimants will receive some percentage of their claims, paid on a pro rata basis. Given the Claims Administrator's statistics to date, it appears very likely claimants will ultimately receive less than 20% (maybe less than 10%) of their claim value.

LEGAL STANDARDS FOR APPROVAL OF THE SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS

Federal Civil Rule 23(e) mandates that "[t]he claims, issues, or defenses of a certified class may be settled, voluntarily dismissed, or compromised only with the court's approval." To certify a class for settlement, a court must first consider whether the proposed class meets the requirements of Rule 23(a) & (b). See Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 620 (1997). The court is also required to direct adequate notice to members of the settlement class. Federal Civil Rule 23(c)(2)(B). If these requirements are met, then the court must ensure the proposed class action settlement is "fair, reasonable, and adequate." Federal Civil Rule 23(e)(2); see also In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 291 F.R.D. 93, 98 (E.D. Pa. 2013) (quoting In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practice Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 316 (3rd Cir. 1998)) ("[A] class action cannot be settled without the approval of the court and a determination that the proposed settlement is 'fair, reasonable and adequate.'"). "Whether a class action settlement satisfies Rule 23(e) is committed to the sound discretion of the district court." Lonardo v. Travelers Indem. Co., 706 F. Supp. 2d 766, 778 (N.D. Ohio 2010) (citing Bailey v. Great Lakes Canning, Inc., 908 F.2d 38, 42 (6th Cir. 1990)).

This Court has already addressed the propriety of class certification and the adequacy of notice. Specifically, in 2014, this Court issued a lengthy decision concluding the IPPs met the requirements for class certification under Rule 23(a) and (b)(3) (see Docs. 1102, 1408, & 1117). The Sixth Circuit denied a petition for interlocutory review (see Doc. 1345). For all the reasons stated previously, this Court concludes the IPP settlement class -- which is defined the same as the IPP litigation class -- also satisfies the Rule 23 requirements of commonality, typicality, adequacy, numerosity, predominance, and superiority.

Further, this Court earlier approved the plan of notice and the claim forms, concluding they "satisfy Federal Civil Rule 23(e) and due process" (see Doc. 1861 at 2). The Claims Administrator undertook "broad paid-media notice involving print and Internet vehicles, including . . . [c]onsumer magazines; [a] newspaper supplement; [t]rade magazines; Internet banner and text ads on multiple networks, including social media and targeted websites; and [a] news release" (see Doc. 1751-12 at 11). For example, notice was placed in 598 different newspapers, reaching into every major media market in the country; on website banners on Facebook and Google for 60 days; and in numerous magazines directed both at the general populace and also at businesses likely to be large consumers of foam-containing products, such as hotels (id. at 13–15). This notice plan was designed to reach at least 85% of the target audience, which is essentially national in scope (id. at 15). Under the circumstances of this case, the Claims Administrator's notice program was the "best notice practicable," Federal Civil Rule 23(c)(2), and was "reasonably calculated to reach interested parties," Mullane v. Cent. Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 318 (1950).

The analysis still remaining for this Court is whether the nine proposed class action settlements are "fair, reasonable, and adequate." Federal Civil Rule 23(e)(2). To conduct this analysis, courts within the Sixth Circuit refer to a list of seven factors identified in UAW v. General Motors Corp., 497 F.3d 615, 631 (6th Cir. 2007). These factors are: "(1) the risk of fraud or collusion; (2) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (3) the amount of discovery engaged in by the parties; (4) the likelihood of success on the merits; (5) the opinions of class counsel and class representatives; (6) the reaction of absent class members; and (7) the public interest." Vassalle v. Midland Funding LLC, 708 F.3d 747, 754 (6th Cir. 2013) (quoting UAW, 497 F.3d at 631). In addition, "[a]lthough not included in the seven UAW factors, in evaluating the fairness of a settlement [the Sixth Circuit has] also looked to whether the settlement 'gives preferential treatment to the named plaintiffs while only perfunctory relief to unnamed class members.'" Id. at 755 (quoting Williams v. Vukovich, 720 F.2d 909, 925 n.11 (6th Cir.1983)).

This Court will assess these factors two different ways, first setting out general assessments before addressing specific concerns raised by the objectors. Finally, because the question of attorney fees is especially important when determining the fairness of a class action settlement, this Court will analyze that issue separately.

THE UAW / VASSALLE FACTORS

Risk of Fraud or Collusion

In this case, there is no evidence to remove the "presumption that the class representatives and counsel handled their responsibilities with the independent vigor that the adversarial process demands." UAW, 497 F.3d at 628. Settlement talks took place directly between the parties as well as with the assistance of respected mediators. The nearly five years of litigation that preceded settlement talks were not "pretense and posturing," Moulton v. U.S. Steel Corp., 581 F.3d 344, 351 (6th Cir. 2009), but rather knock-down, drag-out fights over (for example) class certification, admissibility of expert testimony, and the propriety of summary judgment. The result of these fights ultimately led experienced counsel and sophisticated clients to reasonably choose negotiated settlements rather than continued litigation. There is absolutely no basis for this Court or any objector to suspect any of the nine settlements reached between IPPs and Defendants are the result of fraud or collusion. This Court rejects completely the inflammatory and conclusory accusations of fraud by pro se objector Andrews.

Complexity, Expense, and Likely Duration of the Litigation

The complexity, expense, and likely additional duration of this litigation clearly favor voluntary settlement of the class claims rather than continued fighting. Class Counsel invested substantial attorney time and litigation expenses, in the form of discovery and motion practice, before reaching the nine settlements. There remained the prospect of a lengthy trial, post-trial motions, and appeals from a jury's verdict. This would have generated additional fees and costs, and would have delayed recovery (if any) by IPP class members.

Moreover, the IPPs' case involved multiple defendants and a lengthy Class Period, requiring Plaintiffs to discover facts against each Defendant; prepare for a trial where they would have to address and overcome each Defendant-specific argument; and prove to a jury that the alleged conspiracy extended over the entire decade-long conspiracy period. In light of ongoing litigation risks, this factor weighs heavily in favor of approving the nine settlements.

Amount of Discovery Engaged in by the Parties

Before entering settlement discussions, Class Counsel received document productions from Defendants and third parties totaling nearly 4 million pages, and participated in more than 150 fact and expert witness depositions. Class Counsel also reviewed expert reports from nearly a dozen defense expert witnesses, and were repeatedly called upon to defend the opinions of IPPs' own damages expert, Dr. Lamb, at deposition, in briefing, and at hearings. "All of this discovery matters for settlement purposes because it provides [both IPPs] and the settling Defendants with a clear picture of the relative merits of claims and defenses. The parties entered into these settlements with full view of the evidentiary record to assess the class claims." (Doc. 1971 at 7 (approving settlements with DPPs)). Cf. Olden v. Gardner, 294 F. App'x 210, 218 (6th Cir. 2008) (explaining that the lack of pre-settlement discovery can "weaken[] the class counsels' ability to advocate effectively for the plaintiff class during settlement negotiations and therefore suggests that the settlement was not fair, reasonable, and adequate").

In sum, the lengthy and thorough discovery undertaken by IPPs, together with their testing (through summary judgment and Daubert motions) of the strength of the facts discovered, supplied IPPs with a clear picture of what their class claims were worth. Accordingly, this factor weighs in favor of final approval.

Likelihood of Success on the Merits

"The most important of the factors to be considered in reviewing a settlement is the probability of success on the merits. The likelihood of success, in turn, provides a gauge from which the benefits of the settlement must be measured." In re Gen. Tire & Rubber Co. Sec. Litig., 726 F.2d 1075, 1086 (6th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted). Both IPPs and Defendants faced substantial risk if this case proceeded to trial. As previously noted: "In this Court's view, a jury could return (1) a no-liability verdict with respect to some or all Defendants, or (2) a substantially smaller damages figure than is contemplated by [Dr. Lamb's] best-case scenario assumptions, or (3) a 'home run' for the Class." In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., 2015 WL 1639269, at *5.

At trial, Defendants would have attacked the IPPs from many angles. Each Defendant would have worked to separate itself from the crowd of co-defendants, contesting proof of conspiratorial agreement and antitrust impact. At a more fundamental level, IPPs had to develop a persuasive, coherent explanation, understandable by lay jurors, that (1) "connected the dots" to show conspiracy through use of e-mail, fax, phone conversations, and the use of price increase announcements ("PIA") over a ten-year-plus Class Period; and (2) illustrated the fact and amount of "pass-through damages." Moreover, Defendants would surely appeal any adverse verdict, and "this Court's class certification decision (among other important interlocutory rulings) [would] be fair game for appellate review" (Doc. 1534 at 7–8). It must also be noted there is some evidence that a few Defendants might have been judgment-proof (Doc. 1988-1 at 9–17 (accurately summarizing the risks of going to trial)). All this makes clear that collecting a judgment from Defendants was far from guaranteed.

In light of these trial challenges, the benefit of the settlements is substantial. The total potential settlement amount of $151.25 million equates to more than 54% of the total, uncapped class damages estimated by Dr. Lamb using chemical manufacturer cost data, and 87% of the total estimated class damages using this data if pass-through is capped at 100% of the direct purchaser overcharge. Class Counsel states the $151.25 million total settlement amount is the fourth largest antitrust recovery obtained by an indirect purchaser class in the United States.

Given the real possibility that IPPs could have received much less -- even zero -- from a jury at trial or following an appeal, this factor also weighs in favor of approval.

Opinions of Class Counsel and Class Representatives

This Court easily credits the opinion of Class Counsel that the settlements do provide fair, reasonable, and adequate compensation for a release of the class claims. Class Counsel has extensive experience litigating class actions, including leadership roles in similarly large antitrust cases. See, e.g., Glickenhaus & Co. v. Household Int'l, Inc., 787 F.3d 408, 412 (7th Cir. 2015) (liaison counsel Marvin Miller, who is Lead Class Counsel in this case, was part of the trial team in a securities class action that obtained a jury verdict of $2.46 billion); Messner v. Evanston Northwestern Healthcare Corp. Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 6490152 (N.D. Ill. 2013) (co-lead class counsel Marvin Miller, who is Lead Class Counsel in this case, obtained reversal of the denial of class certification of an antitrust class). Class Counsel has spent tens of thousands of hours learning the strengths and weaknesses of IPPs' claims. Further, the Class Representatives have at least implicitly endorsed the settlements by virtue of having already submitted claims or indicating their intention to do so.

In sum, this Court has no reason to second-guess Class Counsel's conclusion that these settlements are in the best interest of the IPP class.

Reaction of Absent Class Members

The size of the class of IPPs in this case is enormous; indeed, in a brief submitted to the Supreme Court, defense counsel characterized this case as "likely the largest class action ever certified." Petition for Writ of Certiorari at 2, Carpenter Co. v. Ace Foam, Inc., 135 S. Ct. 1493 (2015) (No. 14-577). Nonetheless, only a handful of class members have chosen to opt out of the settlements.[3]

Further, another small group of objections, filed by serial objectors, are not well-taken. In contrast, over 27,000 individuals and businesses have so far filed claims. None of the business or institutional entities, the largest potential claimants, has opted out or filed an objection.

These statistics weigh in favor of final approval. "That the overwhelming majority of class members have elected to remain in the Settlement Class, without objection, constitutes the 'reaction of the class,' as a whole, and demonstrates that the Settlement is 'fair, reasonable, and adequate.'" In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 527 (E.D. Mich. 2003).

The Public Interest

Resolution of disputes through settlement rather than trial is normally in the public interest, as settlement serves to conserve scarce judicial resources. Further, "[s]ettlement of this antitrust action serves the public interest by ensuring effective enforcement of the antitrust laws and deterrence of anti-competitive conduct in the marketplace." In re Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 530. No party has suggested (and this Court does not apprehend) any legitimate countervailing interest that weighs against settlement approval.

Treatment of the Named Plaintiffs

A settlement can be unfair if it "gives preferential treatment to the named plaintiffs while only perfunctory relief to unnamed class members." Vassalle, 708 F.3d at 755 (internal quotation marks

[3] Class counsel explains that eight entities or individuals have requested exclusion, but: (1) three have done so even though they are direct purchasers -- that is, not members of the IPP class -- but want to make clear they will not be bound by orders in this case; (2) one is a school in Pennsylvania, which is not a Class State; (3) two have not provided the requisite information about their purchases; (4) one submitted the exclusion request after the deadline; and (5) one purchased two pillows for a total of $10.

omitted). In this case, it is clear that the unnamed class members are receiving much more than "perfunctory relief." The vast bulk of the settlement funds in this case will not be received by the named, representative Plaintiffs, most of whom are individuals with relatively small claims. Rather, the settlement funds will be distributed in a straightforward fashion, pro rata, to every claimant equally.

This is very different from the circumstances in Vassalle, where the named plaintiffs each received $2,000 plus exoneration of debts, while the unnamed class members received no money and their debts were not exonerated. Id. at 755–56. The disparity in Vassalle was stark, amounting to essentially no relief to unnamed class members. That is certainly not the case here.

OBJECTIONS

The UAW / Vassalle factors listed above each weigh in favor of final approval. This Court has also carefully examined the submissions filed by the objectors, who contend various aspects of the nine settlement agreements are unfair. The IPPs have responded to all the objections on the merits, but also spend several pages detailing the background of each objector. To varying degrees, IPPs assert that all the objectors (1) are serial objectors; (2) have improper motives; (3) plainly misstate the facts; (4) offer boilerplate language they have presented to other courts unsuccessfully; (5) have suffered serious disciplinary proceedings; (6) make scurrilous, unfounded accusations (e.g., perjury and fraud by IPP counsel); and/or (7) make extortionist threats. Except for the fact that objector CCAF has appeared and objected in numerous other class-action cases, these characterizations do not apply to CCAF -- CCAF's objection is lucid and filed in good faith. In contrast, all these characterizations do apply to objector Narkin, and at least some apply to every other objector. IPPs ask this Court to impose sanctions against at least some of the objectors, and also to require each objector to post a bond for any appeal.

"It is undisputed that some objectors add value to the class-action settlement process by: (1) transforming the fairness hearing into a truly adversarial proceeding; (2) supplying the Court with both precedent and argument to gauge the reasonableness of the settlement and lead counsel's fee request; and (3) preventing collusion between lead plaintiff and defendants." In re Cardinal Health, Inc. Sec. Litig., 550 F. Supp. 2d 751, 753 (S.D. Ohio 2008). Unfortunately, however, "class actions also attract those in the legal profession who subsist primarily off of the skill and labor of, to say nothing of the risk borne by, more capable attorneys. These are the opportunistic objectors. Although they contribute nothing to the class, they object to the settlement, thereby obstructing payment to lead counsel or the class in the hope that lead plaintiff will pay them to go away." Id. at 754.

Several of the objectors in this case clearly fall into the latter category. Nonetheless, this Court chooses not to impose any sanction -- at least now. Even objector Andrews, who repeatedly makes baseless accusations using inappropriate language (e.g., Doc. 1928 at 43) (asserting Class Counsel engaged in "high on meth document discovery review"), also identifies a few legitimate concerns (e.g., Doc. 1920 at 9) (questioning why counsel did not identify specific potential cy pres beneficiaries in the settlement agreement). Andrews deserves opprobrium, but his objection is not entirely devoid of color. Accordingly, even though the objectors raise many unfounded, conclusory, and frivolous objections, this Court will simply focus on the merits of the objections that deserve analysis.

Content of Forms and Claims Administration Process

Objector Andrews offers a litany of questions as a means of complaining about the claims process and claim forms. For example, he asks (Doc. 1920):

1. Why do claimants have to provide a social security number?

2. Why do they have to check off each separate settlement from which exclusion is desired, rather than check off the ones in which they want to be included?

3. Why don't claimants receive acknowledgment of their claim by the Administrator?

4. Why is it not stated how long it will take for checks to arrive?

Of course, there are good answers to each of these questions:

1. To prevent fraud and comply with potential tax requirements.

2. To make a claimant's participation in all settlements more likely.

3. Because it would increase administrative costs.

4. Because it is impossible to predict accurately how long it will take to investigate spurious claims and finally determine benefit amounts.

None of the issues Andrews raises suggests the design of the claim forms or the claims administration process carries any meaningful or serious faults.

Andrews also challenges the requirements for opting-out. For example, Andrews asks (1) Why can't opt-outs file their form online instead of having to mail it in?; and (2) Why are opt-outs asked to provide "unnecessary" information, such as which particular settlements they want to opt out of, and what foam-products they bought? It suffices to say, again, there are good answers to these questions and Andrews does not identify any serious faults in the opt-out process. Indeed, even if the occasional suggestion Andrews offers is reasonable, he does not show the existing format is unreasonable. And, so long as the settlement agreements and the processes used to effectuate them are "fair, reasonable, and adequate," Federal Civil Rule 23(e)(2), this Court has no reason to disapprove them.

In a two-page objection, Sweeney offers a list of boilerplate, conclusory assertions, including the "[c]laims administration process fails to require reliable oversight, accountability, and reporting about whether the claims process actually delivers what was promised;" and the claim "[t]imeframes and deadlines benefit Defendants and Class Counsel, but not Class Members" (Doc. 1968). Sweeney offers absolutely no analysis or factual support for these statements. His objections, like Andrews, are also overruled.

Plan of Allocation

Andrews asserts there "should be a minimum distribution amount set, say $10.00, because a de minimis threshold is necessary to ensure an efficient allocation of the settlement fund" (Doc. 1920 at 8–9). The effect of such a threshold, however, would be -- if anything -- to deprive a number of class members with low-value claims from receiving any payment. While it is true there comes a point where the cost of sending a check for settlement benefits can exceed the value of the check itself, it is also true that "something is better than nothing" in a class settlement. In re Whirlpool Corp. Front-Loading Washer Prods. Liab. Litig., 2010 WL 2756947, at *3 n.3 (N.D. Ohio 2010) (citing In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1015–16 (7th Cir. 2002)), aff'd, 722 F.3d 838 (6th Cir. 2013); see also Miller v. Ghirardelli Chocolate Co., 2015 WL 758094, at *1 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (granting final approval of a class settlement where claimants received up to $1.50 per uncorroborated product purchase, up to a maximum of $24). Andrews may be correct that it is appropriate for some settlements to have a minimum distribution amount, but he has not shown it is inappropriate for the settlements in this case not to have one.

Objector Cochran offers a different criticism, complaining that, by "weighting" various claims (e.g., bedding claims are weighted at 80% while carpet claims are weighted at 90%), the Plan of Allocation "sets improper limits on the amount that a claimant may receive for each Qualifying Claim" (Doc. 1964 at 1). Cochran implies that a claim for a $1,000 mattress should be weighted at 100%, not 80%, and the 80% weighting deprives the claimant of funds he is due: "If the entire amount of the Net Settlement Fund is not consumed by filed claims at the existing caps, the caps should be removed and the entire Settlement Fund paid out to the claimants pro rata." Id. at 3.

This objection is not well-taken for three reasons. First, the mattress is not made up entirely of foam, so the purchaser is not entitled to 100% of the purchase price as damages. Second, even if the mattress was 100% foam, the "pass through" of illegal foam markup attributable to the final mattress price is not 100% of that price. In other words, the weightings reflect a reasonable estimate of the relative proportions of how much the illegal foam markup affected the total price of different categories of a final product. And third, it is already clear that "the entire amount of the Net Settlement Fund" will be "consumed by filed claims at the existing caps" (id.).

Incentive Awards

The settlements provide for a total of $200,000 in incentive awards for the Class Representatives -- $10,000 each for the 13 individuals, and $35,000 each for the two companies.[4] Andrews asserts these awards "may be excessive" and suggests it will create an "unfair disparity" between the named Plaintiffs and the unnamed class members. Andrews cites Vassalle, 708 F.3rd 747, where the Sixth Circuit reversed final approval of a class settlement because, among other things, "the disparity in the relief afforded under the settlement to the named plaintiffs, on the one hand, and the unnamed class members, on the other hand, made the settlement unfair." Id. at 755.

As noted above, the disparity in Vassalle was stark, amounting to essentially no relief to unnamed class members, compared with $2,000 incentive awards to the representative plaintiffs. In other words, all the available compensation went to the named plaintiffs. In this case, there will be over $100 million available to all claimants on a pro rata basis; the $200,000 in incentive awards will amount to less than 0.2% of the total payments. There is no unfair disparity.

[4] Objectors Andrews, Hinojosa, and Cannata all state the incentive awards will be $285,000, but their math is incorrect -- the total will be $200,000. Hinojosa simply asserts "the requested $285,000 in incentive payments" is excessive, without any analysis or explanation (Doc. 1967 at 1). Cannata does even less, merely asserting that all requested fees and awards are unreasonable (Doc. 1950 at 1). This Court's analysis of Andrews' objection applies equally to Hinojosa and Cannata.

Moreover, the Sixth Circuit has endorsed the use of incentive awards. See Hadix v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 895, 897 (6th Cir. 2003) ("Numerous courts have authorized incentive awards . . . [as] efficacious ways of encouraging members of a class to become class representatives and rewarding individual efforts taken on behalf of the class."); see also Doc. 1971 at 23–24 (granting final approval to the DPP settlement agreements and noting, "[d]istrict courts in this Circuit routinely grant incentive awards to representative plaintiffs in antitrust matters, when the representative plaintiff actively participates in the litigation") (citing cases).

The incentive awards of $10,000 each for the individuals and $35,000 each for the companies are well within an appropriate range. And this Court accepts Class Counsel's explanation that "[t]he requested incentive award for the corporate plaintiffs is higher than for the individuals because . . . [the corporations] did a more substantial amount of work on the case -- reviewing and producing a much larger quantity of documents and making their corporate executive available for lengthy depositions" (Doc. 1997 at 21).

Amount of Damages versus Amount of Settlements

Several objectors suggest the settlement results are so unimpressive that the settlement agreements are inadequate. Cochran characterizes the settlements as "a very modest result," "decidedly mediocre," and "underwhelming" (Doc. 1964 at 3, 5). Narkin asserts "[t]here is no adequate showing that the proposed Settlement bears any relationship to the alleged damages inflicted by Defendant [sic] on Plaintiffs" (Doc. 1965 at 1). And Andrews throws muck by asking rhetorically "what are the highest single damages calculated by the expert that the class can recover before [trebling]?"; and suggesting the $151.25 million total settlement is inadequate by quoting the statistic that wholesale U.S. mattress revenues in 2012 were $6.8 billion (Doc. 1920 at 7–8).

This Court rejects these mischaracterizations. Addressing Andrews' objection first, the answer to his question is that IPP expert Dr. Lamb calculated damages in this case using four different methods. The first method was to use chemical price data published by Independent Chemical Information Services ("ICIS"), and not capping the possible pass-through at 100%, which yielded a damages calculation of $2.2 billion. The second method was to use ICIS chemical price data and capping the possible pass-through at 100%, which yielded a damages calculation of $1.25 billion. The third was to use data obtained by the DPPs from Defendants' own chemical suppliers, and not capping the possible pass-through at 100%, which yielded a damages calculation of $279.5 million. And the fourth was to use data obtained by the DPPs from Defendants' own chemical suppliers and capping the possible pass-through at 100%, which yielded a damages calculation of $173.3 million. During Daubert briefing, Defendants insisted the lowest number was more reliable than the other three.

Calculated against these different damage assessments, the $151.25 million settlement is, respectively, 7%, or 12%, or 54%, or 87% of Lamb's estimates. Measured in this way, it is unfair to call the $151.25 million settlement "mediocre." For example, IPPs cite In re Rite Aid Corp. Securities Litigation, 146 F. Supp. 2d 706, 715 (E.D. Pa. 2001), which observed that, since 1995, securities class action settlements "have recovered between 5.5% and 6.2% of the class members' estimated losses." In Van Horn v. Nationwide Property & Casualty Insurance Co., 2010 WL 1751995 (N.D. Ohio 2010) aff'd, 436 F. App'x 496 (6th Cir. 2011), the court described the settlement result -- where class members received approximately 50% of their actual damages in a simple contract case -- as "a moderately good one." Id. at *5. And in the DPP case, this Court described the settlement as "excellent," where it represented "roughly 52 percent of [Plaintiff expert] Leitzinger's damages model prior to trebling." Doc. 1971 at 15. These comparisons undermine any argument that the result in this case is inadequate.

Further, the statistic cited by Andrews -- that wholesale U.S. mattress revenues in 2012 were $6.8 billion -- is a non sequitur. This figure does not in any way measure the "antitrust markup / pass-through" at issue, which is how damages must be measured, much less account for the fact that the class definition does not include numerous states.

More important, "[i]t is well-settled that a cash settlement amounting to only a fraction of the potential recovery will not per se render the settlement inadequate or unfair. Indeed, there is no reason, at least in theory, why a satisfactory settlement could not amount to a hundredth or even a thousandth part of a single percent of the potential recovery." In re Bear Stearns Cos., Inc. Sec. Litig., 909 F. Supp. 2d 259, 270 (S.D.N.Y.2012) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The propriety of a settlement must be assessed as "a function of both (1) the size of the amount relative to the best possible recovery; and (2) the likelihood of non-recovery (or reduced recovery)." Id. Here, there was a very real risk of complete non-recovery, and the ratio of actual recovery to best-possible recovery is, at the least, above average. The possibility "that the settlement could have been better . . . does not mean the settlement presented was not fair, reasonable or adequate," because "[s]ettlement is the offspring of compromise; the question . . . is not whether the final product could be prettier, smarter or snazzier, but whether it is fair, adequate and free from collusion." Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1027 (9th Cir. 1998).

The objectors' armchair-quarterbacking and wishing-for-more does not provide valid grounds to disapprove the settlements. The objection that the settlement is insufficient, inadequate, or unfair is not well-taken.

Matters Not Mentioned in the Class Notice

Contingent Amounts. Although the Class Notice lists nine settlement amounts and the $151.25 million total, it does not state that $9.25 million (6.1%) is contingent upon whether Defendants Hickory Springs and Future Foam succeed in separate litigation against Dow Chemical. Nor does it state that $10 million (6.6%) will not be paid into the settlement escrow account(s) for some period of time. Objector CCAF argues the Notice is therefore deficient.

CCAF cites to no case directly on point; rather, it cites cases for the general proposition that "notice must be of such nature as reasonably to convey the required information, and it must afford a reasonable time for those interested to make their appearance." Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank, 339 U.S. 306, 314 (1950) (citation omitted). CCAF also cites cases where the court found notice was insufficient, but those scenarios are egregious. See, e.g., In re Katrina Canal Breaches Litig., 628 F.3d 185, 198 (5th Cir. 2010) (finding notice insufficient because "the notice did not inform class members of the possibility that they would not receive any direct benefit from the settlement" and "does not clearly inform class members of the real possibility, acknowledged by all parties, that there may be [only] a cy pres distribution in lieu of any direct distribution of funds to the class members") (emphasis added). Indeed, Katrina also emphasized that class notice "is not required to provide a complete source of settlement information." Id. at 197 (quoting Maher v. Zapata Corp., 714 F.2d 436, 452 (5th Cir. 1983)).

In Vassalle, the Sixth Circuit set out the relevant standard for assessing whether class notice is adequate:

> [D]ue process requires that notice to the class be reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections. Due process, however, does not require the notice to set forth every ground on which class members might object to the settlement. Rather, all that the notice must do is fairly apprise the prospective members of the class of the terms of the proposed settlement so that class members may come to their own conclusions about whether the settlement serves their interests.

Vassalle, 708 F.3d 747, 759 (6th Cir. 2013) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

The Notice in this case meets this standard. The Notice directs class members to the website www.polyfoamclassaction.com, where the full settlement agreements are posted. The amount of contingent funds is only 6.1% of the total, which is highly unlikely to be a decisive factor in whether a class member would decide to participate or instead opt out.[5] The same conclusion is all the more true with respect to settlement funds that are payable over the next two years instead of immediately. See, e.g., In re Oral Sodium Phosphate Solution-Based Prods. Liab. Action, No. 09-SP-80000, Doc. 427 (N.D. Ohio 2015) (documenting the history of seven payments of settlement benefits to class members over a period of more than five years). Nor is it unusual for class action claimants to receive their first payment over a year after submitting their claim (Doc. 2010-1 at 1–3).

Identity of Cy Pres Beneficiaries. Several objectors raised issues related to cy pres beneficiaries. One issue is whether Class Notice was inadequate because it did not identify with particularity the entities that might receive settlement funds pursuant to the cy pres doctrine. The second issue is whether it is appropriate for the settlement agreements to provide for cy pres distribution of settlement proceeds at all. This Court addresses the first issue now and the second issue later.

Objector CCAF, and to a lesser extent objector Andrews, take issue with the failure of Class Notice to provide the specific identities of potential cy pres beneficiaries. The Notice does explain that "it is possible that any money remaining after claims are paid will be distributed to charities or other beneficiaries approved by the Court" (Doc. 1860 at 16), but gives no other information. The Plan of Allocation adds only this (id. at 27):

[5] For example, a $1,000 mattress claim will be valued at 80% ($800), and will then ultimately be assigned a pro rata payment of, say, 20% ($160) -- probably less. The contingent settlement funds (assuming all are received) would pay only 6.1% of this amount, or about $9.75 of this $160. This potential difference is unlikely to be a factor in the class member's decision to participate or opt out, especially when the alternative is to bring an independent lawsuit.

> In the event there are Settlement Funds remaining after distribution of all payments to Eligible Claimants according to Section III of this Plan of Allocation, the remaining Funds will be distributed to charities or other beneficiaries that have objectives related as closely as possible to the purposes and remedies sought by the class action. These beneficiaries will be suggested by Lead Counsel and are subject to approval by the Court at the appropriate time, if circumstances warrant.

Thus, class members do not know, before electing to participate or not, whether there will be a cy pres distribution and if so, to whom.

CCAF does provide support for the proposition that cy pres beneficiaries must be disclosed with particularity at the time of settlement. In Dennis v. Kellogg Co., 697 F.3d 858 (9th Cir. 2012), the benefits provided by the class-action settlement agreement included (1) $2.75 million, used to pay eligible claimants up to $15 each; (2) donation of any left-over funds -- which, ultimately, amounted to almost $2 million -- "to unidentified 'charities chosen by the parties and approved by the Court pursuant to the cy pres doctrine'"; and (3) donation of $5.5 million worth of specific Kellogg food items to charities that feed the indigent. Id. at 862–63. The district court granted final approval to the settlement agreement, but the appellate court reversed, because (i) the agreement did not specifically identify the cy pres recipients; and (ii) the category of charities mentioned, although laudable, had nothing to do with the purpose of the lawsuit (rectifying false advertising) or the plaintiffs involved (purchasers of Kellogg's cereal). The Dennis court added that its "concerns are not placated by the settlement provision that the charities will be identified at a later date and approved by the court." Id. at 867.

Several other federal appellate courts, however, disagree with Dennis. In Baby Products Antitrust Litig., 708 F.3d 163, 180 (3d Cir. 2013), the court reversed final approval and remanded for further consideration because the district court could not have known how large a portion of the settlement funds would ultimately be distributed cy pres instead of to members of the class -- $18.5 million out of the $35.5 million settlement. Importantly, however, the Baby Products court also held that the "failure to identify the cy pres recipients [in the settlement agreement and class notice] is not a due process violation. Class members know there is a possibility of a cy pres award and that the Court will select among recipients proposed by the parties at a later date. This knowledge is adequate to allow any interested class member to keep apprised of the cy pres recipient selection process." Id. at 180. Even though the Baby Products court agreed with and cited Dennis for other propositions, id. at 178, it simply disagreed with Dennis on the necessity of listing specific cy pres beneficiaries in the class notice.

This Court has found another appellate case that sets out a well-considered approach for choosing between Dennis and Baby Products. In BankAmerica Corp. Sec. Litig., 775 F.3d 1060 (8th Cir. 2015), after the district court granted final approval of a class action settlement, the claims administration process proceeded to the point where $2.44 million remained in the $333.2 million settlement fund. Id. at 1062. Class counsel asked that this remainder be distributed as follows: (1) a final, additional attorney fee award of $98,000; and (2) the rest ($2.34 million) to three charities suggested by class counsel. Id. The district court granted the motion but the appellate court reversed, finding several problems with the cy pres distribution process, including the large amount and the choice of recipients. Id. at 1064–67.

Relevant to CCAF's objection, the BankAmerica court also discussed under what circumstances class notice will be inadequate for failing to identify the cy pres recipients. The court concluded: "[The objector] argues that the award must be reversed because [class counsel] did not notify the class of its motion for a cy pres distribution. We agree that, unless the amount of funds to be distributed cy pres is de minimis, the district court should make a cy pres proposal publicly available and allow class members to object or suggest alternative recipients before this court selects a cy pres recipient. This gives class members a voice in choosing a 'next best' third party [cy pres recipient] and minimizes any appearance of judicial overreaching." Id. at 1066 (emphasis added) (citing Baby Prods., 708 F.3d at 180).

In this case, as discussed below, any cy pres distribution will be de minimis. Unlike Dennis, Baby Products, and BankAmerica, where the cy pres distributions were in the millions of dollars, a cy pres distribution in this case will occur only after "the marginal cost of making an additional pro rata distribution to the class members exceeds the amount available for distribution." Klier v. Elf Atochem N. America, Inc., 658 F.3d 468, 475 n.15 (5th Cir. 2011). As BankAmerica suggests, even under the more stringent standard, class notice may be silent about the identity of recipients of de minimis cy pres distributions without violating Rule 23. Those are the circumstances present in this case. Accordingly, CCAF's objection is not well-taken.

Having concluded that Class Notice in this case is fair and adequate, despite its silence about the identity of potential cy pres recipients, this Court also adds that CCAF has nonetheless identified a best practice. Especially because the term "de minimis" carries no precise definition, and also in the interest of full disclosure, this Court agrees that class counsel in most cases would be wise to identify in their class action settlement precisely what entities may receive cy pres distributions. This practice increases transparency and minimizes the likelihood that a settlement agreement will not receive final approval, or that approval is reversed on appeal.

Accordingly, rather than put this issue off until the claims administration process comes to a close, this Court orders as follows.

Within thirty (30) days of the date of this Order, Lead Counsel shall submit a proposal identifying the "charities or other beneficiaries that have objectives related as closely as possible to the purposes and remedies sought by the class action," to whom any cy pres distributions will be made. Doc. 1860 at 27; see also BankAmerica, 775 F.3d at 1067 (adding that "unclaimed funds should be distributed for a purpose as near as possible to the legitimate objectives underlying the lawsuit, the interests of class members, and the interests of those similarly situated" and noting that the geographic distribution of cy pres funds should be similar to the geographic scope of the class). This Court commends to Class Counsel, as they consider potential cy pres recipients, the above-cited cases, as well as: Nachshin v. AOL, LLC, 663 F.3d 1034, 1038 (9th Cir. 2011) (discussing mechanisms necessary to correct "some court[s'] . . . abandon[ment of] the 'next best use' principle implicit in the cy pres doctrine"); Pearson v. NBTY, Inc., 772 F.3d 778 (7th Cir. 2014); and the American Law Institute's Principles of the Law of Aggregate Litigation ("ALI Principles") § 3.07 (2010) (often cited in these cases). See also discussion at the final fairness hearing (Doc. 2018 at 33–36, 43–45, 49–50).

Cy Pres* Distribution

Objector Cochran takes issue not with the absence in the Class Notice of the identity of cy pres beneficiaries, but with any cy pres distributions at all. For example, Cochran asserts that "no settlement money may be paid to cy pres [sic] until every class member who has filed a claim has received 100% of alleged damages, which in this case would include treble and punitive damages" (Doc. 1964 at 1–2) (emphasis changed from original). In support of this assertion, Cochran cites Klier and BankAmerica. But these authorities do not stand for the proposition Cochran asserts. Rather, Klier states as follows:

> Because the settlement funds are the property of the class, a cy pres distribution to a third party of unclaimed settlement funds is permissible "only when it is not feasible to make further distributions to class members" [quoting ALI Principles § 3.07 cmt. a]. Where it is still logistically feasible and economically viable to make additional pro rata distributions to class members, the district court should do so, except where an additional distribution would provide a windfall to class members with liquidated-damages claims that were 100 percent satisfied by the initial distribution. A cy pres distribution puts settlement funds to their next-best use by providing an indirect benefit to the class. That option arises only if it is not possible to put those funds to their very best use: benefitting the class members directly.

Klier, 658 F.3d 468 at 475 (emphasis added, footnotes omitted). BankAmerica quoted with approval this language from Klier, and also quoted the entirety of ALI Principles § 3.07 which is increasingly followed by appellate courts. See Bank America, 775 F.3d at 1063–64.

The essence of these authorities is that a "cy pres award is supposed to be limited to money that can't feasibly be awarded to the intended beneficiaries." Pearson, 772 F.3d at 784. This will occur, for example, when "the amounts involved are too small to make individual distributions economically viable." ALI Principles § 3.07(b). The Klier court explains:

> In large class actions, substantial administrative costs attend the distribution of settlement funds. As the settlement funds are disbursed and the amount still available for distribution to the class declines, there comes a point at which the marginal cost of making an additional pro rata distribution to the class members exceeds the amount available for distribution. It is only at this point that a district court has discretion to order a cy pres distribution.

Klier, 658 F.3d at 475 n.15 (internal citation omitted).

In this case, Class Counsel and the Claims Administrator have made clear that the claims administration process will follow the precepts set out above. Specifically, the Claims Administrator explained that (1) there will be at least two distributions; (2) expectations are that, after all distributions are made, "[less] than $50,000 will remain as residual," mostly due to uncashed checks; and (3) "To avoid having leftover funds at the completion of the settlement process and to ensure the residual balance remaining in the fund after the initial and subsequent distributions are distributed to the Class to the greatest extent possible, [the Claims Administrator] will undertake an analysis, in consultation with Class Counsel, to determine whether it is economically feasible to perform additional rounds of distributions to class members" (Declaration of Eric Miller (Doc. 2010-1) at ¶¶ 7, 9). Only after funds have "reach[ed] a point whe[re] it is no longer economical to continue making distributions" will the Administrator notify Class Counsel that "the [remaining] funds should become part of the residual for cy pres as stated in the Plan of Allocation and referenced in the Notice to the Class" (id. at ¶ 12).

In sum, this case is not like Klier, BankAmerica, or Pearson, where hundreds of thousands or even millions of dollars were directed to cy pres recipients instead of to class members. Rather, cy pres distributions will be made only after it is no longer economically practical to make distributions to the class, and only with this Court's approval that this de minimis distribution is appropriate.

ATTORNEY FEES

The single most-addressed issue raised by all the objectors is the amount of attorney fees and expenses requested by Class Counsel. In addition to the amount of fees, objectors also challenge the timing of Counsel's receipt of fees, and how the fees are divided among Class Counsel. This Court addresses these issues in reverse order.

Division of Common Benefit Fees Between Counsel

Although the nine settlement agreements do not speak to how any fee award will be divided among IPP Class Counsel, the motion for fee award does state: "Lead Counsel also requests the Court's authorization to distribute the fees in a manner that, in the judgment of Lead Counsel, fairly compensates each firm for its contribution to the prosecution of Plaintiffs' claims" (Doc. 1987-1 at 14–15 n.1). CCAF objects to this plan, asserting that "Rule 23(h) requires the district court to set and allocate the fee award. It is legal error for the court to delegate the allocation of that fee award to a non-judicial third party or to defer to the allocation proposed by the attorneys themselves." (Doc. 1960 at 36).

CCAF is wrong. Courts routinely permit counsel to divide common benefit fees among themselves. See, e.g., In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 533 n.15 (3d Cir. 2004) (affirming the district court's decision to permit co-chairs of the Executive Committee to divide attorney fees according to their discretion, and declining to "deviate from the accepted practice of allowing counsel to apportion fees amongst themselves"); In re Telectronics Pacing Sys., Inc., 137 F.

Supp. 2d 1029, 1033 (S.D. Ohio 2001) (approving distribution of a "single fee from which the [plaintiffs' Steering Committee] will allocate the attorneys' fees among the attorneys who provided a benefit to the Class"); In re Broadwing, Inc. ERISA Litig., 252 F.R.D. 369, 383 (S.D. Ohio 2006) ("Class Counsel shall allocate the award of attorneys' fees among counsel for the Class based on their good-faith assessment of the contribution of such counsel to the prosecution of this Action."); In re BP Propane Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 06-CV-3541, Doc. 209 at 2 (N.D. Ill. 2010) ("Any and all allocations of attorneys' fees and expenses shall be allocated among Plaintiffs' Counsel at the direction of Lead Counsel at its discretion, who shall apportion the fees and expenses based upon their assessment, in its sole discretion, of the respective contributions to the litigation made by each counsel.").

Furthermore, the Sixth Circuit has suggested it would adopt the approach approved in Warfarin and the other cases cited above. In Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 102 F.3d 777 (6th Cir. 1996), the objectors wanted to discover class counsel's fee-sharing agreements. The district court denied discovery, stating it "will not become involved in how the counsel and court-appointed special counsel divide the total fee award." Id. at 781. The Sixth Circuit affirmed, observing:

> The district court examined the work performed by [both] class and special counsel and the value their work conferred upon the class. Thus, the district court decided exactly what that group of attorneys' work was worth and then awarded a fee commensurate with that worth. How special counsel and class counsel ultimately divide that fee among themselves appears to be irrelevant. As long as class and special counsel are paid only what their collective work is worth, their distributions among themselves, even if done in a manner unrelated to the services a particular counsel has performed for the class, will in no way harm the class or negatively impact the fund from which the class's benefit is measured.

Id. (emphasis added).

CCAF cites one case that gives some support to its position. In re High Sulfur Content Gasoline Prods. Liab. Litig., 517 F.3d 220, 229 (5th Cir. 2008), reversed a common benefit fee award because a five-member fee committee determined who would get what, and the district court rubber-stamped their determination. High Sulfur contrasted that with circumstances where all the attorneys come to agreement among themselves (id. at 234 (internal citations omitted)):

> Appellees cite several district court cases from this circuit in which courts . . . award[ed] a lump-sum attorneys' fee and allow[ed] counsel to divide up the award by agreement. That fee allocation procedure, however, is significantly different from the procedures used here. It is one thing for all attorneys to come to an agreement about dividing up fees, and quite another for five attorneys to declare how an award will cover themselves and seventy-four other attorneys with no meaningful judicial supervision or review.

High Sulfur is inapposite for two reasons. First, as between High Sulfur and Bowling, this Court is bound to follow the latter which is from the Sixth Circuit. Second, from the beginning of this case, all attorneys working as Class Counsel have long known the procedure for how any fee award would be divided (see Doc. 29 at 2) (making Lead Counsel responsible for "[a]llocating among counsel any attorneys fees that may be awarded by the Court (subject to the jurisdiction of the Court to resolve any disputes related to such allocation)"). Unlike High Sulfur, where there was no fee agreement between counsel, all the Plaintiffs' attorneys who participated in this case agreed (at least implicitly) to receive remuneration under this mechanism.

Accordingly, the objection that this Court may not delegate to Lead Counsel the task of allocating the fee award among Class Counsel is overruled. This Court adds, however, that if a fee dispute does erupt -- and this Court does not expect one will -- this Court retains jurisdiction to settle that dispute.

Timing of Payment of Attorney Fee Awards

As noted earlier, of the $151.25 million in settlement funds, Defendants will have deposited $88.5 million into escrow within fifteen (15) days of the date of this Order. There is another $10 million in payments payable over the next two years, plus $43.5 million payable once all appellate rights are exhausted, plus $9.25 million in contingent funds. Objector Cannata asserts that "Class Counsel's fees should be deferred until such time as the Court has received reports indicating the amount of monetary relief that has actually been delivered to the Class" (Doc. 1950 at 2). Similarly, CCAF insists that "Counsel is not entitled to a fee award based on funds that may never materialize and never benefit the class" (Doc. 1960 at 21). CCAF cites several cases where courts delayed payment to class counsel until the distribution process was complete. See, e.g., Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 102 F.3d 777, 780 (6th Cir. 1996) (affirming common benefit fee award consisting of an immediate payment of "10% of the $102.5 million that has been paid into the common fund to date," plus "up to $6.25 million more over the next ten years [based upon] . . . up to 10% of the [ten future] $6.25 million annual [settlement] payments").

This objection is well-taken, as Class Counsel concedes. In fact, Class Counsel cites another case standing for the same proposition (Doc. 1991 at 40):

> Class Counsel has always been willing to wait to obtain the portion of its . . . fee until the contingency is satisfied and Defendants deposit such funds in escrow. Courts have applied this sort of fee payment schedule in cases where there is a delayed payment into the fund. See, e.g., In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 291 F.R.D. 93, 113 (E.D. Pa. 2013) (awarding 33⅓% of the amounts paid into the initial settlement fund "plus 33⅓% of any sums that may become part of the Settlement Fund after the calculation provided for in the Plan of Allocation").

It is worth noting there are good reasons for IPPs to agree that some of the settlement funds should not be payable immediately. The delayed-payment mechanism was necessary in order to secure a larger total fund from Defendants, some of whom were at risk of bankruptcy and had already obligated themselves to pay other settlements to DPPs. Ultimately, IPPs will get more money by agreeing to accept some of it as deferred or contingent.

That said, however, it is only fair that counsel and the class they represent are treated equally. Class members will receive benefits, and Class Counsel will receive fees, only if and when funds become available. Payment of common benefit attorney fees to IPP Class Counsel will be made on a percentage basis only as settlement funds are deposited into the settlement escrow account(s).

The Amount of the Award of Attorney Fees and Expenses

In their fee petition, Class Counsel for IPPs asks this Court to (a) use the "percentage-of-the-fund" method to calculate a common benefit fee award; and (b) award a fee of 30% of the gross settlement amount of $151.25 million, which equals $45,375,000. IPPs also ask for reimbursement of $5,122,065.78 in expenses.

Objectors attack these figures in three ways, arguing (1) the 30% figure is too high; (2) Counsel's lodestar, which this Court must use as a cross-check against the 30% figure, is inflated; and (3) the percentage should be applied against the net settlement amount, not the gross amount. This Court examines the last contention first, and then weighs the other two objections together.

Gross versus Net. Objectors Andrews and CCAF assert that any common benefit fee percentage should be assessed only after subtracting the $5.1 million in expenses, $200,000 in incentive awards, and roughly $1.57 million in notice costs (see Doc. 1920 at 23–24 (misstating some of these numbers); Doc. 1960 at 20–23). Andrews and CCAF cite several cases supporting this position. See, e.g., Pearson, 772 F.3d at 781 ("[A]dministrative costs should not have been included in calculating the division of the spoils between class counsel and class members. Those costs are part of the settlement but not part of the value received from the settlement by the members of the class. The costs therefore shed no light on the fairness of the division of the settlement pie between class counsel and class members.") (internal quotation marks omitted); In re Cardinal Health Inc. Secs. Litig., 528 F. Supp. 2d 752, 771 (S.D. Ohio 2007) ("The net recovery more truly approximates the amount of money that benefits the Class. Because the percentage approach is meant to align the attorneys' fees with the amount of money the class receives, the net recovery is a more appropriate metric.").

As CCAF concedes, however, other cases hold it is within the discretion of this Court to use the gross amount. See, e.g., In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 953 (9th Cir. 2015) ("The district court did not abuse its discretion in calculating the fee award as a percentage of the total settlement fund, including notice and administrative costs, and litigation expenses. We have repeatedly held that the reasonableness of attorneys' fees is not measured by the choice of the denominator. . . . [T]he choice of whether to base an attorneys' fee award on either net or gross recovery should not make a difference so long as the end result is reasonable.") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); Powers v. Eichen, 229 F.3d 1249, 1258 (9th Cir. 2000) ("[T]he choice of whether to base an attorneys' fee award on either net or gross recovery should not make a difference so long as the end result is reasonable. Our case law teaches that the reasonableness of attorneys' fees is not measured by the choice of the denominator.").

Furthermore, numerous district courts in the Sixth Circuit have based fees on the gross settlement amount, and none have been reversed on that ground. See, e.g., In re Prandin Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2015 WL 1396473, at *4 (E.D. Mich. 2015) (granting fee award of one-third of the gross settlement fund); In re Sulzer Orthopedics, Inc., 398 F.3d 778, 780–82 (6th Cir. 2005) (affirming individual fee awards made from a common benefit fund based on the gross settlement amount); Bowling, 102 F.3d at 779 ("It is within the district court's discretion to determine the 'appropriate method for calculating attorney's fees.'" (quoting Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Props., Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 516 (6th Cir.1993))).

Accordingly, this Court overrules objectors' assertion that, when using the "percentage-of-the-fund" method to determine a common benefit fee award, the percentage this Court chooses must be applied to the net settlement amount.

The Fee Award. The Sixth Circuit directs district courts, "[w]hen awarding attorney's fees in a class action, [to] . . . make sure that counsel is fairly compensated for the amount of work done as well as for the results achieved." Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516. At the same time, however, the fee award must account for the reality that "[t]he interest of class counsel in obtaining fees is adverse to the interest of the class in obtaining recovery because the fees come out of the common fund set up for the benefit of the class." Id.; see also Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 968 (9th Cir. 2009) ("At the fee-setting stage when fees are to come out of the settlement fund, the district court has a fiduciary role for the class.").

A court has available "two methods for calculating [common benefit] attorney's fees: the lodestar and the percentage-of-the-fund." Van Horn v. Nationwide Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 436 F. App'x 496, 498 (6th Cir. 2011). "District courts have discretion 'to select the more appropriate method for calculating attorney's fees in light of the unique characteristics of class actions in general, and of the unique circumstances of the actual cases before them.'" Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516. "The lodestar method better accounts for the amount of work done, while the percentage of the fund method more accurately reflects the results achieved." Id.

In this case, for three reasons, this Court elects to use the percentage-of-the-fund method, with a lodestar cross-check. First, Class Counsel requests the percentage approach, and none of the objectors argue otherwise -- they argue only that the percentage requested is too high. Second, "[i]n general, . . . percentage of the fund has been the preferred method for common fund cases, where there is a single pool of money and each class member is entitled to a share (i.e., a 'common fund')." Lonardo v. Travelers Indem. Co., 706 F. Supp. 2d 766, 789 (N.D. Ohio 2010); see also Connectivity Sys. Inc. v. Nat'l City Bank, 2011 WL 292008, at *13 (S.D. Ohio 2011) (the percentage-of-the-fund method "most closely approximates how lawyers are paid in the private market and incentivizes lawyers to maximize class recovery, but in an efficient manner"). And third, the percentage-of-the-fund method avoids the need for highly-detailed examinations and calculations required when fact-checking the lodestar. See In re Cardinal Health Inc. Sec. Litigs., 528 F. Supp. 2d 752, 761 (S.D. Ohio 2007) ("The lodestar method has been rightly criticized for . . . burdening district judges with the tedious task of auditing time records."). Still, "most courts adopting the percentage approach [also] conduct a 'lodestar cross-check' to prevent counsel from receiving a windfall. The cross-check requires the Court to calculate the lodestar multiplier in the case and ensure that the fee award is still roughly aligned with the amount of work the attorneys contributed." Id. at 764 (emphasis added).

When assessing the reasonableness of a fee award, courts examine these factors: "(1) the value of the benefit rendered to the plaintiff class; (2) the value of the services on an hourly basis; (3) whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis; (4) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others; (5) the complexity of the litigation; and (6) the professional skill and standing of counsel involved on both sides." Moulton v. U.S. Steel Corp., 581 F.3d 344, 352 (6th Cir. 2009) (quoting Bowling, 102 F.3d at 780). This Court's assessment of these factors in this case is as follows.

Value of the Benefit Provided. As discussed above, the value of the nine settlements is substantial. The total settlement amount is excellent, amounting to 87% of Dr. Lamb's most conservative damages model prior to trebling. See Rodriguez, 563 F.3d at 964 (except where the merits of a plaintiff's claims are very strong, "courts generally determine fairness of an antitrust class action settlement based on how it compensates the class for past injuries, without giving much, if any, consideration to treble damages"). And the settlements provide a clear benefit to the class: quick and certain payment of a portion of their damages on a pro rata basis.

Class Counsel's Fee Arrangement. The representative Plaintiffs entered into contingent fee agreements with Class Counsel. This Court has reviewed in camera copies of those agreements. Each agreement conditions payment of attorney fees on recovery by the client, and several agreements specify that attorney fees will be at least 35% of the client recovery. Class Counsel also have gone out-of-pocket for the heavy expenses of litigating the IPPs' case -- over $5.1 million.

Societal Interest in Rewarding Class Counsel. "Attorneys who take on class action matters serve a benefit to society and the judicial process by enabling . . . small claimants to pool their claims and resources." In re Telectronics Pacing Sys., Inc., 137 F. Supp. 2d at 1043. Moreover, "[s]ociety's interests are clearly furthered by the private prosecution of civil cases which further important public policy goals, such as vigorous competition by marketplace competitors." In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 2155387, at *5 (E.D. Tenn. 2013). Class Counsel's efforts are also notable for continuing despite significant delay in parallel criminal investigations, which produced results far more limited than this MDL lawsuit.

Case Complexity and Risk. "Antitrust class actions are inherently complex. The legal and factual issues are complicated and highly uncertain in outcome." In re Skelaxin (Metaxalone) Antitrust Litig., 2014 WL 2946459, at *3 (E.D. Tenn. 2014). In this case, the IPPs' success at trial would depend heavily on explaining the meaning of a vast web of communication between numerous alleged conspirators over a lengthy Class Period. Plaintiffs faced substantial obstacles in establishing antitrust liability, causation, and damages. It is still not clear how Class Counsel would have accomplished these tasks. The nine settlements are impressive considering the difficulty of presenting this sprawling case to a jury. Moreover, Class Counsel filed this suit as a putative class action during a period of change and uncertainty in class certification standards. See, e.g., Whirlpool Corp. v. Glazer, 133 S. Ct. 1722 (2013) (vacating decision affirming class certification and remanding for further consideration); Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 133 S. Ct. 1426 (2013) (reversing class certification in an antitrust action); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541 (2011) (reversing class certification in a gender discrimination action). In sum, Class Counsel undertook significant risk that they would not succeed in a complex case.

Skill and Reputation of Class and Defense Counsel. Lead Counsel is a respected antitrust practitioner, litigating important antitrust matters in other courts while at the same time managing the IPPs' case. See Messner v. Evanston Nw. Healthcare Corp. Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 6490152 (N.D. Ill. 2013). Each Defendant was represented by top antitrust defense firms. All counsel tackled the enormous task of discovery, the complicated legal and factual issues surrounding the class certification, the dispositive and Daubert motions, and the commitment to this complex litigation.

Value of Attorney Services. Class Counsel invested a large amount of attorney time and money in prosecuting this case on behalf of the IPP Class. Class Counsel submits a final lodestar calculation showing that (1) they spent a total of 75,361 hours (after some write-offs); (2) their rates, including secretaries through partner-level attorneys, ranged from $75 to $900, averaging $448; and (3) their total lodestar is about $33.74 million. Class Counsel calculates this lodestar using historical hourly rates -- that is, the hourly rate the attorney charged (for example) in 2013 when the work was performed, not the attorney's hourly rate at the time the fee petition was filed. Class Counsel tout this billing tactic as an added benefit to the Class, explaining that class counsel in other cases often estimate a lodestar using rates in effect at the time of the fee petition. This Court agrees that this decision not to recoup the time value of past work is a benefit to the Class.

A 24% Fee Award is Appropriate. Given Class Counsel's lodestar calculation of $33.74 million, and its request for a fee award of $45.375 million, Counsel is essentially advocating for a multiplier of 1.34. While this multiplier is reasonable, the lodestar calculation is overstated. A more appropriate lodestar calculation is 20% lower, so a more appropriate fee award is also 20% lower.

This Court thoroughly reviewed the time sheets and summaries submitted by Class Counsel in order to assess the strength of the objectors' attacks upon the fee petition. The objectors assert that (i) many of the rates charged by Counsel are too high and above-market, (ii) many of the hours charged are unnecessary or duplicative, (iii) there is insufficient documentation of hours spent, (iv) expensive partner-level attorneys did work that other individuals with lower rates could have done, and (v) counsel paid contract attorneys low rates and then billed them at many times what they were paid. Some of these concerns are valid. In particular:

- Are the rates charged too high?

The rates charged by Counsel are high. But IPPs provide the following statistics, which generally undercut this objection: (i) the average billing rate for partners in the DPPs' lodestar was 25.8% higher than the average rate for partners in the IPPs' lodestar ($705.06 versus $560.13); (ii) the average rate for all other (non-partner) attorneys in the DPPs' lodestar was 25.1% higher than the average rate for all other attorneys in the IPPs' lodestar ($438.30 versus $350.22); and (iii) the average rate for paralegals in the DPPs' lodestar was 27.8% higher than the average rate for paralegals in the IPPs' lodestar ($244.84 versus $191.60). Ultimately, the hourly rates used by Counsel in the lodestar calculation are not unreasonable, with the understanding that they are already "calculated to account for litigation risk" (Doc. 1971 at 22 (entering the final fee award for DPP Class Counsel)).

- Are some of the hours charged unnecessary or duplicative?

There are certainly hours lurking in the time sheets that could have been avoided. "While this Court does not doubt that all the work billed was in fact performed, it does doubt that all of that time was reasonably necessary to advance this case. . . . The Class Counsel legal team includes leading antitrust lawyers, but even they are not perfect" (id.).

But nothing stands out as a clear waste of time. Based on this Court's review, it would be fair to decrease the number of hours used by Counsel in the lodestar calculation by a few percentage points, but not more.

- Is there insufficient documentation of hours spent?

Put simply, no.

- Did expensive attorneys do work that cheaper attorneys or paralegals could have done?

Analysis of the time sheets leads to the same conclusion noted above, that some of the law firms were better than others at ensuring work was performed by the least expensive individual capable of doing the job. This factor leads this Court to conclude it would be fair to decrease the lodestar calculation by another few percentage points, but not more.

- Did counsel pay contract attorneys low rates but bill them at high rates?

The answer is "yes," and this factor gives this Court the greatest concern. Counsel submitted for in camera review a chart showing what contract attorneys were paid. These same attorneys were billed out at $250–$525/hour. As CCAF points out, "the rate passed through by law firms to paying clients [for contract attorneys] rarely exceeds $150/hour" (Doc. 1960 at 11). IPPs answer that "it is beyond cavil that law firms may charge more for contract attorneys' services than these services directly cost the law firm." City of Pontiac Gen. Empls. Ret. Sys. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 954 F. Supp. 2d 276, 280 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). But it is also true that "there is absolutely no excuse for paying these temporary, low-overhead employees $40 or $50 an hour and then marking up their pay ten times for billing purposes." In re Beacon Assocs. Litig., 2013 WL 2450960, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). Careful review of the time sheets shows the total time billed by contract attorneys is 16,935 hours, for a total of $6,589,434, or an average of $389/hour. If instead these hours are all billed at $150/hour, the lodestar would decrease by $4.05 million, or 12%.

With these factors, this Court concludes the lodestar is about 20% higher than it should be. Rather than $33.74 million, an appropriate lodestar is closer to $27 million. Using this figure, Class Counsel's request for a $45.375 million fee award would translate to a multiplier of 1.68.

As this Court noted in its Order entering the final fee award for DPP Class Counsel, discussions by other courts of the fund percentage selected, and the effective multiplier that this percentage implied, provide "at best only anecdotal evidence of how other district courts, confronting different facts, have exercised their broad discretion to set a reasonable fee award" (Doc. 1971 at 19). It is easy to find cases with higher percentages and higher multipliers than the ones IPPs request (see Doc. 1987-1 at 19–21, 29–30), and easy to find cases with much lower ones as well (see Doc. 1960 at 16, 18–20, 32–33). In the Sixth Circuit, "[w]hen using a percentage-of-the-fund approach to calculate attorneys' fees, twenty-five percent has traditionally been the benchmark standard, with the ordinary range for attorney's fees between 20–30%." In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 532–33 (E.D. Mich. 2003) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

In the DPP case, final award to Class Counsel totaled "23.6 percent of the gross settlement amount," yielding an effective multiplier of 1.57 (Doc. 1971 at 19). Weighing all the factors discussed above, this Court concludes IPPs are entitled to a final award amounting to 24% of the gross settlement amount, which is an effective multiplier of 1.34 of the appropriate lodestar of $27 million. This means that Class Counsel essentially received the multiplier requested. It is this Court's understanding that, within fifteen (15) days of the date of this Order, Defendants will have deposited a total of $88.5 million in settlement funds into the settlement escrow account(s). Accordingly, IPP Class Counsel are entitled to payment of 24% of this amount (equal to $21,240,000) immediately upon deposit of those funds. As additional settlement funds are deposited, Class Counsel are entitled to payment of 24% of those amounts. Counsel is not entitled to any portion of the interest generated by the settlement funds.

Finally, "under the common fund doctrine, 'class counsel is entitled to reimbursement of all reasonable out-of-pocket litigation expenses and costs in the prosecution of claims and settlement, including expenses incurred in connection with document production, consulting with experts and consultants, travel and other litigation-related expenses.'" New England Health Care Emps. Pension Fund v. Fruit of the Loom, Inc., 234 F.R.D. 627, 634–35 (W.D. Ky. 2006) (quoting In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. at 535), aff'd sub nom. Fidel v. Farley, 534 F.3d 508 (6th Cir. 2008). Class Counsel ask for reimbursement of $5,115,811.72 in expenses. This Court's review confirms these unreimbursed expenses are of the kind typically paid by clients in antitrust litigation. Accordingly, this Court grants reimbursement of these expenses.

APPELLATE BOND

Class Counsel asks that, if any objector files an appeal from this Order, this "Court [should] require each objector to post a bond for appellees' attorneys' fees, as well as any litigation costs (e.g., escrow fees, distribution costs) or other expenses necessitated by an unsuccessful appeal" (Doc. 1991 at 89). The decision whether to require an appellate bond and its amount, however, will depend on the nature of the individual objector's appeal. See Gemelas v. Dannon Co., 2010 WL 3703811, at *1 (N.D. Ohio 2010) ("In deciding whether to impose a Rule 7 bond, courts typically consider (1) the appellant's financial ability to post a bond; (2) the risk that the appellant would not pay appellee's costs if the appeal is unsuccessful, (3) the merits of the appeal, and (4) whether the appellant has shown any bad faith or vexatious conduct."). Moreover, until an objector actually files an appeal, the question of the propriety of an appellate bond is premature. Accordingly, Counsel's request for an appellate bond is denied without prejudice.

CONCLUSION

This Court grants the Motions by the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiff Class for Final Approval of the nine settlement agreements (Docs. 1987 & 1988), and grants in part and denies in part the Motion for Attorney Fees and Expenses, and an Incentive Award to the Class Representatives (Doc. 1908).

Therefore:

- Final approval of the nine Settlement Agreements is granted pursuant to Federal Civil Rule 23(e).

- Each Indirect Purchaser Settlement Class consists of the certified Indirect Purchaser Litigation Class minus the persons and entities who request exclusion from the Litigation Class or from the relevant Indirect Purchaser Settlement Class. For the reasons explained in this Court's Order on Class Certification (Doc. 1102), the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Classes meet the requirements of Rule 23 and are therefore certified for the purposes of these settlements.

- The persons and entities identified in Exhibit A have timely and validly requested exclusion from the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Classes or from the Litigation Class and therefore are excluded from the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Classes and are not bound by this Order, and may not make any claim or receive any benefit from the relevant settlement, whether monetary or otherwise. These excluded persons and entities may not pursue any Released Claims on behalf of those who are bound by this Order. Each Indirect Purchaser Settlement Class member who has not requested to be excluded from the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Classes for a specified settlement, and is not listed in Exhibit A, is bound by this Order, and will remain forever bound.

- As to the Released Parties, as defined in the respective Settlement Agreements, the Class Action and any and all currently pending indirect purchaser class action lawsuits directly related to the subject matter of this litigation are dismissed with prejudice and in their entirety, on the merits, and, except as provided for in the Settlement Agreements, without costs. This dismissal shall not affect, in any way, Indirect Purchasers' right to pursue claims, if any, outside the scope of the releases set forth in the nine Settlement Agreements.

- The Releasing Parties release, forever discharge, and covenant not to sue the Released Parties from and for Claims as set forth in the nine Settlement Agreements. The Releasing Parties are permanently enjoined and barred from instituting, commencing, or prosecuting any action or other proceeding asserting any Released Claims released in the nine Settlement Agreements against any of the Released Parties, either indirectly, individually, representatively, derivatively, or in any other capacity, by whatever means, in any local, state, or federal court, or in any agency or other authority or arbitral or other forum wherever located.

- This Order does not settle or compromise any other claims by Class Representatives or the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Classes against the Defendants or other persons or entities other than Released Parties, and all rights against any other Defendant or other person or entity are specifically reserved. The sales of goods containing Polyurethane Foam to members of the Indirect Purchaser Settlement Classes by Released Parties shall remain against the non-settling Defendants, to the extent any exist, as a basis for damage claims, and shall be part of any joint and several liability claims against any non-settling Defendant or other person or entity other than the Released Parties.

- Pursuant to Federal Civil Rule 54(b), this Court directs entry of final judgment of dismissal as to the Released Parties, as set forth in its separate orders entered following this Order.

- Without affecting the finality of this Order, this Court retains exclusive jurisdiction over the Class Action and the Settlement Agreements, including the administration, interpretation, consummation, and enforcement of these Settlement agreements.

- The escrow accounts established by certain of the parties, and into which Settlement Funds have been and will be deposited, plus accrued interest, are approved as Qualified Settlement Funds pursuant to Internal Revenue Code Section 468B and related Treasury Regulations.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Herbert B. Newberg, Attorney Fee Awards §1.04 at 6 (1986)..... 6

INTRODUCTION

The Indirect Purchaser Class ("Plaintiffs") submit this memorandum of law in support of their motion for an award of attorneys' fees, reimbursement of litigation expenses, and incentive awards to the class representative to be paid from the aggregate of $151,250,000 cash settlements with Defendants (i) Carpenter Co., (ii) Hickory Springs Manufacturing Company, (iii) Leggett & Platt, Incorporated, (iv) Mohawk, Inc., (v) Vitafoam Products Canada Limited and Vitafoam, Inc. (collectively, "Vitafoam"), (vi) Woodbridge Foam Corporation, Woodbridge Sales & Engineering, Inc., and Woodbridge Foam Fabricating, Inc. (collectively, "Woodbridge"), (vii) FFP Holdings LLC, (viii) FXI Holdings, Inc., and (ix) Future Foam, Inc. (collectively, the "Cash Settlements").

For the reasons set forth below, and those reasons set forth in Plaintiffs' preliminary approval papers (Dkt. 1751), fee petition papers (Dkts. 1908 and 1908-1), the Memorandum of Law In Support of The Indirect Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Motion For Final Approval of Settlement Agreements With Remaining Settling Defendants ("Final Approval Memo"), the Supplemental Declaration of Marvin A. Miller in Support of Plaintiffs' Application For Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Incentive Awards to Indirect Purchaser Class Representatives ("M. Miller Supp. Decl.") attached as Exhibit 1, and Class Counsel's Response To Objections To Proposed Class Action Settlement ("Class Counsel's Response"), all of which are being filed contemporaneously, Class Counsel respectfully submit that a fair, reasonable, and appropriate award of attorneys' fees for the Cash Settlements is 30% of $151,250,000 (the "Settlement Amount") and such other amount that becomes part of the Settlement Amount.

The Settlement Amount represents one of the largest settlement amounts ever achieved on behalf of indirect purchasers in an antitrust class action. Dkt. 1908-1, ¶ 55. This result was made possible only because of the dedication, effort, industry, skill and capital expenditure made by Class Counsel on a completely contingent-fee basis, and through the assistance and active involvement of the Class Representatives. See Dkt. 1908-1, ¶¶ 8-9.

The Settlement Amount equates to more than 54% of the total, uncapped class member damages estimated by Dr. Lamb using the chemical manufacturer costs data, and 89% of the total Class' damages estimated by Dr. Lamb using this same data if pass through is capped at 100% of the direct purchaser overcharge. Dkt. 1647-1 at Table 18 and ¶¶ 179-180; Final Approval Memo at p. 9, n. 1. Considering the significant risks involved in trying this case and in preserving any award obtained on appeal, the substantial value of Class Counsel's services rendered on behalf of the Class is beyond reproach.

The 30% percentage-of-fund fee requested is consistent with similar class action awards, and when crosschecked with Class Counsel's lodestar, the requested multiplier of a modest 1.34 is well within the accepted range. It does not result in a windfall to Class Counsel who took on substantially more risk than any Plaintiff group in this complex multidistrict litigation.

Until Class Counsel achieved the first of the Cash Settlements, Class Counsel had litigated this action for more than four years but had not achieved a single cash settlement with any of the Defendants. See Dkt. 1908-1, ¶¶ 49. This stands in stark contrast to the comparatively early cash settlements achieved by counsel for the Direct Purchaser Class and which lowered their risk of proceeding to trial. Indeed, at the time that Class Counsel had achieved most of these Cash Settlements, motions to decertify and motions for summary judgment remained pending. Id., ¶ 54.

Class Counsel also request reimbursement of their out-of-pocket costs and expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in litigating claims on behalf of the Class. Finally, the requested incentive awards to the Class Representatives appropriately and fairly compensate them for their efforts in coming forward and putting their reputations on the line.

BACKGROUND

The extensive efforts of Class Counsel in achieving these excellent results are detailed below and in the Declaration of Marvin A. Miller (Doc. # 1908-1) and in the M. Miller Supp. Decl. As explained in those declarations, the extensive services rendered by Class Counsel on behalf of the Class for more than four years and on a completely contingent- fee basis involved, among other services:

- preparing and filing complaints and a consolidated, amended complaint after conducting extensive legal research and factual investigations of the flexible polyurethane foam industry and end-use market for products containing flexible polyurethane foam;

- successfully defeating multiple attacks on those pleadings filed by Defendants; engaging in extensive written and oral fact discovery by attending no less than 150 depositions across the country, by reviewing and analyzing no less than 3.9 million pages of documents produced in this matter, and by participating in multiple meet-and-confers and third-party discovery;

- developing the factual and expert record to support this Court's rigorous analysis of the applicable Rule 23 factors and to prepare for trial on the merits;

- successfully obtaining class certification of the Class and defeating Defendants' multiple attempts to reverse the order granting class certification; successfully defeating not only two attempts by Defendants to appeal to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, but also their filing in the Supreme Court of United States a petition for a writ of certiorari in connection with the Court's class certification decision and issues relating to disseminating class notice;

- opposing certain Defendants' summary judgment and standing motions, which consisted of over 90 pages of briefing;

- preparing for a jury trial by drafting motions in limine, deposition designations, trial exhibits, demonstrative exhibits, opening statements, witness summaries, and by conferring with trial witnesses, and negotiating various stipulations with opposing counsel relating to trial;

- participating and engaging in intensive and protracted settlement negotiations and working with a notice/claims administrator to formulate a robust notice plan and with economics expert to formulate a plan of allocation; and

- defending the Settlement Amount achieved for the Class from serial objectors.

Dkt. 1908-1, ¶ 8. All of this work was done on behalf of the Class on a purely contingency-fee basis with no guarantee of the compensation. Id., ¶ 9. Especially considering the significant risks inherent in representing this Indirect Purchaser Class (see Final Approval Memo at pp. 9-17), Class Counsel achieved an exceptional result for the Class.

The 30% fee percentage requested is one that has been approved by other courts in the Sixth Circuit and is justified by all relevant factors identified by this Circuit. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth below, Class Counsel request that the Court award fees equal to 30% of the Settlement Amount and earnings that become part of the Settlement Amount.

Class Counsel also request reimbursement of $5,122,065.78 in out-of-pocket expenses incurred in connection with this litigation and incentive awards of $10,000 for each of the individual class representatives and $35,000 for each of the two corporate class representatives.

ARGUMENT

A. Class Counsel Should Be Awarded The Requested Fees

1. Class Counsel Are Entitled To Compensation Based Upon The Benefits Created By The Class.

Courts have long recognized that a lawyer who recovers a "common fund" is entitled to a reasonable attorneys' fee from the fund as a whole. Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Properties, Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 516 (6th Cir. 1993).[1]

[1] Lead Counsel also requests the Court's authorization to distribute the fees in a manner that, in the judgment of Lead Counsel, fairly compensates each firm for its contribution to the

The rationale for such awards is that "persons who obtain the benefit of a lawsuit without contributing to its costs are unjustly enriched …" Id. at 478; Rosenbaum v. Macallister, 64 F.R.D. 1439, 1444 (10th Cir. 1995); Fournier v. PFS Investments, Inc., 997 F. Supp. 828, 830 (E.D. Mich. 1998); Ramey v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc., 508 F.2d 1188, 1196 (6th Cir. 1974), cert denied, 422 U.S. 1048 (1975); In re Sulzer Hip Prosthesis & Knee Prosthesis Liab. Litig., 268 F. Supp. 2d 907, 921 (N.D. Ohio 2003) ("Sulzer").

Fee awards which recognize the success reflected by the recoveries are in the "best interests" of current and future class members:

> It is unquestionably true that without able lawyers handling these matters not only do some of them go unprosecuted, but the big difference in my experience is in the amount obtained and you don't get the highest recovery and when you are paying at the low end of the scale of fee recovery in contingent actions, it seems to me that I as the protector of the class, can fairly say, and honestly say, that I believe it is in the class' best interests – of this class of future classes yet unknown – to pay this kind of money for these kinds of benefits.

prosecution of Plaintiffs' claims. This is consistent with the Lead Counsel's duties under the Order Re Interim Lead Counsel and Executive Committee (Dkt. 29) to "[c]oordinat[e] the activities of Plaintiffs' counsel and implement[] procedures to ensure that schedules are met and avoid[] unnecessary expenditures of time and funds," and to "[c]ollect[] time and expense reports on a periodic basis, endeavor[] to keep attorneys' fees reasonable, and choos[e] appropriate levels of staffing for the tasks required." See also Class Counsel's Response at pp. 11 - 14 (citing case law supporting that Lead Counsel can and should be granted discretion to distribute funds among Class Counsel); In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 533 n.15 (3d Cir. 2004) (affirming the District Court's decision to permit co-chairs of the Executive Committee to divide attorneys' fees according to their discretion, and declining to "deviate from the accepted practice of allowing counsel to apportion fees amongst themselves"); In re Telectronics Pacing Sys., Inc., 137 F. Supp. 2d 1029, 1033 (S.D. Ohio 2001) (approving distribution of a "single fee from which the [Plaintiffs' Steering Committee] will allocate the attorneys' fees among the attorneys who provided a benefit to the Class"); In re Broadwing, Inc. ERISA Litig., 252 F.R.D. 369, 383 (S.D. Ohio 2006) ("Class Counsel shall allocate the award of attorneys' fees among counsel for the Class based on their good-faith assessment of the contribution of such counsel to the prosecution of this Action."); In Re BP Propane Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litigation, Case No. 06-cv-3541, Dkt. 209 at p. 2 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 10, 2010), Dkt. 209. (" any and all allocations of attorneys' fees and expenses shall be allocated among Plaintiffs' Counsel at the direction of Lead Counsel at its discretion, who shall apportion the fees and expenses based upon their assessment, in its sole discretion, of the respective contributions to the litigation made by each counsel.").

In re Pepsico Sec. Litig., No. 82-Civ-8403 (S.D.N.Y. April 26, 1985), Transcript of April 26, 1985 at 17-18, cited in Herbert B. Newberg, Attorney Fee Awards §1.04 at 6 (1986), and quoted with approval in In re M.D.C. Holdings Sec. Litig., 1990 WL 454747 at *10, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 95,474 at 97,492 (S.D. Cal. 1990); Sulzer, 268 F. Supp. 2d at 922 ("The Court must ensure that counsel is fairly compensated for the amount of work done as well as for the results achieved.") (quoting Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516); Basile v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner, & Smith, Inc., 640 F. Supp. 697, 706 (S.D. Ohio 1986) ("Class counsel, their associates, and the other attorneys with whom they consulted demonstrated . . . the level of professionalism to which we encourage each member of the Bar to strive, and it merits due reward") (citations omitted).

As these courts and others have repeatedly recognized, attorney fee awards that fully reward excellent results encourage the successful prosecution of meritorious cases. This Court should follow that lead.

2. The Percentage-Of-The-Fund Method Is The Appropriate Method For Calculating Attorneys' Fees In This Case.

The Supreme Court has held in decisions involving the computation of a common fund fee award that it is appropriate for the fee to be determined on a percentage-of-the-fund basis. See Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 900 n.16 (1984) ("under the 'common fund doctrine,' . . . a reasonable fee [is] based on a percentage of the fund bestowed on the class"); see also Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U.S. 527, 532 (1882); Central R.R. & Banking Co. v. Pettus, 113 U.S. 116, 124-25 (1885); Sprague v. Ticonic Nat'l Bank, 307 U.S. 161, 165-66 (1939).

In the Sixth Circuit, district courts have discretion to use either the lodestar method or the "percentage of fund" method to calculate attorneys' fees for class actions. See Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 515 (6th Cir. 1993) (noting however, the "recent trend towards adoption of a percentage-of-the-fund method in [common fund] cases"). The standard for district courts is that "awards of attorney's fees by federal courts in common fund cases [must] be reasonable under the circumstances." Id., citing Smillie v. Park Chem. Co., 710 F.2d 271, 275 (6th Cir. 1983).

Despite the discretion given to the district courts in choosing whether to apply the lodestar or percentage-of-the-fund method, as Rawlings noted, courts within the Sixth Circuit have indicated their preference for the percentage-of-the-fund method. See, e.g., In re F&M Distributors, Inc., Sec. Litig., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090, Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 90,621 (E.D. Mich. June 29, 1999) (choosing percentage-of-the-fund as the better method for determining attorneys' fees in a securities class action); In re Rio Hair Naturalizer Prod. Liab. Litig., 1996 WL 780512, *16 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 20, 1996) ("more commonly, fee awards in common fund cases are calculated as a percentage of the fund created, typically ranging from 20 to 50 percent of the fund"); Fournier, 997 F. Supp. at 830. As Judge Julian A. Cook, Jr. held in F&M Distributors:

> [T]he Court concludes that the percentage-of-the-fund method should be applied for two reasons. First the lodestar method is too cumbersome and time-consuming of the resources of the Court. See Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516-517. Second, and more importantly, the "percentage of the fund" approach "more accurately reflects the result achieved." Id. at 516.

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11090 at *8; see also In re Cardinal Health Inc. Sec. Litigations, 528 F. Supp. 2d 752, 761 (S.D. Ohio 2007) ("The lodestar method has been rightly criticized for generating avoidable hours, discouraging early settlement, and burdening the district judges with the tedious task of auditing time records.").[2]

[2] See also Swedish Hosp. Corp. v. Shalala, 1 F.3d 1261, 1268 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("First, attorneys are given an incentive to spend as many hours as possible, billable to a firm's most expensive attorneys. Second, there is a strong incentive against early settlement since attorneys will earn more the longer the litigation lasts."); Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 48-49 (2d Cir. 2000) (lodestar analysis "created an unanticipated disincentive to early settlements" and "was an inevitable waste of judicial resources"); In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 256 (3d Cir. 2001) (lodestar approach creates "a risk that it will cause lawyers to work

The use of the percentage method in this Circuit is consistent with decisions nationwide when awarding fees in common fund cases on this same basis. See e.g., In re Thirteen Appeals Arising out of the San Juan DuPont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 56 F.3d 295, 305 (1st Cir. 1995) ("[c]ontrary to popular belief, it is the lodestar method, not the [percentage] method, that breaks from precedent"); Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (approving the use of percentage method); In re General Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 822 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 824 (1995) ("In common fund cases, a district judge can award attorneys' fees as a percentage of the fund recovered," and in prior cases, "fee awards have ranged from nineteen percent to forty-five percent of the settlement fund"); In re Continental Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 572 (7th Cir. 1992) (fee award should not be based on "individual hours," but rather on the percentage that counsel "would have received had they handled a similar suit on a contingent fee basis, with a similar outcome, for a paying client"); Six (6) Mexican Workers v. Arizona Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1311 (9th Cir. 1990) ("a reasonable fee under the common fund doctrine is calculated as a percentage of the recovery"); Camden I Condominium Assoc., Inc. v. Dunkle, 946 F.2d 768, 774 (11th Cir. 1991) ("Henceforth in this circuit, attorneys' fees awarded from a common fund shall be based upon a reasonable percentage of the fund established for the benefit of the class"); Swedish Hosp. Corp., 1 F.3d at 1271 ("percentage-of-the-fund method is the appropriate mechanism for determining the attorney fees award in common fund cases").

This Court followed the plethora of other courts applying a percentage of the fund methodology when it awarded counsel for the Direct Purchaser Class a percentage of the funds they created in this case, see Dkts. 1534 and 1971, and should do so here.

June 2, 2004) (awarding fees of 30% of $202 million antitrust settlement fund); In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., No. 99-MD-1278, MDL No. 1278 (E.D. Mich. Nov. 26, 2002) (awarding fees of 30% of $110 million antitrust settlement fund); see also In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litig., 526 F. Supp. 494, 498 (D.D.C. 1981) (noting that several courts have awarded more than 40% of the settlement fund in antitrust cases).

Fee decisions from various jurisdictions confirm that even in cases with large recoveries above $100 million, attorneys' fees of more than 30% are regularly awarded. See, e.g., In re Vitamins, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25067, at *57 (approving fees of 34.06% of $359 million); In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig., No. 01-Md-1410, (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 2003) (awarding fees of 33.3% of $220 million antitrust settlement fund, plus expenses); In re Lease Oil Antitrust Litig., 186 F.R.D. 403 (S.D. Tex. 1999) (awarding fees and expenses of 35.1% from $190 million antitrust settlement fund); In re Combustion Inc., 968 F. Supp. 1116 (W.D. La. 1997) (awarding maximum reserve of 36% in attorneys' fees, and 48.4% in combined fees and expenses, from fund of $127 million); In re Linerboard, 2004 WL 1221350 (awarding 30% of approximately $202 million); In re Cardizem, No. 99-MD-1278 (awarding 30% of $110 million); In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 166 (awarding 30% of approximately $108 million); In re Rite Aid, 146 F. Supp. at 736 (awarding 35% of $193 million); In re Ikon, 194 F.R.D. at 192-97 (awarding fees and expenses of 32.4% of $111.8 million fund).

Awarding fees equal to 30% of a common settlement fund is entirely consistent with, and in many cases less than, awards in analogous cases. Indeed, in many of the cases in which a percentage below 30% was awarded, the lodestar multipliers in those cases were significantly greater than the 1.34 multiplier requested here. M. Miller Supp. Decl., ¶ 11; see Merkner v. AK Steel, 2011 U.S. Dist. Lexis 157375 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 10, 2011) (awarding a multiplier of 5.3); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 123 (2d Cir. 2005) (awarding a multiple of 3.5); In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 489 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (awarding a multiplier of 3.97 which was "not unreasonable in this type of case"); see also In re Citigroup Inc. Sec. Litig., 965 F. Supp. 2d 369, 401 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (awarding a multiplier of 2.8); In re Wachovia Preferred Sec. & Bond/Notes Litig., 2012 WL 2589230, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 2012) (awarding a multiplier of 2.3 in a case that never entered formal discovery); In re Charles Schwab Corp. Secs. Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. Lexis 44547 (N.D. Cal. April 19, 2011) (awarding a multiplier of 2.68); In re Royal Ahold N.V. Sec. & ERISA Litig., 461 F. Supp. 2d 383, 387 (D. Md. 2006) (awarding a multiplier of 2.5 in a case that settled "well before trial"). Indeed, as the court in NASDAQ in pointed out, "multipliers of between 3 and 4.5 have become common." Id., 187 F.R.D. at 489 (internal citations omitted).

4. Application Of The Sixth Circuit's Reasonableness Factors Supports Class Counsel's Request For A 30% Fee.

The Sixth Circuit has set forth various factors that should be evaluated when determining the reasonableness of an attorney fee request: (1) whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis; (2) the complexity of the litigation; (3) the professional skill and standing of counsel involved on both sides; (4) the value of the benefit rendered to the class; (5) the value of the services on an hourly basis; and (6) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others. Smillie, 710 F.2d at 275. An application of these factors to this case confirms that the fee requested here is well within the reasonable range. See also, Ramey v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc., 508 F.2d 1188, 1196 (6th Cir. 1974) (setting forth the six factors to be considered in assessing a reasonable award); In re Dun & Bradstreet Credit Serv. Customer Litig., 130 F.R.D. 366, 373 (S.D. Ohio 1990).

(i) The Contingent Nature of the Fee

A determination of a fair fee must include consideration of the sometimes undesirable characteristics of a contingent antitrust action, including the uncertain nature of the fee, the wholly contingent outlay of large out-of-pocket sums by plaintiffs, and the fact that the risks of failure and nonpayment in an antitrust case are extremely high. Numerous cases recognize that attorneys' risk is "perhaps the foremost factor" in determining an appropriate fee award. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54 (citations omitted); accord Jones v. Diamond, 636 F.2d 1364, 1382 (5th Cir.) cert. dismissed sub nom. Ledbetter v. Jones, 453 U.S. 950 (1981) ("Lawyers who are to be compensated only in the event of victory expect and are entitled to be paid more when successful than those who are assured of compensation regardless of result."). In Behrens v.

Wometco Enter., Inc., 118 F.R.D. 534, 548 (S.D. Fla. 1988), aff'd, 899 F.2d 21 (11th Cir. 1990), the court noted that:

> Generally, the contingency retainment must be promoted to assure representation when a person could not otherwise afford the services of a lawyer. . . A contingency fee arrangement often justifies an increase in the award of attorneys' fees. This rule helps assure that the contingency fee arrangement endures. If this "bonus" methodology did not exist, very few lawyers could take on the representation of a class client given the investment of substantial time, effort, and money, especially in light of the risks of recovering nothing.

Id. at 548 (citations omitted). As Judge Nimmons explained in Ressler v. Jacobson:

> The Court is well aware that there are numerous contingent cases such as this where plaintiff's counsel, after investing thousands of hours of time and effort, have received no compensation whatsoever. Numerous cases recognize that the attorney's contingent fee risk is an important factor in determining the award . . . . In evaluating [the contingent fee] factor the Court will not ignore the pecuniary loss suffered by plaintiff's counsel in other actions where counsel received little or no fee.

149 F.R.D. 651, 656-57 (M.D. Fla 1992) (citations omitted).[3]

Success before a jury in complex litigation is highly unpredictable. As one court observed in another antitrust class action: "It is known from past experience that no matter how confident one may be of the outcome of litigation, such confidence is often misplaced." West Virginia v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 314 F. Supp. 710, 743-44 (S.D.N.Y. 1970), aff'd, 440 F.2d 1079 (2d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom., Cotler Drugs, Inc. v. Chap. Pfizer & Co., 404 U.S. 871 (1971).

The history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages or very small damages at trial or after appeal. See, e.g., United States Football League v. National Football League, 644 F. Supp. 1040, 1042

[3] The Fourth Circuit made a similar observation in McKittrick v. Gardner, 378 F.2d 872, 875 (4th Cir. 1967):

> The effective lawyer will not win all of his cases, and any determination of the reasonableness of his fees in those cases in which his client prevails must take into account of the lawyer's risk of receiving nothing for his services. Charges on the basis of a minimal hourly rate are surely inappropriate for a lawyer who has performed creditably when payment of any fee is so uncertain.

(S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("the jury chose to award plaintiffs only nominal damages, concluding that the USFL had suffered only $1.00 in damages"), aff'd, 842 F.2d 1335 (2d Cir. 1988). Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 479 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1973), vacated on other grounds, 417 U.S. 156 (1974), illustrates the risks faced by Class Counsel. Eisen was brought as an antitrust class action. After two trips to the Second Circuit and one to the Supreme Court, plaintiffs and the putative class and their counsel recovered nothing.

This case is no exception to the rule. See Final Approval Memo at pp. 9-17 (identifying the risks Class Counsel faced in prosecuting this action). When Class Counsel undertook the representation of Class Plaintiffs and the Class, there were no assurances that any fees would be received. 1908-1, ¶ 9. Class Counsel were aware that they would likely have to expend tens of thousands of hours and millions of dollars in prosecuting this case over an extended period of time before having even a possibility of recovering a fee. See id. In doing so, Class Counsel alone bore the risk of the case being dismissed in the pretrial stage, of not prevailing at trial if the case progressed that far, or even possibly losing on appeal.

For example, this case clearly involves many defendants and the prosecution of this case has been a labor-intensive task, to put it mildly. While Plaintiffs did succeed at the class certification stage, there is no guarantee that they would win at trial or that they would be able to recover damages equaling or surpassing the Settlement Amount, even if they established Defendants' liability. The risk involved in succeeding at trial and on appeal on liability, causation and damages, along with the financial risks and outlays borne by Class Counsel to date in this contingency matter, all support the fee requested.

Indeed, to date, Class Counsel has not received any compensation as a result of their tireless and persistent efforts on behalf of this Class during the almost five years of this litigation.

(ii) The Complexity of The Case.

As to the complexity of the case, "[a]n antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute. … The legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome." In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 WL 1221350, at *10 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (quoting In re Motorsports Merch. Antitrust Litig., 112 F. Supp. 2d 1329, 1337 (N.D. Ga. 2000)). This antitrust action is no different. In fact, in addition to obtaining class certification, this case involves some highly technical and complex issues that are not present in all antitrust cases and involved a gaggle of defendants and a conspiracy that allegedly lasted more than a decade. Further, Class Counsel was obligated to fully understand every aspect of the flexible polyurethane business in order to investigate and prosecute this case. Through extensive document review, consultation with experts, and interviews and depositions of witnesses, Class Counsel was able to gather significant information that was of invaluable assistance in the litigation and the settlement negotiations.

(iii) The Skill, Experience and Reputation of Counsel.

Class Counsel includes some of the preeminent class action and litigation firms in the country that collectively possess decades of experience in prosecuting and trying complex actions. The experience and skill were demonstrated by Class Counsel's efficient and effective prosecution of this action as well as the excellent Settlement Amount and settlement terms obtained for the Class.

(iv) The Excellent Result Achieved On Behalf Of The Class.

The result achieved is a major factor to consider in making a fee award. Hensley v. Eckhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436 (1983) ("the most critical factor is the degree of success obtained"); see also Behrens, 118 F.R.D. at 547-48 ("The quality of work performed in a case that settles before trial is best measured by the benefit obtained."); Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55 ("the quality of representation is best measured by results").

The results achieved in this case fully support the requested fee. The $151,250,000 Settlement Amount is substantial in both absolute terms and in light of the circumstances of this litigation. Specifically, the cash payments here represent more than 54% of the total, uncapped class member damages estimated by Dr. Lamb using the actual chemical manufacturer costs data, and 89% of the total, capped class member damages estimated by him using this data. Even if Plaintiffs' succeeded in obtaining a jury verdict as to liability, there was a reasonable chance that the jury might conclude that damages should be estimated based upon the chemical manufacturer costs data.

In addition, although there has been a governmental investigation into the facts underlying this case, by this Court's Order ([Doc. 243]), Class Counsel was precluded from tracking that investigation. Moreover, although the government's case has been pending since at least April 2010, there has only been one U.S. indictment to date (covering conduct and a time period far narrower than the scope of the Indirect Purchasers' claims in this case). Class Counsel did not build Plaintiffs' case by relying on government indictments or evidence produced as part of such indictments. Dkt 1908-1, ¶ 31. Instead, Class Counsel relied entirely on their own investigation and the discovery, admissions, testimony, and evidence collected solely through their efforts in this litigation and by cooperating with other plaintiff groups whenever appropriate in order to maximize efficiencies and avoid unnecessary duplicative work. Id., ¶¶ 31, 25.

(v) The Value of Class Counsel's Services On An Hourly Basis

Class Counsel has been litigating this case for over four years. Thousands of hours were spent developing the case against Defendants, obtaining relevant and critical documents from Defendants and third parties, obtaining damages information, eliciting admissible testimony from witnesses, obtaining class certification, working with experts, and negotiating and documenting the settlements. See 1908-1, ¶ 59. The significant investment of time required by this action necessarily precluded Class Counsel's opportunity to work on other and perhaps more lucrative matters. Id., ¶ 60.

There is no question that the considerable amount of time and effort expended by Class Counsel resulted in an excellent settlement for the Class.

(vi) Society's Stake In Rewarding Attorneys Who Produce Such Benefits

The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized the importance of private antitrust litigation as a necessary and desirable tool to assure the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Pillsbury Co., v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983); Reitner v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 331 (1979); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 266 (1972); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. Int'l Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968); Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 318-19 (1965). Fee awards similar to that requested here encourage and support meritorious class actions, and thereby promote private enforcement of, and compliance with, the antitrust laws. As the court noted in Alpine Pharmacy v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., Inc., 481 F.2d 1045, 1050 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1092 (1973), "[i]n the absence of adequate attorneys' fee awards, many antitrust actions would not be commenced . . . ."

Here, through their efforts to obtain redress for the alleged wrongs committed by Defendants, Class Counsel substantially contributed to enforcement of applicable antitrust and unfair compensation laws and helped restore market efficiency in an important segment of the economy.

Moreover, encouraging qualified counsel to bring highly risky but beneficial class actions like this one benefits society in general. See, e.g., In re M.D.C. Holdings Sec. Litig., Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 95,474, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15488, at *30-31 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 1990) ("without able lawyers handling these matters not only do some of them go unprosecuted, but ... you don't get the highest recovery) (quoting In re Pepsico Securities Litig., Civil Action No. 82-Civ-8403 (S.D.N.Y. April 26, 1985)). Class Counsel undertook, at a significant risk, this litigation involving some very complex liability and damages issues. Payment of attorneys' fees in the requested amount adequately and fairly compensates Class Counsel for the risk they undertook at the inception of the case and the benefit they have achieved for the Class. Class Counsel should be compensated such that they will have an incentive to pursue additional cases similar to this one.

5. A Lodestar Cross-Check Demonstrates That The Requested Fee Is Reasonable

The reasonableness of Class Counsel's fee request is further confirmed by a lodestar cross-check. See Bowling, 102 F.3d at 780 (6th Cir. 1996) (affirming district court's methodology which based the fee award on a percentage of the fund and then cross-checked the fee against class counsel's lodestar); see also Connectivity Sys. Inc. v. Nat'l City Bank, 2011 WL 292008 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 26, 2011) ("In this Circuit, the lodestar figure is used to confirm the reasonableness of the percentage of the fund award.").

Given the risks of contingent litigation, lodestar multipliers—i.e., positive multipliers applied to the baseline lodestar amount—are frequently awarded in common fund cases. See, e.g., Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 517 (6th Cir. 1993) ("Counsel had requested a multiplier of 3.3 based upon the contingency risk undertaken and the quality of the work performed. Such factors are indeed the focus of a district court's analysis when determining whether to utilize a multiplier.");

Sulzer, 268 F. Supp. 2d at 922 (N.D. Ohio 2003) (multiplier may be used to account for the "costs and risks involved in the litigation," and applying multipliers as high as 19.8); In re Oral Sodium Phosphate Solution-Based Products Liab. Action, 2010 WL 5058454, at *4–5 (N.D. Ohio Dec. 6, 2010) (applying 2.0 multiplier).

Here, the cumulative lodestar value of Class Counsel's time spent on the case is $33,743,941.00 (through the end of November 30, 2015). M. Miller Supp. Decl. ¶ 10. As more fully explained in Class Counsel's Response to the Objectors, the attorney rates and number of hours spent litigating this case, which were used to derive this figure, are entirely appropriate. Class Counsel's Response at pp. 33 - 50. Class Counsel's sworn submissions, for instance, demonstrate that such hours were necessary and reasonably expended in the prosecution of the litigation. Id. at p. 33-35. Similarly, the hourly rates utilized to calculate the lodestar are well within the range of reasonableness for the type of work performed and are entirely consistent with the rates among the relevant national community of experienced antitrust class action practitioners. Id. at p. 35-40. Moreover, each of the attorneys included in the lodestar calculation was well qualified to do the work performed and tasks were appropriately assigned to attorneys based upon their assessed skill level and experience. See id. at p. 41-46. Even though Class Counsel worked collaboratively with counsel for the other plaintiff groups in order to maximize efficiencies, issues unique to this Indirect Purchaser Class meant that Class Counsel need to address matters over and above those liability and damages considerations relevant to the Direct Purchaser Class. Id. at pp. 46-49. Despite this fact, Class Counsel's lodestar is significantly lower than the lodestar figure submitted by counsel for the Direct Purchaser Class (compare Class Counsel's lodestar of less than $34 million (M. Miller Supp. Decl., ¶ 10), with counsel for Direct Purchaser Class's lodestar of more than $65 million (Dkt. 1971 at p. 15)), as is the cross-check multiplier (compare the 1.34 multiplier for Class Counsel (M. Miller Supp. Decl., ¶ 11), with the 1.57 multiplier awarded to counsel for the Direct Purchaser Class (Dkt. 1971 at p. 22)).

The requested 30% of the Settlement Amount, equal to a 1.34 multiplier, is well within the acceptable multiplier range accepted by courts. See supra. Indeed, typical lodestar multipliers—particularly in cases where counsel expended substantial amounts of time, effort, and resources pursuing the defendants—range from two to five, and are determined on a case-by-case basis. See In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 951 F. Supp. 2d 739, 750-51 (E.D. Pa. 2013) (awarding fees equal to 2.99 lodestar multiplier); Bailey v. AK Steel Corp., 2008 WL 553764, at *7 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 28, 2008) (awarding multiplier of 3.04, noting that "[c]ourts typically ... increas[e] the lodestar amount by a multiple of several times itself and identifying a "normal range of between two and five"); Manners v. Am. Gen. Life Ins. Co., 1999 WL 33581944, at *93 (M.D. Tenn. Aug 11, 1999) (3.8 multiplier); In re Cardinal Health Sec. Litig., 528 F. Supp. 2d. at 770 (5.9 multiplier); Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 533 (3.7 multiplier); Meijer, Inc. v. 3M, 2006 WL 2382718, at *24 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2006) (4.77 multiplier in case that settled after one year). As the foregoing citations show, courts seek to reward class counsel for taking the risks of bringing successful class actions such as this.

Plaintiffs' fee request is well within the range recognized by courts, even for cases (like here) with large and extremely successful resolutions for the Class. See, e.g., In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 1365900, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 3, 2013) (awarding $308 million in attorneys' fees in indirect purchaser antitrust class action, which represented a 2.4-2.6x multiplier to counsel's lodestar); In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 297 F. Supp. 2d 503, 524 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (awarding $220 million in attorneys' fees, which equated to 3.5 lodestar multiplier); see also In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 2155387, at *4-5 (E.D. Tenn. May 17, 2013) ($101 million in total attorneys' fees where counsel obtained $303 million for the class and where total fees represented 1.9x lodestar multiplier, which was "clearly within, but in the bottom half of, the range of typical lodestar multipliers"); In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, at 47-48 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2005) (1.86 multiplier is on the "low end of the spectrum").

Accordingly, the lodestar cross-check provides this Court with additional confirmation of the reasonableness of the requested fee.

B. Class Counsel's Expenses Are Reasonable And Were Necessarily Incurred To Achieve The Benefit Obtained

Substantial out-of-pocket expenses have been incurred in prosecuting this litigation over the past two and a half years. To date, Class Counsel have incurred $5,122,065.78 in expenses that have not been reimbursed. M. Miller Supp. Decl. at ¶ 2. These expenses were reasonable and necessary to prosecute the litigation, and included, among other things, expert fees, costs for document collection and management, electronic hosting for Defendants' and third parties' document productions, travel for depositions and meetings, photocopying, overnight mail, process service fees, long distance telephone, electronic research, and contributions to the common expense litigation fund. Id., Group Ex. C.

"Under the common fund doctrine, 'class counsel is entitled to reimbursement of all reasonable out-of-pocket litigation expenses and costs in the prosecution of claims and settlement, including expenses incurred in connection with document production, consulting with experts and consultants, travel and other litigation-related expenses.'" New England Health Care Employees Pension Fund v. Fruit of the Loom, Inc., 234 F.R.D. 627, 634-35 (W.D. Ky. 2006), aff'd sub nom. Fidel v. Farley, 534 F.3d 508 (6th Cir. 2008) (quoting In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 535 (E.D. Mich. 2003)); see also Mills v. Elec. Auto-Lite Co., 396 U.S. 375, 389-98 (1970); In re Delphi Corp. Sec., Derivative & "ERISA" Litig., 248 F.R.D.

483, 504 (E.D. Mich. 2008) ("Expense awards are customary when litigants have created a common settlement fund for the benefit of a class").

The appropriate analysis to apply in deciding whether expenses are compensable in a common fund case is whether the particular costs are the type typically billed by attorneys to paying clients in the marketplace. Synthroid Mktg. Litig., 264 F.3d at 722 (expenses paid by private clients in similar cases should be paid); Harris v. Marhoefer, 24 F.3d 16, 19 (9th Cir. 1994) ("Harris may recover as part of the award of attorney's fees those out-of-pocket expenses that 'would normally be charged to a fee paying client.'") (citation omitted); Miltland Raleigh-Durham v. Myers, 840 F. Supp. 235, 239 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) ("Attorneys may be compensated for reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred and customarily charged to their clients, as long as they 'were incidental and necessary to the representation' of those clients.") (citation omitted). The categories of expenses for which Class Counsel seek reimbursement here are the type of expenses routinely charged to hourly-fee paying clients and, therefore, should be reimbursed out of the common fund.

A large component of these reasonable and necessary expenses consists of fees paid to experts and consultants who were instrumental in, among other things, helping Class Counsel win class certification, prove liability, calculate damages, and obtain these favorable settlements for the Class. Dkt. 1908-1, ¶¶ 61-63; M. Miller Supp. Decl., Group Ex. C.

The expenses incurred in this litigation are described in Group Exhibit C of the M. Miller Supp. Decl. Class Counsel believe that the expenses were all reasonably incurred, are reasonable in amount and should be reimbursed in full. See In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152275 (E.D.N.Y. 2012) (awarding fees and expenses together totaling 39% of $9.5 million settlement).

C. Incentive Awards For The Named Plaintiffs Are Appropriate And Reasonable.

Class Counsel request the Court to approve incentive awards in the amount of $10,000 for each individual class representatives and $35,000 for each corporate class representative. The Class Representatives have diligently and completely fulfilled their obligations as representatives for the class. They stepped forward and pursued the Class' interest by filing suit on behalf of the members of the Class and undertaking the responsibilities attendant upon serving as a named plaintiff, including being deposed and responding to document requests and interrogatories. See Dkt. 1971 at 23-24 ("[d]istrict courts in this Circuit routinely grant incentive awards to representative plaintiffs in antitrust matters, when the representative plaintiff actively participates in the litigation.") (citations omitted).

The Class Representatives have acted as private attorneys general seeking a remedy for what appeared to be a public wrong, in effect providing private enforcement of the law. It is well recognized that private class action suits are a primary weapon in the enforcement of the laws for the protection of the public. See, e.g., P.D.Q. Inc. of Miami v. Nissan Motor Corp. in USA, 61 F.R.D. 372, 380 (S.D. Fla. 1973) (private civil suits are an important tool in enforcing the antitrust laws); Kahan v. Rosenstiel, 424 F.2d 161, 169 (3d Cir. 1970) ("the effectiveness of the securities laws may depend, in large measure, on the application of the class action device").

Numerous courts have found it appropriate to specially reward named class plaintiffs for the benefits they have conferred. See In re Dun & Bradstreet Credit Serv. Customer Litig., 130 F.R.D. at 376 (two incentive awards of $55,000 and three incentive awards of $35,000); In re REVCO Sec. Litig., Arsam Co. v. Salomon Bros., Inc., No. 89CV593, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7852 (N.D. Ohio, May 5, 1992) ($200,000 to the named plaintiff); Enterprise Energy Corp. v. Columbia Gas Transmission Corp., 137 F.R.D. 240, 250-51 (S.D. Ohio 1991) ($50,000 each to six named plaintiffs); Bogosnian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 621 F. Supp. 27 (E.D. Pa. 1985) (incentive awards of $20,000 to each of two named plaintiffs). Indeed, this Court recently awarded each Direct Purchaser Class Representative $35,000 for their efforts in prosecuting their claims. Dkt. 1971 at pp. 23-24.

The requested incentive award for the corporate plaintiffs is higher than for the individuals because the corporations did a more substantial amount of work on the case – reviewing and producing a much larger quantity of documents from numerous entities and making their corporate executive available for lengthy depositions. The requested $10,000 awards for each individual plaintiff and $35,000 awards for each corporate plaintiff are fair, reasonable, and warranted. For these reasons, Class Counsel submits that the requested incentive awards are both appropriate and reasonable in amount.

CONCLUSION

Without any guarantee of success, Class Counsel pursued this litigation effectively and efficiently at their own risk and expense for over four years. For the reasons set forth above, Class Counsel request the Court to approve the fee and expense application and enter an order: awarding Class Counsel a fee of 30% of the Settlement Amount; reimbursing them in the amount of $5,122,065.78 for incurred out-of-pocket expenses; and awarding incentive awards of $10,000 to each of the individual class representatives and $35,000 to each corporate class representative.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

11 MD 2262 (NRB)

11 Civ. 2613

NAOMI REICE BUCHWALD
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

On September 17, 2020, the Court granted final approval to settlements between the Exchange-Based Plaintiffs ("EBP") and Bank of America, Barclays, Citi, Deutsche Bank, HSBC, JP Morgan Chase, and Société Générale defendants (together, the "Settling Defendants"), worth a combined $187 million. (ECF Nos. 3175–80.)[1] This Memorandum and Order addresses EBP class counsel's application for attorney's fees in connection with those settlements. (ECF No. 3144.)

DISCUSSION

I. Work by Firms Other than Class Counsel is Not Compensable

In the fall of 2011, numerous firms applied for appointment as interim counsel for several LIBOR classes. In connection with those applications, the Court issued a memorandum raising several concerns. (ECF No. 32.) One of the issues addressed was whether appointing more than one law firm would lead to inefficient and duplicative efforts. (Id. at 8 (citing Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 10.221 (2004)).)[2]

[1] Unless noted otherwise, all docket numbers referenced in this Memorandum and Opinion are to the In re LIBOR-Based Financial Instruments Antitrust Litigation, 11 MD 2262 (S.D.N.Y.) docket.

After receiving assurances from the law firms of Kirby McInerney LLP and Lovell Stewart Halebian Jacobson LLP (together, "EBP Class Counsel") that they had the "financial, professional, investigative, international, and technological resources required to prosecute these claims," that they would be "willing and able to devote and expend the vast resources necessary to properly prosecute this litigation," and that appointment of both firms would not "defeat the efficiency purposes of lead counsel

[2] The potential conflict between a class and class counsel in the context of fee applications is well recognized, especially in the absence of a meaningful adversary process. See In re Colgate-Palmolive Co. ERISA Litig., 36 F. Supp. 3d 344, 349 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (citations omitted). Accordingly, it falls to the Court to protect the interests of the class, see Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 52 (2d Cir. 2000) (citation omitted), by discouraging inefficient litigation by class counsel both prospectively at the outset of the case and retrospectively in awarding fees at the case's conclusion.

A recent case in this District illustrates the depth of the Court's concern in fulfilling this responsibility. In In re Allergan PLC Securities Litigation, Chief Judge McMahon ordered that only a single firm could serve as class counsel, noting that it had been her experience that "the involvement of multiple firms tends to inflate legal fees to the detriment of the other class members." No. 18 Civ. 12089, 2020 WL 5796763, at *4-6 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 29, 2020). Despite that admonition, the firm appointed as class counsel proceeded to effectively split the work with another law firm whose application to serve as co-lead class counsel had been denied. Id. at *6-7. As a result, Judge McMahon denied lead plaintiff's motion for class certification. Id. *5-9.

appointments," (ECF No. 42 at 2-4, 7), the Court appointed them as interim co-lead class counsel for the EBP class. (ECF No. 66.)

Nevertheless, given the Court's desire to avoid duplicative litigation that could result from appointing more than one law firm, the Court ordered that EBP Class Counsel could only delegate work assignments to other law firms to the extent necessary "to facilitate the orderly and efficient prosecution of this litigation and to avoid duplicative or unproductive effort." (ECF No. 90 ¶ 18.f. (emphasis added).)[3]

In light of the Court's stated concerns and the scope of its order, the Court was, to say the least, surprised to learn from their fee application that EBP Class Counsel involved twelve additional law firms. (ECF No. 3146 ¶ 129.) The fees claimed by EBP Class Counsel associated with those law firms are far from merely incidental. Rather, they constitute over 18.5% of the lodestar hours claimed in the fee application (see id.) and account for more than half of the attorneys who worked on the case (compare id. Exs. B-C, with id. Exs. D–O).

[3] That qualification was intended to give EBP Class Counsel flexibility to seek outside help if, as never actually happened, extraordinary circumstances arose, such as finding counsel to assist with simultaneous triple- or quadruple-tracked depositions or hiring international counsel to advise on issues of foreign law. It was also a safeguard in case plaintiffs had to respond to separate briefs from each of the dozen-plus defendant groups, a situation that never came to pass because of defense counsel's admirable cooperation throughout this lawsuit.

Moreover, after reviewing the affidavits in support of the motion for attorney's fees and given EBP Class Counsel's resources, the Court cannot divine any reason why it was necessary, efficient, or in the best interests of the class to have twelve additional law firms litigate this case. (See id. Exs. B–O.) If anything, the hours were claimed for work that was duplicative, unnecessary, and easily could have been performed by the two appointed firms. This conclusion is informed by the Court's active engagement in resolving an unusual number of substantive issues, leading to the issuances of eight lengthy opinions and numerous other decisions. It is fair to say that this litigation was heavily weighted to the resolution of legal issues before the Court rather than, for example, deposition discovery outside the Court's view.

EBP Class Counsel's decision to involve a dozen other law firms in the class representation thus exceeded the scope of their authority. Accordingly, none of the work done by the twelve additional firms will be rewarded or credited towards any lodestar calculation. See Torres v. Gristede's Operating Corp., 519 F. App'x 1, 4 (2d Cir. 2013) (noting "the recognized practice of percentage cuts as a practical means of trimming fat from a fee application") (citation and quotation marks omitted). Irrespective of our determination that EBP Class Counsel had no authority to engage a dozen additional firms, the Court concludes that the 65,000+ hours of work done on this case by EBP Class Counsel alone was more than sufficient. Therefore, putting aside that the additional 15,000 hours of work is from firms not appointed as class counsel, those hours were not reasonably incurred and may not be tallied in the lodestar calculation. See id.

II. Determining a Reasonable Fee Award

We now turn to the issue of the appropriate fee to be awarded EBP Class Counsel. The Court assumes familiarity with the factors governing fee awards, which it addressed in a prior opinion in this multidistrict litigation concerning attorney's fees for OTC class counsel. In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 Civ. 5450, 2018 WL 3863445, at *3–4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2018) ("OTC Fee Op."). Consistent therewith, the Court will utilize the percentage-of-fund method and then cross-check that baseline fee award against the lodestar calculation. Id.

A. The Percentage-of-Fund Analysis

To determine an appropriate percentage fee award, the Court will evaluate: (1) historical fee award data published in empirical studies; (2) fee award trends from the cases in this District cited by EBP Class Counsel; and (3) fees awarded by this Court in other LIBOR class action settlements. As noted in the OTC Fee Opinion, the percentage award should reflect a sliding scale in which the portion of the settlement fund awarded as fees decreases as the size of the fund grows. Id. at *3 (citing Colgate-Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 348).

1. Empirical Studies of Historical Fee Award Data

As a starting point for calibrating an appropriate sliding scale, "[h]istorical data of fees awarded in common fund cases provides an unbiased and useful reference for comparing fees cases of similar magnitude . . . ." Colgate-Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 349.

One empirical study of 458 class actions between 2009 and 2013, often cited in this District, notes that the average fee award for settlement funds over $67.5 million was 22.3%:

Class recovery ranges are as follows. First decile: less than $400,000; second decile: $400,000–$750,000; third decile: $750,000–$1.4 million; fourth decile: $1.4–$2.65 million; fifth decile: $2.65–$3.9 million; sixth decile: $3.9–$6.5 million; seventh decile: $6.5–$12 million; eighth decile: $12–$23.4 million; ninth decile: $23.5–$67.5 million; tenth decile: greater than $67.5 million.

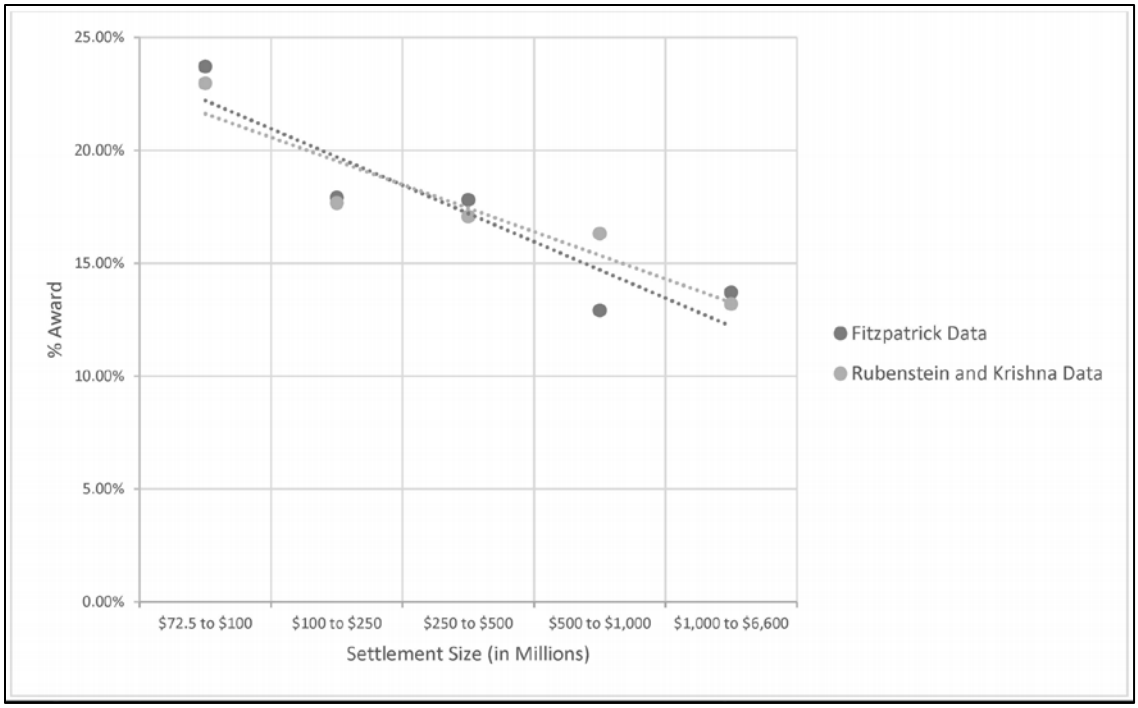
A second widely cited study of fee awards in 688 class actions in 2006 and 2007 observed that for settlement funds between $100 million and $250 million, the average award was 17.9% and the median award was 16.9%. Brian T. Fitzpatrick, An Empirical Study of Class Action Settlements and Their Fee Awards, 7 J. Empirical Legal Stud. 811, 839 & tbl. 11 (2010).

And a third empirical study published in a leading treatise on class actions found that the average fee award for settlement funds studied by the author between $100 million and $250 million was approximately 17%, as reflected on the chart below (which also incorporates the data from the Fitzpatrick study discussed immediately above):



5 William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 15:81 & graph 2 (5th ed.) (Westlaw 2020).

2. Fee Award Trends from Cases Cited by EBP Class Counsel in this District

While "the sheer volume of federal court class action settlements means that [an] isolated string cite[] to cases in which class counsel received a higher percentage of the settlement [is] not particularly meaningful," Alaska Elec.

Pension Fund v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. 14 Civ. 7126, 2018 WL 6250657, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 29, 2018) (citation omitted), the cases cited in EBP Class Counsel's brief provide another set of datapoints. (See ECF No. 3145 at 4 n.8, 10-11 & n.11; ECF No. 3146-17 at Ex. Q.) The cases EBP Class Counsel cite from this District for settlement funds over $50 million, excluding one outlier case, form the following sliding scale:[4] [4] See Christine Asia Co. v. Yun Ma, No. 15 MD 2631, 2019 WL 5257534, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 2019), appeal withdrawn sub nom. Tan Chao v. William, No. 19-3823, 2020 WL 763277 (2d Cir. Jan. 2, 2020); In re Mun. Derivatives Antitrust Litig., No. 08 Civ. 02516, 2016 WL 11543257, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. July 8, 2016); In re Beacon Assoc. Litig., No. 09 Civ. 3907, 2013 WL 2450960, at *5, *14 (S.D.N.Y. May 9, 2013); Velez v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., No. 04 Civ. 09194, 2010 WL 4877852, at *21 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 2010); Order, In re Nat. Gas Commodity Litig., No. 03 Civ. 6186 (S.D.N.Y. May 24, 2006), ECF No. 445; In re Deutsche Telekom AG Sec. Litig., No. 00 Civ. 9475, 2005 WL 7984326, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. June 9, 2005); Kurzweil v. Philip Morris Companies, Inc., No. 94 Civ. 2373, 1999 WL 1076105, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 1999); In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 400 (S.D.N.Y. 1999).

The one notable outlier is In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation in which the court awarded one-third of a $586 million settlement fund. 671 F. Supp. 2d 467, 471 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). That award

3. Other LIBOR Class Fee Awards

The most immediate benchmarks for determining an appropriate fee award for EBP Class Counsel are the fees the Court has already approved as reasonable in other LIBOR class actions.

In the OTC action, the Court awarded $43,478,572 from a $250,000,000 settlement fund and $62,788,212 from a $340,000,000 settlement fund. These awards translate to 18.49% and 18.50% of the remainder of the funds after deducting expenses, respectively. OTC Fee Op., 2018 WL 3863445, at *5; ECF No. 2745.

In the Lender action, the Court awarded $8,680,000 from a $31,000,000 settlement fund and $1,120,000 from a $4,000,000 settlement fund. These awards are the equivalent to 29.38% and 28.08% of the remainder of the respective funds after deducting expenses. (ECF Nos. 2777, 3097.)

And, in the Non-Defendant OTC action, the Court recently awarded class counsel $6,097,000 from a $21,775,000 settlement fund, which represents 28.06% of the fund's remainder after deducting expenses. (ECF No. 3185.)

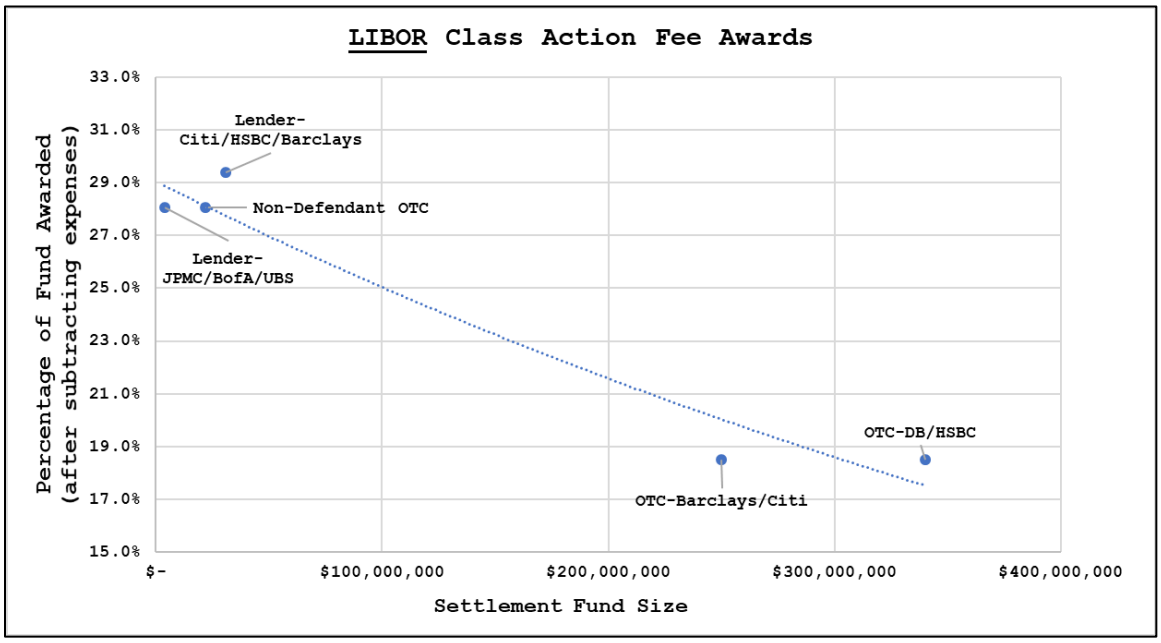
appears to reflect the exceptional circumstances of that case where class counsel expended over 677,000 hours of work prosecuting over 300 different actions and the court's award still resulted in a negative lodestar multiplier. See id. at 515. The circumstances here are not analogous.

The sliding scale below reflects these awards:



4. A Baseline Percentage Fee Award Range of 17% to 25% is Reasonable

Based on the above data, the 30% fee award EBP Class Counsel request is unreasonably high. An award of that size well exceeds the sliding scales formed by the empirical studies and the cases from this District cited by EBP Class Counsel. It also would represent the largest percentage of a fund awarded in the LIBOR litigation despite that the EBP settlement fund is several times larger than the Lender and Non-Defendant OTC settlements.

The trendlines established by these sources instead suggest that a reasonable fee for EBP Class Counsel would fall somewhere between approximately 17% and 25% of the settlement fund.

B. Other Goldberger Factors Weigh in Favor of a 25% Award

The baseline fee range of 17%-25% of the fund accounts for two of the so-called Goldberger factors governing fee awards in the Second Circuit: (1) the "magnitude and complexities of the litigation"; and (2) the "fee in relation to the settlement." 209 F.3d at 50; see Colgate–Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 348.

The Court may adjust the baseline percentage fee based on the following Goldberger factors: (1) the "risk of the litigation"; (2) the "quality of representation"; and (3) "public policy considerations." 209 F.3d at 50; see Colgate–Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 351–53. While "courts have traditionally awarded fees . . . in the lower range of what is reasonable" to avoid "windfalls," Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 122–23 (2d Cir. 2005) (citation omitted), an award of 25% of the fund after deducting for expenses is appropriate here in light of these other Goldberger factors. See, e.g., Alaska Elec., 2018 WL 6250657, at *3. Based on the $181,386,421.14 settlement fund remaining after deducting $5,613,578.86 in expenses, a 25% award would be $45,346,605.29.

No further adjustment to that baseline percentage award is warranted under the circumstances of this case. See Colgate–Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 351 (If a case was "demonstrably exceptional in any of these areas, then an increase or decrease of the baseline percentage would be warranted.").

C. Lodestar Cross-Check

The last step in the Court's analysis is to cross check the 25% award against a lodestar calculation of EBP Class Counsel's fees, which satisfies the final Goldberger factor: the time and effort contributed by counsel. 209 F.3d at 50; see Colgate–Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 353. To calculate fees under the lodestar method, the Court multiplies the reasonable hours billed by a reasonable hourly rate. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47 (citation omitted).

As discussed above, the Court will not credit the hours represented by work done by non-EBP Class Counsel towards the lodestar calculation. Alone, EBP Class Counsel's hours total 65,787.36. (See ECF No. 3146 ¶ 129.) That is over 10,000 hours more than what OTC class counsel claimed in support of their fee application for a case of similar magnitude, (compare id., with ECF No. 2706 ¶¶ 48–50), and is also the rough equivalent to a four-person law firm working on this case full-time for nine years billing 40 hours-per-week, 48 weeks-per-year. While the sheer quantum of hours suggests some amount of over-litigation, the Court will credit EBP Class Counsel the full amount of time they claim.

EBP Class Counsel's hourly rates, which produce blended rates of roughly $860 for partners, $470 for associates, and $230 for paralegals, are not out of line with the amounts sought and approved in other cases in this District.[5] (See ECF No. 3146 Exs. B, C.) For purposes of the lodestar cross-check, the Court will thus apply the full rates claimed by EBP Class Counsel.

Fully credited, EBP Class Counsel's lodestar is $42,463,194.85. (Id. ¶ 129.) When compared to the 25% baseline fee award of $45,346,605.29, the cross-check results in a lodestar multiplier of 1.07. This cross-check confirms that the 25% award is reasonable.

CONCLUSION

EBP Class Counsel's motion for attorney's fees is granted in part and denied in part. The Court awards EBP Class Counsel $45,346,605.29 in attorney's fees, equal to 25% of the remainder of the $187,000,000 settlement fund after deducting $5,613,578.86 in expenses. The fee award shall be paid pro rata across the settlement funds created by the settlements between Exchange-Based Plaintiffs and Settling Defendants. That fee shall be paid to EBP Class Counsel pursuant to the terms, conditions, and obligations of the settlement agreements. Consistent with Pretrial Order No. 1, EBP Class Counsel may distribute those fees to other counsel in their discretion. (ECF No. 90 ¶ 18.j.)

[5] In a recent opinion, Judge Failla surveyed fee decisions in this District and approved of reasonable hourly rates of up to $900 for experienced partners, up to $425 for senior associates, and up to $200 for paralegals. Carrington v. Graden, No. 18 Civ. 4609, 2020 WL 5758916, at *12–15 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 28, 2020) (listing cases).

As stated at the Fairness Hearing, the Court also approves the Exchange-Based Plaintiffs' request for $5,613,578.86 in litigation costs and expenses and for $25,000 service awards for each of the six named plaintiffs. The expenses and service awards shall be paid be pro rata across the settlement funds created by the settlements between Exchange-Based Plaintiffs and the Settling Defendants.

The Clerk of Court is respectfully directed to terminate the motions currently pending at ECF No. 3144 in Case No. 11 MD 2262 and ECF No. 787 in Case No. 11 Civ. 2613.

SO ORDERED.

Mar. 2, 2020), [ECF No. 3038] (the "Preliminary Approval Order"), Court-appointed interim co-lead class counsel Lovell Stewart Halebian Jacobson LLP and Kirby McInerney LLP ("Settlement Class Counsel" or "Class Counsel") for the Exchange-Based Plaintiffs hereby respectfully submit this Memorandum of Law and the accompanying Joint Declaration in support of Settlement Class Counsel's motion for an award of attorneys' fees, litigation expenses, and service awards for named plaintiffs in connection with the settlements between Exchange-Based Plaintiffs and Defendants Barclays, BOA, Citi, Deutsche Bank, HSBC, JPMorgan, and SG (the "Exchange-Based Settlements" or "Settlements").[1]

I. INTRODUCTION

As this case approaches its tenth year, Settlement Class Counsel have performed legal services on a fully contingent basis and advanced $5,613,578.86 million in expenses on behalf of Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class without receiving any remuneration to date. As a result of their zealous representation of Plaintiffs, Class Counsel have succeeded in obtaining one hundred and eighty-seven million dollars ($187,000,000) in Settlements, which this Court preliminarily approved on March 2, 2020. See LIBOR, 2020 WL 1059489.[2] If and to the extent that any

[1] Unless otherwise defined herein, all capitalized terms not defined herein shall have the meaning ascribed in the "Table of Defined Terms." All references to "¶" are to the Joint Declaration unless otherwise noted. All "Exhibit" or "Ex." references are to the Joint Declaration. All "ECF No." references are to the MDL docket unless otherwise noted.

[2] The aggregate Settlements, if all receive final approval from the Court, will create a $187 million Settlement Fund: BOA has agreed to pay $15 million; Barclays has agreed to pay $19.975 million; Citi has agreed to pay $33.4 million;

Settlement is finally approved, Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court (1) grant reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $5,613,578.86, (2) award attorneys' fees, and (3) award plaintiffs service awards.

Attorneys' Fee Request. As discussed herein (see Section III.A, infra), Settlement Class Counsel pursued this case on a wholly contingent basis without any guarantee of success or compensation. Class Counsel now respectfully request that the Court award attorneys' fees in the amount of thirty percent (30%) of the remainder of the Settlement Fund minus Class Counsel's litigation expenses approved by the Court.[3] This nature of this request is consistent with the Court's previously articulated view "that awarding fees as a percentage of net recovery is more consistent with notions of public policy in that doing so encourages class counsel's prudence and discretion in incurring expenses." In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 Civ. 5450, 2018 WL 3863445, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2018) (emphasis in original). Settlement Class Counsel respectfully submits that the percentage fee award is justified by, inter alia, the following considerations.

As an initial matter, the $187 million recovered for members of the Exchange-Based Settlement Classes is unquestionably substantial. If all the Settlements are approved, then this Action would represent the largest class action settlement of manipulation claims in the history of Deutsche Bank has agreed to pay $80 million; HSBC has agreed to pay $18.5 million; JPMorgan has agreed to pay $15 million; and SG has agreed to pay $5.125 million.

[3] Example: if $5,613,578.86 in litigation expenses are reimbursed, then the requested fee is for 30% of $181,386,421.14, which is the remainder of $187,000,000 minus $5,613,578.86. 30% of $181,386,421.14 is $54,415,926.34. As reflected in the declarations attached to the Joint Declaration, the total "lodestar" value of Class Counsel's fee compensable services is $52,134,123.35. Multiplying $52,134,123.35 by 1.04 equals approximately $54,219,488.28. Courts frequently award percentage fees based on the total common fund rather than the common fund minus expenses. If $5,613,578.86 in litigation expenses were reimbursed, and this fee request were granted, it would actually represent a percentage fee of 28.99%. Thus, Class Counsel's actual fee request made herein of (approximately) 28.99% if calculated on a gross basis of the common fund is materially less than the up to one-third of the Settlement Fund from the Settlements which was specified in the notice given to members of the Settlement Classes.

the Commodity Exchange Act, 7 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. ("CEA").[4] Even so, the requested fee would provide Class Counsel with a modest 1.04 risk multiplier. This is because the requested fee represents 1.04 times the total "lodestar" value of the more than nine years of fee compensable professional services performed by Class Counsel.

There were very substantial risks of prosecuting Plaintiffs' claims that arose in the "esoteric"[5] commodity futures markets and involved "complex and difficult" issues of proof,[6] which characterize commodity futures manipulation claims. Compare In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 Md. 2262 (NRB), 2016 WL 7378980, at *22-23 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2016) ("LIBOR VI"); In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 Md. 2262 (NRB), 299 F. Supp. 3d 430, 489 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 28, 2018) ("LIBOR VII"). For example, this Court previously found that the over-the-counter ("OTC") plaintiffs' claims were "undeniably complex and fraught with risks."[7] But unlike the OTC plaintiffs, the Exchange-Based Plaintiffs were not in privity and did not have a contract with each Defendant specifying the amount of interest to be paid or received as arithmetically calculated from LIBOR. Id. Instead, Plaintiffs made open market purchases and sales in the "volatile" commodity futures markets, and confronted the "complex and difficult" task of establishing the fact and amounts of impact in such

[6] See Sumitomo, 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 395 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (noting that CEA manipulation cases are "complex and difficult").

[7] This Court recognized that the OTC Action "has undisputedly been complex and fraught with risk." LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *4 (awarding a fee of 18.5% in connection with settlements totaling $235 million, which constituted a 1.65 lodestar multiplier).

"esoteric" markets of Defendants' alleged manipulations of LIBOR upon the EDF prices at which Plaintiffs transacted. See, e.g., id. Thus, Plaintiffs faced more substantial risks in establishing the fact and amount of price impact and injury than were present in the OTC plaintiffs' claims which were "undeniably complex and fraught with risks." See n. 7, supra.

Given these and many other risks, as well as the more than 9.5 years of delay before any attorneys' fees or reimbursement of expenses may be received, Class Counsel respectfully submit that 30% of the remainder of the Settlement Fund after counsel's litigation expenses are reimbursed, representing a 1.04 risk multiplier, is fair, reasonable, and equitable. See Sumitomo, 74 F. Supp. 2d at 395 (fee of 27.5% of the $134 million settlement amount on claims of copper futures manipulation, representing a 2.5 risk multiplier after a delay in payment from inception of 3.5 years.); In re Deutsche Telekom AG Sec. Litig., No. 00 Civ. 9475, 2005 WL 7984326, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. June 14, 2005) (Buchwald, J.) (awarding attorneys' fees of 28% of a $120 million settlement, representing a 3.96 risk multiplier after 5 years from inception); see also n.3, supra; LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *4 (noting "mean multiplier in this Circuit is approximately 1.55, with multipliers in antitrust and securities cases recently averaging 1.77 and 1.43, respectively" (citing 4 William B. II. RELEVANT BACKGROUND

At the outset of and continuing throughout this litigation, the risks of successfully pleading, proving, and otherwise prosecuting the claims in this Action were substantial. There was no government settlement or complaint prior to the commencement of this Action, nor until well after the filing of the motion to dismiss the consolidated amended complaint. See generally ¶¶ 11-53. In fact, there was never any government settlement or complaint asserting a conspiracy or antitrust violation among or by any Defendants. And there was never any government settlement or complaint even for individual wrongdoing against three of the Settling Defendants (BOA, HSBC, and JPMorgan), relating to the alleged manipulation of U.S. Dollar LIBOR. Further, the remaining government orders or complaints focused on individual B.B.A. U.S. Dollar LIBOR panel banks' wrongdoing related to LIBOR, and the regulatory settlements did not primarily focus on how alleged manipulation impacted Eurodollar Futures prices.

In investigating and drafting the complaints and preparing to defend the motions to dismiss, Class Counsel faced numerous pleading, proof, and personal jurisdiction risks. On the antitrust claims, the risks included whether the alleged conduct injured competition, constituted a conspiracy, impacted LIBOR, impacted EDF prices, and/or caused antitrust injury in a way that conferred on Plaintiffs "efficient enforcer" standing to sue. On the CEA claims, the risks included, but were not limited to, whether Defendants (i) acted to suppress LIBOR, (ii) did so with scienter to manipulate EDF prices, (iii) did impact EDF prices, and (iv) did so knowing what one another was doing for purposes of aiding and abetting or other joint liability. To take just one of many examples, if one or more Defendants did intend to suppress LIBOR to help their own reputation, how did that produce a conspiracy? Or scienter to manipulate EDF prices? Or aiding and abetting another bank's suppression of its LIBOR quote?

In preparing the complaint, defending the numerous motions to dismiss, preparing multiple amended complaints, and engaging in extensive discovery, Class Counsel worked with economists and market experts, performed factual investigation and legal research, and otherwise performed professional services to try to overcome these risks. Class Counsel sought to plead that LIBOR was suppressed compared to the Federal Reserve Deposit Rate and other benchmarks. E.g., In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., ("LIBOR I"), No. 11 Md. 2262 (NRB), 935 F. Supp. 2d 666, 716 (S.D.N.Y. 2013). Class counsel successfully alleged facts and developed legal arguments to plead that Defendants' conduct, even if aimed predominantly or exclusively at LIBOR alone (and not EDF prices), was sufficient for a reasonable inference of the requisite scienter. See, e.g., id. at 715; In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., ("LIBOR II"), No. 11 Md. 2262 (NRB), 962 F. Supp. 2d 606, 615-16 (S.D.N.Y. 2013); In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 Md. 2262 (NRB) ("LIBOR III"), 27 F. Supp. 3d 447, 466-71

(S.D.N.Y. 2014). And Class Counsel sought to develop multiple fact allegations and legal theories to support aiding and abetting. See LIBOR I, 935 F. Supp. 2d at 722-23.

Defendants, represented by the highest caliber defense counsel, made no fewer than four motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims on the foregoing and additional grounds (also including for lack of personal jurisdiction). In a series of four detailed opinions, this Court not only repeatedly rejected Defendants' multiple efforts to dismiss large portions of the CEA claims but also granted Plaintiffs leave to amend to substantially enlarge the Class. ¶¶ 15, 17, 20, 27; see also In re Initial Public Offering Sec. Litig., 21 MC 92, 2011 WL 2732563, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. July 8, 2011) (Scheindlin, J) (Executive Committee incurred "significant risk that it would never be compensated for its time and effort. . . " including "[b]riefing multiple rounds of motions to dismiss. . . .").

As a result, after Defendants' motions to dismiss were resolved, Plaintiffs had broader CEA claims than they did at the case's outset. Even so, after appeal and further motion practice, Plaintiffs' "efficient enforcer" status to pursue their antitrust claim was almost entirely eliminated. LIBOR VI, 2016 WL 7378980, at *15-17, 21-23. Class Counsel repeatedly sought to appeal portions of the motions to dismiss on which they did not prevail. E.g., Joint Decl. ¶¶ 22, 38. In this context, both before and after this period, Class Counsel also coordinated and worked extensively with counsel from other LIBOR cases on the various joint appeals stemming from this Court's rulings. See, e.g., ¶ 21; Joint Decl. Ex. B (Declaration of David E. Kovel) at ¶ 2.

Risks of Proving the Remaining Claims. Given the liberal federal pleading standards, the risks of proving all the elements of Plaintiffs' claims that survived Defendants' lengthy motions to dismiss were much greater than the risks of surviving the motions to dismiss in the first place. See LIBOR VI, 2016 WL 7378980, at *17 (denying motion to dismiss, but expressing skepticism about the ability to prove the allegations). Through discovery, Plaintiffs developed and later submitted on May 2, 2017 extensive evidence that they contended established a prima facie claim for members of the Settlement Classes. ECF Nos. 1885, 1890-91 (Plaintiffs' class motion).

During discovery, Class Counsel worked diligently to find in the approximately 18 million pages of productions incriminating documents supporting claims against each of the Defendants for suppression and/or TBM manipulation, establishing impact, and supporting class certification. ¶¶ 57-59.[9]

During discovery, Plaintiffs faced arguments from Defendants that the jargon in the conversations which Plaintiffs' market experts construed to be manipulative, actually was harmless. Defendants argued that non-harmless communications were not acted upon in a suppressed or inflated LIBOR submission. Defendants argued that the daily release of LIBOR supposedly did not appreciably change EDF prices. Among other points, Class Counsel responded to the last of such arguments by arguing that the futures markets are anticipatory markets, accordingly EDF prices anticipated and adjusted to the falsity in LIBOR before the British Banking Association released LIBOR and while the Defendants were making their false submissions in London. In reply, Defendants argued that there was no causation by any suppressed LIBOR of inflated EDF prices and, instead, the movement in EDF prices caused changes in LIBOR. Plaintiffs argued that the only changes in EDF prices were changes of what anticipated LIBOR would be when it was released or at the final expiration of the trading in the EDF contract.

On May 2, 2017, Plaintiffs filed their motion for class certification. ¶ 34. However, as discovery and the foregoing arguments were progressing, Class Counsel entered into settlement negotiations with various Settling Defendants. Class Counsel sought to use their investigation and discovery to convince these Defendants to settle. Notwithstanding the greater risks of proving the claims than pleading them, Class Counsel succeeded in concluding agreements to settle with five Defendants (Citi, Deutsche Bank, HSBC, BOA, and JPMorgan) after the filing of Plaintiffs' class certification motion. ¶¶ 75-88. The last two Settlements (with BOA and JPMorgan) were not reached in principle until after the completion of class certification briefing and on the day before oral argument on the class certification motion. ¶ 91.

Through Class Counsel's efforts in investigating and pleading the Class's claims, defending motions to dismiss, preparing amended complaints, moving for leave to amend, reviewing extensive document productions, conducting oral arguments, briefing for class certification, negotiating settlements, and multiple other tasks, Class Counsel were able to conclude $162 million in Settlements after the filing of the class motion.[10]

Class Counsel faced the substantial risks of proving the claims described above. By virtue of their extensive professional services, Class Counsel overcame those risks sufficiently to create the $187 million in Settlements for the Class, which, if approved, will constitute the largest class action settlement of CEA manipulation claims in the history of the CEA.

III. ARGUMENT

A. Settlement Class Counsel Are Entitled to A Reasonable Fee from the Common Fund They Recovered For The Benefit of the Settlement Classes

Under the common fund doctrine, "a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from [10] The initial "icebreaker" $19,975,000 Barclays settlement came before, and the $5,250,000 Société Générale settlement came well after, the class certification briefing process. But even as to the Barclays initial icebreaker Settlement, Class Counsel engaged in negotiations with Barclays after the filing of the class motion in order to amend the Barclays settlement and obtain material improvements in the terms. ¶¶ 72-73. Class Counsel negotiated extensively to make the Barclays and Société Générale settlements and obtained valuable cooperation, especially from Barclays. ¶¶ 65-74, 94-99.

the fund as a whole." Boeing v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980). If the Settlements receive final approval, Eligible Claimants will receive distributions from the $187 million common fund generated by the efforts of Settlement Class Counsel. An award of attorneys' fees and the reimbursement of litigation expenses would compensate Settlement Class Counsel for bringing and prosecuting the Action on a wholly contingent basis without any remuneration for well in excess of nine years.

1. The Requested Fee Is Fair and Reasonable Under the Preferred "Percentage Method"

Under the percentage method, the Court "sets some percentage of the recovery as a fee" for class counsel. Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 47 (2d Cir. 2000). This Court has recognized in this proceeding that "'[i]t remains the case that adoption of the percentage method continues to be the trend of district courts in the Second Circuit but . . . an analysis of counsel's lodestar as a cross check on the reasonableness of the requested percentage remains common.'" LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *3 quoting In re IMAX Sec. Litig., No. 06 Civ. 6128 (NRB), 2012 WL 3133476, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 1, 2012)).

Courts in the Second Circuit have routinely awarded attorneys' fees in an amount equal to 30 percent or more of the common fund in cases where there was a comparably sized common fund. See Velez v Novartis Pharm. Corp., No. 04 Civ. 9194, 2010 WL 4877852, at *21 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 2010) (collecting cases awarding 30 percent or more); In re Beacon Assoc. Litig., No. 09 Civ. 3907, 2013 WL 2450960, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. May 9, 2013) ("In this Circuit, courts routinely award attorneys' fees that run to 30% and even a little more of the amount of the common fund.").[11]

[11] See, e.g., In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litig., No. 13 Md. 2437, 2018 WL 3439454, at *20 (E.D. Pa. July 17, 2018) (awarding one-third fee on settlements totaling $190 million); In re Mun. Derivatives Antitrust Litig., No. 08 Civ. 2516, 2016 WL 11543257, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. July 8, 2016) (one-third fee from $101 million settlement fund); In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., No. 10 Civ. 00318, 2013 WL 6577029, at *1 (D. Md. Dec. 13, 2013) (one-third fee from $163.5 million settlement fund); In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 951 F. Supp. 2d 739, 748-52 (E.D. Pa. 2013) (granting attorneys' fees of one-third from a $150 million settlement fund); In re Initial Public Offering Secs. Litig.,

The requested 30% fee is also in line with prior CEA manipulation class actions that have awarded fees constituting one-third of the common fund. See, e.g., In re Nat. Gas Commodity Litig., No. 03 Civ. 6186, slip op. (S.D.N.Y. May 24, 2006) (ECF No. 445) [Joint Decl. Ex. Q, Tab 5] (33⅓% fee award that resulted in a 1.44 lodestar multiplier); In re Soybeans Futures Litig., No. 89 Civ. 7009, slip op. (N.D. Ill. Nov. 27, 1996) (ECF No. 470) [Joint Decl. Ex. Q, Tab 8] (33⅓% fee award that resulted in a 1.03 lodestar multiplier); In re BP Propane Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 06 Civ. 3541, slip op. (N.D. Ill. Feb. 10, 2010) (ECF No. 209) [Joint Decl. Ex. Q, Tab 2] (33% fee award that resulted in a 2.7 lodestar multiplier).

2. The Requested Fee Would Result In A Lodestar Multiplier of 1.04, Confirming the Reasonableness of the Requested Fee

Settlement Class Counsel have spent over 80,758 hours litigating the Action, representing a total lodestar of $52,134,123.35 based on counsel's current hourly rates. ¶¶ 125-26. The requested fee of 30% of the Settlement Fund (after deducting counsel's requested out-of-pocket expenses totaling $ $5,613,578.86) would result in a lodestar multiplier of approximately 1.04.

A Lodestar Multiplier of 1.04 is Reasonable. The requested 1.04 risk multiplier is well below what this Court recently recognized as the mean multiplier in this Circuit of approximately 1.55 for antitrust and securities actions. See LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *4 (awarding of a fee that yielded a 1.65 multiplier and noting that such a multiplier "fits comfortably within the range of lodestar multipliers generally observed.").[12] Indeed, numerous courts have awarded attorneys'

Q, Tab 6] (awarding 33⅓% of a $191 million settlement); In re Steel, ECF No. 539 [Joint Decl. Q, Tab 9] (awarding 33% of a $163,900,000 settlement); *Kurzweil v. Nov. 30, 1999) (awarding 30% of a $123 million settlement); In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., No. 10 Md. 2196, 2015 WL 1639269, at *7 (N.D. Ohio Feb. 26, 2015) (awarding attorneys' fees of 30% of $147.8 million fund).

fees in antitrust class actions of 30% or more and that yielded substantially higher lodestar multipliers between 1.66 and 4.88.[13] The requested 1.04 risk multiplier is extremely reasonable.

The Hours Expended By Counsel are Reasonable. Settlement Class Counsel and counsel for Plaintiffs have spent a total of over 80,758 hours litigating the Action for the last nine years (excluding time relating to this motion). ¶¶ 125, 127.[14] Counsel's work in this case overcame many of the substantial risks associated with the claims here (see Section II, supra) and resulted in the largest historical "futures and options on futures only" settlement class for manipulation claims under the CEA. See n.4, supra.

Q, Tab 6] (awarding a 33⅓ % fee in connection with settlements totaling $190.4 million, which constituted 1.99 lodestar multiplier); In re Domestic Drywall, 2018 WL 3439454, at *20 (awarding a 33⅓% fee in connection with settlements totaling $190 million, which constituted a 1.66 lodestar multiplier); In re Steel, (ECF No. 539) [Joint Decl. Ex. Q, Tab 9] (awarding a 33% fee in connection with settlements totaling $163.9 million, which constituted a 1.97 risk multiplier); In re Titanium Dioxide, 2013 WL 6577029, at *1 (awarding a 33⅓% fee in connection with settlements totaling $163.5 million, which constituted a 2.39 lodestar multiplier); In re Flonase, 951 F. Supp. 2d at 748-52 (awarding a 33⅓% fee in connection with settlements totaling $150 million, which constituted a 2.99 lodestar multiplier); Kurzweil, 1999 WL 1076105, at *3 (awarding a 30% fee in connection with a $123.8 million settlement, which constituted a 2.46 lodestar multiplier).

[14] For purposes of this fee application, Settlement Class Counsel excluded time incurred by non-lead counsel prior to the period between November 29, 2011 (i.e., the date the Court appointed Kirby and Lovell as interim co-lead counsel for the Exchange-Based Plaintiffs) and following December 31, 2019. ¶ 127.

Counsel's Hourly Rates are Reasonable. The hourly rates for the professional services undertaken by Plaintiffs' counsel have been billed at the regular current hourly rates in cases involving complex class action litigation and/or have been accepted in other antitrust or complex class action litigations. ¶ 128.[15] The hourly billing rates for attorneys working on this case ranged from $125 to $1,140.[16] Billing rates in the same range have been previously approved by this Court and others in this District as reflective of market rates in New York for work of comparable size and complexity.[17] The hourly rates charged by Plaintiffs' counsel are well within the range of reasonable fees for attorneys working on complex class action litigation in this District and are comparable to peer plaintiff and defense firms litigating matters of similar magnitude. See Joint Decl. Ex. P (table reflecting comparable billing rates).[18]

In sum, Settlement Class Counsel's requested 30% fee award is reasonable as a percentage of the Settlement Fund and also satisfies the "lodestar cross-check" because such a fee would result in a lodestar multiplier of 1.04—well below the average multiplier in this Circuit generally and well below the 1.6 multiplier awarded by this Court in the OTC Action. As discussed below, the requested fee is also supported by each of the Goldberger factors considered by courts in this Circuit.

[18] Settlement Class Counsel's hourly billing rates are also lower than those charged by defense counsel in this Action. See Joint Decl. Ex. P. For example, according to recent filings in federal bankruptcy cases, (1) Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison LLP's rates are (a) partner, between $1,165-$1,560, and (b) for associates and counsel, between $640-$1,160; (2) Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP's rates are (a) for partners, between $1,350-$1,550, and (b) $540-$1,170 for non-partners; (3) Mayer Brown LLP's rates are (a) for partners, between $960-$1,130, and (b) $605-$895 for non-partners; (4) Sullivan & Cromwell LLP's rates are (a) for partners, between $1,140-$1,295, (b) $995 for special counsel, and (c) for associates, between $460-$865; (5) Davis Polk Wardwell LLP's rates are (a) for partners, between $1,445-$1,685, (b) for counsel, between $1,075-$1,295, and (c) for associates, between $525-$1,095; (6) Covington & Burling LLP's rates are (a) for partners, between $825-$1,110, (b) senior of counsel and special counsel, between $775-$1,215, and (c) for associates, between $490-$730; and (7) Locke Lord LLP's rates are (a) for partners, between $660-$1,040, (b) for senior counsel, between $670-$855, and (c) for associates, between $390-$450. Id.

3. Each Goldberger Factor Supports the Requested Fee Award

In the Second Circuit, courts evaluating whether a fee is "reasonable" must consider: "(1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation . . . ; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50. Each Goldberger factor weighs in favor of the reasonableness of Settlement Class Counsel's fee request in this Action.

a) The Risk of the Litigation

The risk of the litigation is perhaps "the most important Goldberger factor." In re Payment Card Interchange Fee & Merch. Disc. Antitrust Litig., 991 F. Supp. 2d 437, 440 (E.D.N.Y. 2014); see also Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54 ("We have historically labeled the risk of success as 'perhaps the foremost' factor to be considered in determining whether to award an enhancement.") (internal citation omitted). Claims for manipulation in violation of the CEA have been recognized as "notoriously difficult to prove" and "more difficult and risky than securities fraud cases." Sumitomo, 74 F. Supp. 2d at 395, 397. The numerous and very substantial, pleading, proof and personal jurisdiction risks inherent in the settled claims have been set forth in Section II, supra. They strongly support the requested fee.

b) The Magnitude and Complexities of the Litigation

It is hard to overstate the complexity and magnitude of this litigation, which is now entering its tenth year. This Court previously recognized that the prosecution of price manipulation claims in violation of the CEA is notoriously "complex and difficult." Compare Sumitomo, 74 F. Supp.

2d at 395, with Merrill Lynch v. Curran, 456 U.S. at 356 (commodity futures markets are "esoteric"); see also In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 477 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("Class actions have a well-deserved reputation as being most complex") (internal citation and quotations omitted); In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., No. 06 MDL 1738, 2012 WL 5289514, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2012) (antitrust cases involving collusion and price manipulation is "complicated, lengthy, and bitterly fought.").

With regard to magnitude of the litigation, Plaintiffs have alleged that the sixteen U.S. Dollar LIBOR Panel Banks, many of which are among the largest banks in the world, conspired to fix and manipulate USD LIBOR over a period of more than five years. See [Corrected] Fourth Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint, In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 MD 2262, [ECF No. 2363], ¶¶ 5-21, 93-705. The operative complaint is more than 320 pages long. Id. The Court has issued numerous lengthy decisions on substantive issues. More than 18 million pages of documents have been produced to Plaintiffs' counsel by Defendants and non-parties. ¶ 57. The docket specific to the Exchange Based action has more than 780 entries and the primary docket for this action has more than 3,100 entries. See In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 MD 2262. Settlement Class Counsel respectfully submit that the complexity and magnitude of the Exchange-Based Action fully support the requested fee.

c) The Quality of Representation Supports The Requested Fee

"[T]he quality of representation is best measured by results," Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55, which are evaluated in light of "the recovery obtained and the backgrounds of the lawyers involved in the lawsuit." In re Merrill Lynch Tyco Research Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 124, 141 (S.D.N.Y. 2008).

The Results. The proposed partial Settlements of this Action have resulted in a combined Settlement Fund of $187 million for the benefit of the Settlement Classes and collectively represent the largest class-wide recovery for a "futures only" settlement class.

The Representation. Settlement Class Counsel have extensive experience prosecuting commodity manipulation and antitrust cases. See Joint Decl. Exs. B-3, C-3. The Lovell Stewart Firm has forty years' experience litigating commodity futures manipulation cases and, as sole lead or co-lead counsel, has obtained several of the largest settlements in the history of the CEA. The Kirby Firm similarly has decades of experience representing investors in litigation relating to the manipulation of physical commodities, commodity futures, and related derivative products, and as sole lead or co-lead counsel, has recovered millions in manipulation cases.

The quality of representation provided by opposing counsel is also a relevant consideration. Maley v. Del Global Tech. Corp., 186 F. Supp. 2d 358, 373 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). The Settling Defendants are represented by several of the nation's biggest and most highly regarded defense firms. The fact that Settlement Class Counsel prosecuted this Action for more than nine years against such formidable opponents to successfully produce these results, further supports the requested fee. See Meredith Corp. v. SESAC, LLC, 87 F. Supp. 3d 650, 670 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (noting that counsel's achievement in "obtaining valuable recompense . . . for its clients is particularly noteworthy given the caliber and vigor of its adversaries").

d) The Time and Labor Expended by Settlement Class Counsel Support the Requested Fee

As detailed in Section III.A.2 above and in the Joint Declaration, Settlement Class Counsel devoted over 80,758 hours to the successful prosecution of the claims here. The lodestar value of this time totals $52,134,123.35.

e) The Requested Fee in Relation to the Settlements

As detailed above, the requested fee of 30% of the Settlement Fund (after deducting Court-approved expenses) is well within the range of fees approved within this Circuit in actions that involved similarly-sized common funds. See n.8, 11, 13, supra (collecting cases that awarded fees totaling 30% or more of common funds).[19] The requested 30% fee would result in a lodestar multiplier of 1.04. See Section III.A.2, supra. As detailed above, a lodestar multiplier of 1.04 is well below multipliers in actions that awarded fees equal to or greater than 30% of similarly-sized common funds. Id.; see also n. 8, 11-13, supra (collecting cases that awarded fees totaling 30% or more of common funds and that yielded lodestar multipliers between 1.66 and 4.88).

f) Public Policy Supports Approval of the Fee Request

Private lawsuits asserting claims for manipulation further the overarching purpose of the CEA which is "to deter and prevent price manipulation." 7 U.S.C. § 5(b) (the "purpose" of the CEA is to "deter and prevent price manipulation"). Indeed, private lawsuits such as this one are regarded by Congress as "critical to protecting the public and fundamental to maintaining the credibility of the futures market." Cange v. Stotler & Co., 826 F.2d 581, 584 (7th Cir. 1987) (emphasis added) citing to H.R. Rep. No. 565, 97th Cong., 2d Sess., pt. 1 at 56-7, reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 3871, 3905-06; see also Am. Soc'y of Mech. Eng'rs v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 572 n.10 (1982) ("[p]rivate suits are an important element of the Nation's antitrust enforcement effort."); Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983)

[19] Reducing the percentage award as the settlement size increases disincentivizes class counsel from creating incremental value for the class by holding out for more money on the class's behalf. See In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 197 F.R.D. 71, 80 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) ("By adjusting downward the percentage of the recovery awarded to counsel as plaintiffs' recovery increases . . . this method may give rise to an attorney incentive problem by creating declining marginal returns to effort for counsel . . . . Again, this method can create an incentive to settle quickly and cheaply, when the returns to effort are highest, rather than investing additional time and maximizing plaintiffs' recovery."). See also In re Syngenta AG MIR 162 Corn Litig., 357 F. Supp. 3d 1094, 1114 (D. Kan. Dec. 7, 2018) (articulating same "incentive" problem and therefore awarding 33⅓% fee on a $1.51 billion settlement).

("[t]his Court has emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes, including the federal antitrust laws.").

Awarding a reasonable percentage of the common fund "provid[es] lawyers with sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases that serve the public interest." See Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 51. Settlement Class Counsel respectfully submit that the requested fee award would further these important public policies and help promote the future integrity of the county's important financial markets. Without this private action, the vast majority of investors in the Eurodollar futures markets would have no other source of potential recovery for the alleged manipulation of USD LIBOR and its impact on Eurodollar futures prices.

g) The Reaction of the Class to Date Supports the Requested Fee

Through August 11, 2020, the Settlement Administrator has disseminated the long form Notice to 20,978 potential members of the Settlement Class informing them, among other things, that the Settlement Class intended to apply to the Court for an award of attorneys' fees in an amount up to one-third of the aggregate Settlement Fund. See Joint Decl. Ex. A (Straub Declaration) at ¶ 10; Straub Ex. A (Notice) at 10. The deadline for objections is August 27, 2020, but to date, no objections have been received. ¶ 104.[20]

B. Settlement Class Counsel's Costs and Expenses Are Reasonable and Were Necessary to the Result

"[C]ourts in the Second Circuit normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course." LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *1 (citation omitted). It is not uncommon that in complex antitrust cases such as this one, "substantial expenses [are] necessary," including costs related to initial investigations and research, testifying and consultant experts, discovery expenses, travel, postage and mailing, and copying costs. Meredith Corp., 87 F. Supp. 3d at 671; see also Guevoura Fund Ltd. v. Sillerman, No. 15 Civ. 07192, 2019 WL 6889901, at *22 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 18, 2019). Such costs are "compensable if they are of the type normally billed by attorneys to paying clients." Guevoura Fund, 2019 WL 6889901, at *22.

Here, Settlement Class Counsel incurred litigation expenses relating to this Action totaling $5,613,578.86 for out-of-pocket expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this case. ¶ 131. These expenses have been itemized by category for the Court's convenience. ¶¶ 131-32; Exs. B-O. Approximately 73.52% of the requested expenses are associated with payments to experts. See ¶ 132; Exs. B-O.[21] Further, the requested expenses total approximately 3% of the total Settlement Funds, which is consistent with the ratio previously approved by this Court in connection with partial OTC LIBOR Settlements. See LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *1 (noting "given the complexities of this case and the necessity for extensive expert involvement" that "we are persuaded that 5.94% is not so high as to be unreasonable.").

C. Service Awards for the Named Plaintiffs Are Appropriate

Exchange-Based Plaintiffs seek service awards of $25,000 (for a total aggregate award of $150,000) for named plaintiffs Metzler Asset Management GmbH (f/k/a Metzler Investment GmbH), FTC Capital GmbH (advisor to Plaintiffs FTC Futures Fund SICAV and FTC Futures Fund PCC Ltd.), Atlantic Trading USA, LLC, 303030 Trading LLC, Gary Francis, and Nathanial Haynes, as stated in the Notice.

[21] Additional categories of expenses include computerized legal research, the creation and maintenance of an electronic document database, travel and lodging expenses, copying, court reports, deposition transactions, and mediation. Id. These are all the type of out-of-pocket expenses that are routinely reimbursed from common funds. Yang v. Focus Media Holding Ltd., No. 11 Civ. 9051, 2014 WL 4401280, at *19 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 4, 2014) (finding computer research, photocopying, postage, meals, and court filing fees "necessary for Lead counsel to successfully prosecute this case").

This Court and others in this District have approved similar service awards in similar circumstances. See, e.g., LIBOR, 2018 WL 3863445, at *2 (awarding $25,000 to each of the five named OTC plaintiffs); Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich Ltd., No. 09 Civ. 118, 2012 WL 1981505, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2012) (awarding $25,000 to class representative and holding that "[c]ourts consistently approve awards in class action lawsuits to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provide and burdens they endure during litigation."). The requested service awards represent only a small fraction (approximately 0.08%) of the total Settlement Funds. See, e.g., Dial Corp. v. News Corp., 317 F.R.D. 426, 438-39 (awarding 0.12% of a settlement fund to six class representatives).

The Exchange-Based Plaintiffs provided invaluable services to the Settlement Classes over the course of the litigation. ¶¶ 133-34. These services helped to achieve recovery of $187 million for the benefit of the Settlement Classes. Among other things, the Exchange-Based Plaintiffs provided factual information to assist in the development of Exchange-Based Plaintiffs' claims, collected discovery, prepared and sat for lengthy depositions by the defendants, and conferred with Settlement Class Counsel throughout the case. Id.

Courts routinely approve incentive awards to class representatives who provide these types of services. See, e.g., Sewell, 2012 WL 1320124, at *15 (approving incentive awards where the named plaintiffs "served class members by providing counsel with relevant documents in their possession, assisting counsel to prepare for the mediation, participating in litigation strategy, and reviewing and commenting on the terms of the settlement.") (internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs' duties in this Action required them to dedicate considerable time and take key personnel away from their normal duties.

Accordingly, Settlement Class Counsel respectfully submit that the Court should grant service awards of $25,000 to each of the individual Exchange-Based Plaintiffs.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above and in the Joint Declaration, Settlement Class Counsel respectfully request that this Court enter an Order reimbursing expenses in the amount of $5,613,578.86, awarding Class attorneys' fees in the amount of 30% of the remainder of $187,000,000 minus the amount of litigation expenses reimbursed (see n. 3, supra), and approving service awards of $25,000 for each named plaintiff for their efforts on behalf of the Settlement Classes.

TAB 22A

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

In re LIDODERM ANTITRUST LITIGATION	Case No. 14-md-02521-WHO
THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: DIRECT PURCHASER ACTIONS	ORDER GRANTING FINAL APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENT WITH DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS AND ENTERING FINAL JUDGMENT OF DISMISSAL WITH PREJUDICE

This matter has come before the Court to determine whether there is any cause why this Court should not approve the three separate settlements between Plaintiffs American Sales Company, LLC, Droguería Betances, Inc., and Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. (collectively, the "Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs") and each of defendants (1) Endo Pharmaceuticals Inc. ("Endo"); (2) Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc. and Teikoku Seiyaku Co., Ltd. (together, "Teikoku"); and (3) Actavis, Inc. (f/k/a Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc.), Watson Laboratories, Inc., and Actavis plc (collectively, "Watson," and together with Endo and Teikoku, "Defendants"), pursuant to Rules 23(e) and 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and in accordance with the terms of the respective Settlement Agreements. The Court, after carefully considering all papers filed and proceedings held herein, and good cause appearing, has determined: (a) the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate and should be finally approved; (b) the proposed plan of allocation of the Settlement Fund should be approved; (c) the proposed awards of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of the expenses to Class Counsel should be approved pursuant to Rule 23(h); (d) the proposed incentive awards should be awarded to each of the three Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs; and (e) a final judgment terminating this litigation should be entered, subject to this Court's continuing jurisdiction to enforce the settlement and this Order and Final Judgment. Good cause appearing therefor, it is:

ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED that:

1. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this Direct Purchaser Class Action (the "Action") and each of the Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs, individually and on behalf of the certified direct purchaser plaintiff class in this Action, and all Defendants.

2. This Order and Final Judgment incorporates by reference the definitions in the Settlement Agreements and all terms used herein shall have the same meanings set forth in the Settlement Agreements.

3. In light of this Court's previous order dated Feb 21, 2017 [ECF No. 670] certifying the direct purchaser class pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) and (b)(3), the exclusion notices received during the opt-out period established by that order, the now proposed Settlements in this Action, and this Court's Preliminary Approval Order [ECF No. 1018], the Direct Purchaser Class (the "Class") is defined as follows:

> All persons or entities in the United States, including its territories, possessions, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, who purchased brand or generic Lidoderm directly from any of the Defendants at any time during the period August 23, 2012 through May 1, 2014 (the "Class"). Excluded from the Class are Endo Pharmaceuticals Inc., Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc. and Teikoku Seiyaku Co., Ltd., Actavis, Inc., Actavis plc, Watson Laboratories, Inc., and their officers, directors, management, employees, subsidiaries, or affiliates, and all federal governmental entities.
> Also excluded from the Class are the following Retailer Plaintiffs that pursued claims separately from the Class: Walgreen Co., The Kroger Co., Safeway Inc., HEB Grocery Company LP, Albertson's LLC, Rite Aid Corporation, Rite Aid Hdqtrs. Corp., and CVS Pharmacy, Inc.

4. The Court finds that due notice was given in accordance with the Preliminary Approval Order [ECF No. 1018], and that the form and content of that Notice, and the procedures for dissemination thereof as set forth in the Preliminary Approval order, satisfy the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e) and due process and constitute the best notice practicable under the circumstances.

5. Adequate notice of the proceedings having been given to the Class, and a full opportunity having been offered to the Class to participate in the fairness hearing, it is hereby determined that all Class Members are bound by this Order and Final Judgment.

6. The settlement of this Action was not the product of collusion between Plaintiffs and Defendants or their counsel, but rather was the result of bona fide and arm's-length negotiations conducted in good faith between Class Counsel and Counsel for each of the Defendants under Court supervision.

7. The Court has held a hearing to consider the fairness, reasonableness and adequacy of the proposed settlement, and has been advised that there have been no objections to the settlement, or to the motion for reimbursement of costs, attorneys' fees, and incentive awards to the class representatives [ECF Nos. 1023 & 1024] from any members of the Class.

8. Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court hereby finally approves in all respects the Settlements as set forth in (a) the settlement agreement between Direct Purchaser Class and Teikoku dated December 31, 2017 ("Teikoku Agreement") [ECF No. 1004-2]; (b) the settlement agreement between Direct Purchaser Class and Watson dated March 19, 2018 ("Watson Agreement") [ECF No. 1004-3]; and (c) the settlement agreement between Direct Purchaser Class and Endo dated March 19, 2018 ("Endo Agreement") [ECF No. 1004-4] and finds that each of the three Settlements is in all respects, fair, reasonable, adequate, and in the best interests of the Direct Purchaser Class. The Court further approves the establishment of the Settlement Fund upon the terms and conditions set forth in the Settlement Agreements. The parties are hereby directed to carry out the Settlements in accordance with the terms and provisions of the three Settlement Agreements.

9. The Court approves the Plan of Allocation of Settlement Proceeds as proposed by Class Counsel as fair and reasonable. The claims administrator RG/2 Claims Administration LLC ("Claims Administrator"), is directed to administer the Settlement, with the assistance of Econ One Research, Inc. ("Econ One"), in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Settlement Agreements. All expenses incurred by the Class Administrator or Econ One must be reasonable, are subject to Court approval, and shall be payable solely from the Settlement Fund. The Claims Administrator will distribute the Settlement Funds to the Class on a pro rata basis in the manner described in the Plan of Allocation.

10. All claims in the above-captioned action against the Defendants are hereby dismissed with prejudice, and without costs, with the Court retaining jurisdiction for the limited purpose of enforcing compliance with the terms and conditions of the Settlement Agreements and this Order and Final Judgment. All Released Claims of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs and Class in the above-captioned Action are released and dismissed with prejudice, and, except as provided for in the Settlement Agreements, without costs.

11. All Class Members shall be forever enjoined and barred from asserting any of the matters, claims or causes of action released by the Settlement Agreements, and all Class Members shall be deemed to have forever released any and all such matters, claims and causes of action as provided in the Settlement Agreements.

12. Class Counsel are awarded Attorneys' Fees in the amount of $45,000,070.46 (i.e., 27.5% of $163,636,619.85, which represents the $166 million settlement less litigation expenses of $2,363,380.15), plus 27.5% of the accrued interest on the Settlement Fund. Additionally, Class Counsel shall be reimbursed for reasonable litigation expenses of $2,363,380.15 incurred in the representation of the Class, for a total Attorneys' Fees and Expenses award of $47,363,450.61 plus 27.5% of the accrued interest on the Settlement Fund. The Court finds that the amount of Attorneys' Fees and Expenses awarded is fair and reasonable. The award of Attorneys' Fees and Expenses shall be allocated among Class Counsel by Co-Lead Counsel. The Attorneys' Fees and Expenses awarded shall be paid out of the Settlement Fund.

13. Neither this Order and Final Judgment, the Settlement Agreements, nor any of their respective terms or the negotiations or papers related thereto shall constitute evidence or an admission by any party that any acts of wrongdoing have been committed, and they shall not be deemed to create any inference that there is any liability therefor. Neither this Order and Final Judgment, the Settlement Agreements, nor any of the terms or negotiations or papers related thereto, shall be offered or received in evidence or used for any purpose whatsoever, in this or any other matter or proceeding in any court, administrative agency, arbitration or other tribunal, other than as expressly set forth in the Settlement Agreements.

14. Without affecting the finality of the judgment, the Court retains exclusive jurisdiction over the Settlement Agreement, including the administration and consummation of the Settlement Agreement, Plan of Allocation, and in order to determine any issues relating to the attorneys' fees and expenses and any distribution to members of the Class. In addition, without affecting the finality of this judgment, Defendants and each member of the Class hereby irrevocably submit to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, for any suit, action, proceeding or dispute arising out of or relating to the Settlement Agreements or the applicability of the Settlement Agreements, including, without limitation any suit, action, proceeding or dispute relating to the release provisions therein.

15. The Class Representatives, American Sales Company, LLC, Droguería Betances, Inc., and Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. are each hereby awarded $100,000, to be paid out of the Settlement Fund, for representing the Direct Purchaser Class, which amount is in addition to whatever monies these plaintiffs will receive from the Settlement Fund pursuant to the Plan of Allocation. This Court finds these awards to be fair and reasonable in light of the efforts of each.

16. In the event the Settlement does not become final, this Order and Final Judgment shall be rendered null and void as provided by the Settlement Agreements, shall be vacated, and all orders entered and releases delivered in connection herewith shall be null and void to the extent provided by and in accordance with the Settlement Agreements.

17. The Court hereby directs that this judgment be entered by the clerk forthwith pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b).

IT IS SO ORDERED.

NOTICE OF MOTION

TO ALL PARTIES AND THEIR COUNSEL OF RECORD:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that at 2:00 pm on September 12, 2018, Counsel for the Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs (hereinafter "DPPs") will and hereby do move before the Honorable William H. Orrick, United States District Judge, at the Phillip Burton Federal Building & United States Courthouse, 450 Golden Gate Avenue, Courtroom 2, 17th Floor, San Francisco, California, pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(h) and 54(d) for the following:

An award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $45,000,070.46 (27.5% of the total $166 million settlement after the deduction of litigation expenses of 2,363,380.15);

Reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $ 2,363,380.15; and Service awards of $100,000 for each the three class representatives.

This Motion is made on the grounds that: the requested attorneys' fees are fair and reasonable in light of counsel for DPPs' efforts in litigating this case and creating a settlement fund for the benefit of all class members; the expenses for which reimbursement is sought were reasonably and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this action; and the requested service awards are warranted in light of the class representatives' efforts in bringing this litigation and their extensive time and involvement therein.

This Motion is based upon the accompanying Memorandum of Points and Authorities, the Declaration of Co-Lead Counsel Peter Kohn filed herewith ("Kohn Decl."), the individual declarations of DPPs filed herewith, the proposed Order submitted herewith, all pleadings and/or other papers filed in this action, and upon such argument as may be presented to the Court at the hearing on this Motion.

This Motion will be available today on the website established for this case, for review by class members: http://www.lidodermantitrustdppsettlement.com.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

I. INTRODUCTION

Following an investigation that began in 2011, counsel representing class representatives Droguería Betances, Inc. ("Betances"), Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. ("RDC") and American

Sales Company, LLC ("ASC") and a proposed class of direct purchasers (collectively, "DPPs") filed this antitrust litigation in late 2013. For more than four years, DPPs aggressively litigated a highly-complex, high-stakes and hotly-contested case against three sophisticated pharmaceutical companies represented by some of the most prominent defense firms in the country. In the Fall of 2017, the parties were in the midst of intensive preparation for a trial to commence on February 23, 2018. Contemporaneouly with preparing for trial, during three separate settlement conferences conducted under the supervision of Chief Magistrate Judge Joseph C. Spero, DPPs settled their claims against all three defendants. Pursuant to Judge Spero's "mediator's proposals," DPPs, in exchange for dismissal of the litigation with prejudice and certain releases, reached cash settlements of $35 million with Teikoku, $71 million with Watson, and $60 million with Endo ($40 million immediately with the balance of $20 million to be paid in the first quarter of 2019), for a total of $166 million. DPPs believe that the settlements represent an excellent result for DPPs. Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 1, 102.

Undersigned counsel prosecuted DPPs' claims on a wholly contingent basis, without any guarantee of success or compensation for time spent, or for reimbursement of expenses. Kohn Decl. ¶ 104. At the outset, DPPs knew that they would incur millions of dollars in out-of-pocket expenses, face obstacles at every stage of the litigation, and potentially would have to obtain (and defend on appeal) a jury verdict in DPPs' favor. From DPPs's investigation through February of 2018, counsel for DPPs expended 69,838.2 hours of uncompensated professional time. As compensation for their efforts, DPPs seek an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of 45,000,070.50, i.e., 27.5% of the total settlement after deduction of unreimbursed litigation costs. As described more fully below and in the Kohn Declaration, the requested fee award is commensurate with the results achieved, the efforts of DPPs, the risk undertaken, and fees that have been awarded in this District and in other, similar cases that counsel for DPPs have participated in.

DPPs also seek $2,363,380.15 in unreimbursed out-of-pocket expenses, and service awards of $100,000 for each of the three Class representatives in recognition of their vital participation in this litigation.

II. HISTORY OF THE LITIGATION

DPPs are direct purchasers of Endo/Teikoku's brand-name prescription pharmaceutical product, Lidoderm. The facts alleged by DPPs are the subject of numerous opinions. E.g., United Food and Com. Workers Loc. 1776 & Participating Employers Health and Welfare Fund v. Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc., 74 F. Supp. 3d 1052, 1064 (N.D. Cal. 2014); In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., 2017 WL 679367, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 21, 2017). In brief, DPPs alleged that Endo/Teikoku and Watson engaged in anticompetitive behavior in violation of the antitrust laws in connection with the settlement of patent litigation, causing DPPs to pay artificially inflated prices for Lidoderm and generic Lidoderm. Kohn Decl. ¶ 9. Defendants denied wrongdoing and asserted numerous defenses. A detailed history of this litigation is fully set forth in the Part I of the Kohn Declaration, ¶¶ 5-103 .

III. DPP COUNSEL'S LITIGATION EFFORTS

Counsel for DPPs are from some of the leading antitrust law firms in the country working for plaintiffs. DPPs have almost two decades of extensive experience prosecuting and trying Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases on behalf of the same core class of direct purchasers, and have been involved in most of the critical decisions in this evolving area of antitrust law, including the Supreme Court's landmark Actavis decision and subsequent decisions interpreting Actavis. Litigating any Hatch-Waxman antitrust case requires expertise in many discrete and highly technical areas, including, among other things, patent law, antitrust law, economics, pharmaceutical regulation, drug manufacturing, and the particular therapeutic class of the relevant drug. This is expertise that DPP counsel possessed. Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 32, 40, 49, 51, 56. Aside from the typical issues in Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases, this case involved two different patent litigations, up to seven patents (several of which ultimately were rendered essentially irrelevant based upon DPP counsel's efforts), a citizen petition, highly specific causation defenses associated with the unique pharmaceutical formulation and manufacturing process at issue, and an attack on all plaintiff counsel's continued prosecution of the case. Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 6, 19, 27, 45, 48, 56. DPPs took advantage of each firm's expertise to litigate this case in the most effective and efficient manner possible, without duplication of effort. A detailed description of counsel for DPPs' efforts is fully set forth in the Kohn Declaration.

IV. ARGUMENT

A. The Percentage-of-the-Fund Method For Calculating Fees is Appropriate

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(h) and 54(d) permit courts overseeing class actions to award reasonable attorneys' fees and costs. The Supreme Court has long recognized that a lawyer who recovers a "common fund" on behalf of a class is entitled to reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses from the fund. See Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 967 (9th Cir. 2003) (same). The rationale for the "common fund" doctrine is that "those who benefit from the creation of the fund should share the wealth with the lawyers whose skill and effort helped create it." In re Wash. Pub. Power Supply Sys. Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1300 (9th Cir. 1994).

In the Ninth Circuit, there are two methods that courts may use in order to award attorneys' fees: (1) the "percentage-of-fund" method, which bases the fee on a percentage of the total amount of a common settlement fund; or (2) the "lodestar" method, which multiplies the amount of attorney hours reasonably expended by reasonably hourly rates. Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1047 (9th Cir. 2002); In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 949 (9th Cir. 2015). "[C]ourts have discretion to choose which calculation method they use," but "their discretion must be exercised so as to achieve a reasonable result." Jones v. GN Netcom, Inc. (In re Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig.), 654 F.3d 935, 942 (9th Cir. 2011). "The lodestar method is preferred when calculating statutory attorney fees, whereas the percentage-of-recovery approach is preferred when fees will be drawn from a common fund." Jones v. San Diego Metro. Transit Sys., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198284, *10 (S.D. Cal. Nov. 30, 2017) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).[1] The Ninth Circuit instructs that when the percentage-of-the-fund method is used for calculation of fees, a lodestar cross-check can "confirm that a percentage of [the] recovery amount does not award counsel an exorbitant hourly rate." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

When the percentage-of-recovery approach is used to determine an appropriate fee award, courts take into account all of the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Beaver v. Tarsadia Hotels, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160214, at *31 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2017). When the requested percentage departs from the Ninth Circuit's 25% "benchmark," courts consider the following factors: "(1) the results achieved; (2) the risk undertaken by class counsel in pursuing the case; (3) whether the settlement generated benefits beyond a cash payment; (4) the market rate for similar representations; and (5) the nature of the representation, including whether it was executed on a contingency basis." Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted). See also Goodwin v. Winn Mgmt. Grp. LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29684, at *19 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 22, 2018) ("Reasons to vary the benchmark award may be found when counsel achieves exceptional results for the class, undertakes 'extremely risky' litigation, generates benefits for the class beyond simply the cash settlement fund, or handles the case on a contingency basis").

Here, DPPs's efforts have created a common fund of $166 million in cash for the benefit of the direct purchaser class. As detailed herein, using a "percentage-of-the-fund" method with a lodestar cross-check, counsel for DPPs' requested fee award of 27.5% is a justified departure from the benchmark, after consideration of all of the relevant factors.

B. DPPs Achieved an Exceptional Result for the Class

"The 'most critical factor" in determining appropriate attorneys' fee awards 'is the degree of success obtained.'" Thomas v. Magnachip Semiconductor Corp., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82801, at *11 (N.D. Cal. May 15, 2018) (quoting Ensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436 (1983)); Moyle v. Liberty Mut. Ret. Ben. Plan, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34730, *27-28 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 2, 2018) ("The overall result and benefit to the class from the litigation is the most critical factor in granting a fee award") (internal quotation omitted).

Here, the amount of the proposed settlements — $166 million — is unquestionably substantial and will provide a significant guaranteed cash recovery to each member of the class.[2] This amount represents between 55% and 79% of DPPs' total aggregate damages.[3] This is the third highest drug or device antitrust class action in terms of percentage recovery of total damages, therefore. Kohn Decl. ¶ 1. As one court in this District has observed, "[f]ar lesser results (with 20% of recovery of damages or less) have justified upward departures from the 25% benchmark." In re NCAA Ath. Grant-in-Aid Cap Antitrust Litig., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201108, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 6, 2017). See also Boyd v. Bank of Am. Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162880, at *24 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 2014) (deeming recovery of 36% of damages "impressive"). Moreover, if the proposed settlements are finally approved, each class member's share will be calculated on a pro rata basis based on that class member's actual purchases, and all that class members need do in order to receive their recovery is fill out a simple claim form that will be directly mailed to them by the claims administrator. See generally In re Capacitors Antitrust Litig., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99616, at *28 (N.D. Cal. June 27, 2017) ("There is a real value to Class members of receiving a cash distribution from the Settlements in the near term"). This excellent recovery, which ensures that all class members are treated fairly and equally in that they are compensated directly in proportion to their actual purchases, and will receive their shares of the settlement fund promptly.

The exceptional result in this case is illustrated not just by the recovery or its rank among other cases, but also by the accomplishments of the DPPs throughout the litigation process, from initial investigation through trial preparation. Counsel for the DPPs were the first to discover, investigate, and file this case, relative to the government. Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 5-10. Counsel for the DPPs successfully defeated defendants' motion to dismiss, overcoming defendants' proposal to depart from the shifting burdens of production and persuasion supplied by the structured rule of reason analysis, and obtaining a favorable interpretation of Actavis. Id. ¶¶ 12-15. Counsel for the DPPs also obtained an order requiring defendants to elect to waive the attorney-client privilege or be precluded from making multiple assertions at trial, one of the few successful such motions in any antitrust (or other) case. Id. ¶¶ 27-28. Counsel for DPPs obtained an order requiring Endo's general counsel to disclose her handwritten attorney notes of settlement discussions with Watson's counsel. Id. ¶ 24 (entry 21). Counsel for the DPPs also obtained partial affirmative summary judgment on the issue of the relevant antitrust product market, another rarity. Id. ¶¶ 60-61. And, together with other counsel, DPP counsel obtained a favorable standard for the jury to find that a patent would not have prevented generic competition in a reverse-payment settlement case. Id. ¶¶ 63-66. Plaintiffs resisted three (3) separate trips to the Ninth Circuit on mandamus and Rule 23(f) proceedings.

[2] The results obtained by DPPs stand in stark contrast to those obtained by the Federal Trade Commission, whose investigation started nearly contemporaneously with DPPs' filings, but which has to date obtained only consent judgments with Endo and Teikoku merely to enjoin each from entering into similar agreements in the future, and no monetary recovery.

[3] If the jury found that Watson would have entered the market with generic Lidoderm in mid-December 2012, DPPs' damages were $300 million. If the jury found that Watson would have entered the market with generic Lidoderm in late March 2013, DPPs' damages were $211 million. Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 1 & n.1, 102.

The exceptional result in this case can also be seen through the Court's periodic observations. The Court has repeatedly recognized the complexity of the issues in this case, the quality of the lawyering, the cooperation among counsel, and the work that counsel put into the case. This consistent recognition of the lawyering on both sides of the aisle underscores that the result that DPPs obtained was extraordinary. Defendants' counsel aggressively defended their clients' interests every step of the way. This necessarily required intense responsive efforts by plaintiffs' counsel to prepare their affirmative case and to fend off the intense defenses and other arguments that defense counsel pursued.

Specifically, in October of 2015, the Court observed, "I have been impressed by the way that you all have been working[.] This may be … completely opaque to my eyes, … but it seems to me that you're working very effectively and collaboratively over difficult issues in a way that is … at the higher level of professionalism and … I want to applaud you for that and encourage you to keep up that hard and good work. I know there is a ton that you are going through, and there are going to be places that will be hard, but … I appreciate the efforts that you're all making." ECF 290 at 10 (Oct. 6, 2015 Status Conference). The Court later acknowledged that discovery was extremely contentious, noting that "when you are not present and I am discussing this case, I usually complement the manner in which you are working through and pursuing the discovery on what is often very contentious work, I know. So I appreciate it, and keep up the good work." ECF 374 at 25 (of Jan. 12, 2016 Status Conference). In February 2016, the Court noted: "Well, you continue to do an enormous amount of work on this matter. And I appreciate the quality of what gets presented to me. So, thank you for that, and I'll look forward to the timeliness, as well." ECF 385, at 22 (Feb. 2, 2016 Status Conference).

In dealing with several discovery disputes, the Court noted, "as always, I am impressed by the amount of work that you're doing, even though I was also impressed by the number of discovery disputes that you gave me for this status conference." ECF 416, at 45 (March 1, 2016 Status Conference). In April, 2016, the Court noted: "I appreciate the work that you're doing. And these issues are not simple to me, and I suspect they're not simple to you. So thank you for your good work in trying to work through the issues as much as you can before you bring them to me." ECF 440, at 44-45 (Apr. 5, 2016 Status Conference).

At the class certification hearing, the Court noted: "As has always been the case throughout this case, the arguments were excellent and I appreciate them[.]" ECF 644, at 118 (Nov. 29, 2016 argument). At summary judgment, the Court noted: "I am constantly impressed by the quality of the lawyering in this case and by the arguments of counsel." ECF 882, at 98 (Sept. 15, 2017 argument).

These recognized efforts of all counsel is yet another illustration of the exceptional results obtained in the face of highly competent and able defense counsel, and strongly supports the requested fee.

C. This Case was Extremely Risky and Complex

As numerous courts have recognized, antitrust cases typically present very significant risk. See, e.g., Edwards v. Nat'l Milk Producers Fed'n, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 145217, *26 (N.D. Cal. June 26, 2017) ("[a]n antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute. . . . The legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome.") (citing In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 WL 1221350, at *10 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004)). "The history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which antitrust plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages, or negligible damages, at trial or on appeal." Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74849, *43 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 10, 2007). "Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable." In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 475 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). "The 'best' case can be lost and the 'worst' case can be won, and juries may find liability but no damages. None of these risks should be underestimated." In re Superior Beverage/Glass Container Consol. Pretrial, 133 F.R.D. 119, 127 (N.D. Ill. 1990). See also In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 951 F. Supp. 2d 739, 743 (E.D. Pa. 2013) ("Antitrust class actions are particularly complex to litigate and therefore quite expensive."); In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138479, at *148-49 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015) (price-fixing conspiracy required "complex expert analysis and review of mountains of documents").

This case exemplifies these observations about risk. The issues in this case were complex, and defendants asserted vigorous defenses to each and every aspect of DPPs' claims. At the time the litigation was filed in November 2013, the Supreme Court had just issued the Actavis decision, and district and appellate courts were tasked with its interpretation and implementation. In filing their motion to dismiss DPPs' complaint, defendants contended that the challenged settlement could not even be said to contain "reverse payments" under Actavis because Endo/Teikoku's provision of product and "no-AG" agreement were pro-competitive vehicles by which Watson could achieve early entry, rather than "payments for delay." At that point in time, two district courts had dismissed complaints alleging "no-AG" promises on the basis that a "no-AG" provision was not a cognizable reverse payment. Moreover, proving causation (i.e., that Watson could and would have entered the market earlier with a less-expensive version of generic Lidoderm) also presented significant obstacles for DPPs because Watson contended that it could not and would have launched earlier than it had agreed to, in view of serious equipment, supply and FDA approval problems.

Another particularly complex aspect of the case concerned the underlying patent litigations. As the Court is well aware, a key patent at issue in this litigation was the '529 patent, which was the subject of a bench trial before Judge Sleet in the District of Delaware. The Court is also aware that the reverse payment agreement covered not just the '529 patent, but an additional 5 patents, referred to as the "Rolf" patents, which had previously been asserted by their former owner, LecTec, against Endo. The Rolf patents added a layer of complexity and effort to this case that likely is much less apparent than the effort related to '529 patent, because defendants ultimately placed little reliance upon the Rolf patents in expert discovery, on summary judgment, and in the joint pretrial conference statement. However, for the bulk of this litigation, Endo and Watson contended that those patents in fact blocked earlier entry by Watson, erecting a causation barrier that DPPs had to overcome to prevail. As a result, DPPs' counsel expended significant effort analyzing and taking discovery on all five (5) of the Rolf patents. This involved satellite litigation to obtain materials from an unrelated patent case, which involved numerous third parties, and ultimately motions practice in the Eastern District of Texas. See LecTec Corp., v. Chattem, Inc., E.D. Tex. No. 5:08-cv-00130 (Robert W. Schroeder, U.S.D.J.). Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 18-19. While these difficult and often contentiously litigated issues were described to the Court in status reports (see ECF 272; ECF 306 at 4-5; ECF 352 at 4; ECF 365 at 5), DPP counsel were largely able to avoid burdening this Court with any disputes concerning the Rolf patents. And, ultimately, after DPPs engaged in significant discovery and analysis of the Rolf patents and submitted extensive expert analysis of these patents through Professor Adelman and Dr. Shah, defendants' experts barely mentioned them in their reports and did not even raise them in their summary judgment motion. Thus, while DPP counsel expended significant time on the five (5) Rolf patents throughout the course of this litigation, that effort, while appearing to have borne significant fruit in marginalizing those patents in this litigation, may not be readily apparent to the Court.

Defendants also vigorously challenged DPPs claims based on the pendency of a citizen petition Endo filed with the FDA in 2006. Defendants argued that, without the challenged reverse payments, settlement would not have been reached and a generic launch would have been indefinitely delayed due to the pending petition. In their motion to dismiss, defendants referenced the citizen petition no fewer than 25 times, and retained an expert to provide testimony at trial concerning its strength.

Finally, this case involved protracted disputes concerning monopoly power and relevant market. And of course, absent the settlement, DPPs would have had to obtain a jury verdict in DPPs' favor (and defend that verdict on an inevitable appeal to the Ninth Circuit), which also involved significant risk. Counsel for DPPs have sometimes lost cases analogous to this one, recovering nothing.

Accordingly, this factor strongly supports the requested fee.

D. DPPs's Performance Generated Benefits Beyond the Settlement Fund

This factor examines whether counsel's performance generated some non-monetary or public policy benefit beyond the creation of the settlement fund, such as by clarifying a point of law or obtaining a ruling on a significant issue. See, e.g., Beaver, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160214 at *36-37 (class counsel clarified a statute of limitations issue and obtained a Ninth Circuit decision on other significant issues); Vizcaino, 290 F. 3d at 1049 (litigation caused defendant to change its employee benefit practices).

Here, counsel for DPPs unarguably evoked decisions by this Court that advanced the law in several respects. The Court's motion to dismiss opinion (ECF 117, reported at 74 F. Supp.3d 1052) was one of the first post-Actavis decisions to set forth the pleading standards for an antitrust case alleging a reverse payment, including by clarifying the allocation of the burdens of pleading, production and persuasion on the issue of procompetitive justifications. In the face of contrary decisions that it deemed "not persuasive," the Court ruled that a no-AG promise was a cognizable reverse payment. It ruled that the free-goods promise was a cognizable reverse payment, even though "Plaintiffs have not cited, and I have not found any case where brand product is used as payment for the delay in a post-Actavis case." ECF 117 at 16. The opinion was not just groundbreaking, but it was influential: Westlaw says the Court's motion to dismiss opinion has been cited by appellate and district courts 57 times thus far, and has been cited another 65 times in secondary sources (including several times in ¶ 2046 of Areeda & Hovenkamp).

Further, the Court's several at-issue waiver opinions (ECF 350, 536, 795) show that this case is one of the very few times any antitrust court has required defendants to elect to produce or be precluded. The Court's main opinion (ECF 536) clarified and advanced the law substantially, by exploring the largely untrodden territory between the relatively "easy" case of a privilege holder's explicitly asserting the substance of legal advice as a defense, and the far more complicated case of a privilege holder's making assertions that, while not containing the legal advice itself, are either necessarily or in fact the product of that legal advice. In the course of its decision, the Court set forth limiting factors on the invasion of the privilege that will guide future courts faced with similar defense assertions.

Finally, the Court's summary judgment opinion (ECF 900, 978) made law in two respects: first, it is one of the few applying the summary judgment standard in a post-Actavis case, and blazed a trial as one of the first to decide how a jury should be instructed on the quantum of proof required to show relevant patents would not have prevented generic launch (the "some evidence" standard); second, it is one of few courts in the history of antitrust to rule in favor of plaintiff as a matter of law on the composition of the relevant antitrust product market.

Counsel for the DPPs were either principally (Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 14-15, 28, 60-61) or substantially (id. ¶¶ 63-64) responsible for the briefing that evoked these developments in the law. Accordingly, this factor strongly supports the requested fee.

E. The Requested Fee is Consistent With Awards in Similar Representations

This factor examines whether DPPs's requested fee is in line with awards for similar representations. Moyle, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS at *26-27. The most comparable representations are other, similar delayed entry cases that DPPs have litigated, in which DPPs have routinely been awarded fees of one-third, as demonstrated by the following chart:

Case	Fee Award
In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 01-1652 (D.N.J. Oct. 5, 2017)	33⅓% of $60 million settlement
In re Provigil Antitrust Litig., No. 06-1797 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 15, 2015)	27.5% of $512 million settlement (partial settlement)[4]

[4] Though 33$^1/_3$% is a typical award granted in direct purchaser pharmaceutical antitrust cases, there are outliers. In the Provigil case, for example, the court granted a fee award of 27.5% in 2015. That settlement involved a $512 million cash payment — the highest cash payment ever awarded in a pharmaceutical antitrust case — and generated a $140.8 million fee that represented a multiplier of 4.12 on the total lodestar. See King Drug Co. of Florence v. Cephalon, Inc., No. 06-cv-0197 (E.D. Pa. 2015), ECF No. 870. The court in Aggrenox (2017) similarly departed from the norm, granting a 20% fee award. But Aggrenox, settled for $146 million very early in the litigation, before any class certification or summary judgment briefing had been submitted and after only a few preliminary depositions had been taken. See generally In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., No. 14-md-2516 (D.

LEXIS 160214, at *31-32 (observing that "[t]he Ninth Circuit has [] upheld awards of one-third of a common fund"). And notably, an award of 27.5% here would not trigger any concerns of "windfall profits," because unlike some cases "in which mere disclosure of a government investigation all but guarantees the creation of a megafund, notwithstanding what counsel does or does not do," In re NCAA, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201108, at *14-15, here the opposite is true: the DPPs were years ahead of the FTC and state Attorneys General, and it is they who wanted to join our litigation. Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 5-8, 22 n.4. The settlements here were achieved directly because of DPPs's efforts in investigating, filing and litigating this case all the way to trial, as discussed herein.

Accordingly, this factor strongly supports the requested fee.

F. DPPs Expended Significant Time and Effort in Litigating This Case

DPPs expended almost 70,000 hours in investigating and prosecuting this case over the course of eight (8) years, starting from the initial investigation that began in 2011 up through February of 2018. As detailed fully in the Kohn Declaration, counsel for DPPs, inter alia: (a) successfully defeated Defendants' motion to dismiss (Kohn Decl. ¶ 15); (b) reviewed and analyzed more than 3.6 million pages of documents produced by Defendants and third-parties (id. ¶ 31); (c) served as lead questioner at 40 depositions of defendants' fact and expert witnesses (id. ¶¶ 38, 50); (e) consulted with and retained seven (7) expert witnesses, and defended those experts at deposition (id. ¶¶ 44, 50); (f) engaged in substantial motion practice on various issues (id. ¶¶ 24-30); (g) obtained certification of a direct purchaser class (id. ¶¶ 55-57); (h) obtained partial summary judgment on two issues (concerted action and market power) and defeated defendants' motions for summary judgment (id. ¶¶ 59-66); (i) engaged in intensive trial preparation (id. ¶¶ 71-75); and (j) prepared for and participated in multiple mediation sessions, during which DPPs engaged in hard-fought settlement negotiations and ultimately agreed to the three proposed settlements with defendants (id. ¶¶ 95-103). Consequently, DPPs expended a significant amount of time and effort over an eight (8) year period in litigating this case. See In re NCAA, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201108, at *18 (where counsel expended over $11 million in professional time and over $3 million in expenses, such represented a significant "commitment of time, personnel and money to the classes"); In re BioScrip, Inc. Sec. Litig., 273 F. Supp. 3d 474, 498 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) (litigation was "a hard-fought, complicated case, requiring extensive work on the part of Lead Counsel"); Velez v. Novartis Pharms. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125945, at *54 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 2010) ("Class Counsel devoted 36,996.77 hours from 68 attorneys and staff members to the successful prosecution of this matter").

Moreover, DPPs will be expending a significant number of hours in connection with securing approval of and administering the settlements without any compensation. See In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24951, *305 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2016) (acknowledging that "Lead Counsel and a handful of other firms have and will invest many hundreds of uncompensated hours . . . in obtaining approval of the settlement, administering the distribution of funds, dealing with objectors, and other post-settlement tasks"); Garcia v. Pancho Villa's of Huntington Vill., Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144446, at *22-23 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 4, 2012) (acknowledging that class counsel would perform more work on behalf of the class after final approval, including "assisting with the administration of the settlement, and answering Class Member questions, which further supports their fee request"); Aros v. United Rentals, Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist.

LEXIS 104429, at *17 (D. Conn. July 26, 2012) (acknowledging that class counsel would continue to perform work on behalf of the class during the settlement approval process and the disbursement phase).

Finally, DPPs have spent over $2.3 million of their own money in necessary out-of-pocket litigation costs, without any resort to third-party funding. This amount is composed of ureimmbursed disbursements from a litigation fund of over $2 million and law firm-incurred costs of over $300,000. Kohn Decl. ¶ 109. This significant financial burden has been made heavier by the fact that some of DPPs's resources have been diverted from other work while this action was litigated.

Accordingly, this factor strongly supports the requested fee.

G. DPPs Litigated This Case on a Wholly Contingent Basis

"Courts have long recognized that the public interest is served by rewarding attorneys who assume representation on a contingent basis with an enhanced fee to compensate them for the risk that they might be paid nothing at all for their work." Ching v. Siemens Indus., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89002, at *25 (N.D. Cal. June 27, 2014). See also Shelby v. Two Jinns, Inc., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 206930, *28-29 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 2, 2017) (noting "when cases are taken on a contingency basis and litigation is protracted, the risk of non-payment warrants a significant fee award.") (citing In re Heritage Bond Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13555, at *70 (C.D. Cal. June 10, 2005)); Beaver v. Tarsadia Hotels, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160214, *32 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2017) ("From the outset, Class Counsel litigated this case in the face of extraordinary risk of non-payment by taking the case on a pure contingency basis and risked receiving zero compensation for their years of work and out-of-pocket costs"). Because contingent representation enables a client to pay only for results achieved, the law recognizes "both sides of the bargain — a significant upside fee for successful contingent representations." In re NCAA, 2017 U.S Dist. LEXIS 201108, at *10.

Here, DPPs litigated this case purely on a contingency fee basis — with no up-front retainer fees or allowance for expenses, nor any resort to third-party funding. Consequently, DPPs faced the very real risk that they might ultimately receive nothing for their hard work and long hours, as well as the millions of dollars in cash outlays. Id. at *10-11 ("[C]ounsel for the classes have spent more than three years investigating and litigating this case, without receiving any compensation to do so.

Such burdens are significant, even for law firms of the stature of plaintiffs' counsel"). See also Moyle, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34730, at *31 ("Thus far, Class Counsel have not received any compensation for more than seven years of work on this case"). DPP counsel have lost analogous cases.

Counsel for DPPs' willingness to pursue Hatch-Waxman pharmaceutical cases on a contingent basis in the face of such risk advances the important public policy goal of incentivizing private plaintiffs to enforce this nation's antitrust laws. As the Supreme Court has held, "private suits are an important element of the Nation's antitrust enforcement effort." Am. Soc'y of Mech. Engineers v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 572 n.10 (1982). As such, "it is important to encourage top-tier litigators to pursue challenging antitrust cases…[because] [o]ur antitrust laws address issues that go to the heart of our economy." In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54587, at *55 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 25, 2016). Adequate compensation ensures that competent counsel are attracted to such work and not deterred by bearing the risk (and sometimes the reality) of loss. See Fischel v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc'y of U.S., 307 F.3d 997, 1008 (9th Cir. 2002) (fee awards provide "the necessary incentive for attorneys to bring actions to protect individual rights and to enforce public policies") (internal citations and quotations omitted).

Accordingly, this factor strongly supports the requested fee.

H. No Class Members Have Objected to the Requested Fees

The existence, or absence, of objections to a requested fee is a factor in determining an appropriate fee award. Although this brief is, by design, being filed and made available to Class members prior to the running of the deadline for objections, the Notice advised class members that DPP counsel would seek a fee of up to one-third of the settlement fund after the deduction of litigation expenses. No objections to the requested fee have been received as of the date of this filing. See Acosta v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75998, at *35 (N.D. Cal. May 4, 2018) (lack of any objections supported fee request); Boyd, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162880, at *25 ("The lack of any opposition, and the very high opt-in rate of 95%, weighs in favor of an upward modification of the benchmark rate"). If any objections are received, counsel for DPPs will report back to the Court in the brief in support of final settlement approval.

V. A LODESTAR CROSS-CHECK CONFIRMS THE REASONABLENESS OF THE REQUESTED FEE

In assessing the reasonableness of a fee award, a court utilizing the percentage-of-recovery method will typically conduct a lodestar cross-check, which measures counsel's actual time investment in the litigation. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1050; Bond v. Ferguson Enters., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70390, *29 (E.D. Cal. June 30, 2011) (finding that "[c]alculation of the lodestar amount may be used as a cross-check to assess the reasonableness of the percentage award").

The lodestar is calculated by multiplying the number of hours counsel expended on the litigation by "a reasonable hourly rate for the region and for the experience of the lawyer." Boyd, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162880, at *29 (internal quotation omitted). As a first step, a court determines whether counsel's hourly rates are reasonable considering their experience, skill and reputation. Id. at *29-30. As a second step, a court determines whether the number of hours worked on the case is reasonable. Id. at *30. In performing the cross-check, "a court need not exhaustively catalogue and review counsel's hours, but can instead focus on the general question of whether the fee award appropriately reflects the degree of time and effort expended by the attorneys." Moyle, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34730, at *32-33 (internal quotation omitted).

Here, DPPs's requested percentage-of-recovery fee award is reasonable when analyzed in light of a lodestar crosscheck. See Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 105 (lodestar). First, DPPs's rates are well within the range that have been approved as reasonable by courts in this judicial district. DPPs' counsel's rates can be found in Appendix A to each declaration of the firms representing DPPs. See Kohn Decl. ¶ 106; id. Exs. A-K. See, e.g., In re NCAA, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201108, at *20-21 (reputable survey of 2015 rates for California attorneys showed range of $200 to $1,080); In re Animation Workers Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156720, at *20 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 11, 2016) (hourly rates ranging from $275 to $1,200 were "fair, reasonable, and market-based, particularly for the 'relevant community' in which counsel work"). Counsel for DPPs all have nearly two decades of experience litigating complex drug antitrust cases; no other group of lawyers in the country shares the same level of expertise and experience in this highly specialized area. Second, the number of hours DPP counsel worked on this case was reasonable. As detailed in the Kohn Declaration, DPP counsel aggressively litigated this case through the eve of trial. See Mathein

v. Pier 1 Imps. (U.S.), Inc., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71386, at *30 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 26, 2018) ("[C]ounsels' declarations are sufficient to establish the number of attorney hours worked in this matter"). That the proposed settlements only occurred at this stage of the litigation, despite prior unsuccessful attempts at settlement, demonstrates that it was the hard work and long hours put in by DPPs that positioned the case for the excellent results obtained through settlement.

The requested fee award of 27.5% would equate to a lodestar multiplier of 1.05. Such a multiplier falls in the low range of lodestar multipliers routinely awarded by courts in this Circuit, and thus could not be said to result in "windfall" profits to DPPs. See, e.g., Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1051 n.6 (approving multiplier of 3.65); In re NCAA, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201108 at *3 (approving multiplier of 3.66 and noting that "multiples ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied"); id. at *16 (noting that "a 3.66 multiplier was well within the range of multipliers awarded in similar cases"); Parkinson v. Hyundai Motor Am., 796 F. Supp.2d 1160, 1170 (C.D. Cal. 2010) ("Where appropriate, multipliers may range from 1.2 to 4 or even higher."); Van Vranken v. Atl. Richfield Co., 901 F. Supp. 294, 298-99 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (holding that a multiplier of 3.6 was "well within the acceptable range for fee awards in complicated class action litigation" and that "[m]ultipliers in the 3-4 range are common"); Gutierrez v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67298, at *25 (N.D. Cal. May 21, 2015) (awarding $18.5 million in fees, noting that "this order allows a multiplier of 5.5 mainly on account of the fine results achieved on behalf of the class, the risk of non-payment they accepted, the superior quality of their efforts, and the delay in payment").

Accordingly, the lodestar cross-check supports the requested fee.

VI. THE ADVANCED EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND WERE NECESSARILY INCURRED TO ACHIEVE THE BENEFIT OBTAINED

Counsel who have created a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to be reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses reasonably incurred in creating the fund. See Vincent v. Hughes Air W., 557 F.2d 759, 769 (9th Cir. 1977); In re Omnivision Techs., Inc., 559 F. Supp. 2d 1037, 1048 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("Attorneys may recover their reasonable expenses that would typically be billed to paying clients in non-contingent matters."). As the Ninth Circuit has aptly recognized, in class actions litigated on a wholly contingent basis, "litigation expenses make the entire action possible." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 953.

Here, DPPs's unreimbursed expenses were reasonably incurred and necessary for the litigation of the case. See Kohn Decl. ¶¶ 109-113. These expenses were advanced by DPPs (with no recourse to third-party funding), interest free, and with no assurance that they would ever be reimbursed. They are described in detail in the Kohn Declaration. Kohn Decl. ¶ 109. The largest expenditure was for expert witnesses. Other notable expenses include the creation and maintenance of a electronic document database, shared among the co-plaintiffs, which hosted the voluminous discovery produced in this litigation (which amounted to more than 3.6 million pages), and trial-related vendors.

Accordingly, DPPs respectfully request that the Court approve reimbursement of counsel for DPPs' expenses in full, before calculating the percentage award.

VII. SERVICE AWARDS FOR THE CLASS REPRESENTATIVES ARE APPROPRIATE AND REASONABLE

The purpose of service awards is to reimburse named plaintiffs, who "take on a variety of risks and tasks when they commence representative actions[.]" In re NCAA, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201108 at *25-26. "[Service] awards are fairly typical in class action cases" as they are intended "to compensate class representatives for work done on behalf of the class, to make up for financial or reputational risk undertaken in bringing the action, and, sometimes, to recognize their willingness to act as a private attorney general." Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 958-59 (9th Cir. 2009). Service awards are determined based on "the actions the plaintiff has taken to protect the interests of the class, the degree to which the class has benefited from those actions . . . [and] the amount of time and effort the plaintiff extended in pursuing the litigation." Staton, 327 F.3d at 977.

Here, counsel for DPPs requests that the Court approve service awards to the three Class representatives (Betances, RDC and ASC) in the amount of $100,000 each, in recognition of their commitment to, and participation in, this litigation.[5] The Class representatives each actively pursued the class's interests by filing suit as a named plaintiff on behalf of all direct purchasers and undertaking the responsibilities attendant upon them as representative plaintiff. In particular, the Class representatives undertook significant burden in this case in responding to Defendants' extensive discovery and data requests, which required the class representatives to perform repeated search and production and spend significant time preparing and sitting for depositions. See Exs. 1-3 hereto (declarations of class representatives). Moreover, courts have recognized the risks inherent in filing suit as a named plaintiff on behalf of a class against an entity with which the named plaintiffs transacts business. See In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5561, *68 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 13, 2016) ("A Class Representative could reasonably have been concerned about a backlash from Defendants, reducing that Representative's business opportunities with respect to products manufactured, sold, or otherwise controlled by Defendants."). Here, that risk is acute inasmuch as the class members are direct purchasers of defendants' products, and thus transact business with defendants on a regular basis. Finally, the amount of the service awards requested here is in line with both service awards in this district, and awards made to named representatives in other Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases. See, e.g., In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., No. 15-cv-12730-DJC, ECF No. 648 at ¶ 13 (D. Mass. Dec. 7, 2017) (awarding $100,000 to each of four class representatives); In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., Civil Action No. 01-1652, ECF No. 1057 at ¶ 12 (D.N.J. Oct. 5, 2017) (awarding $100,000 to class representative); In re Provigil Antitrust Litig., Civil Action No. 2:06-cv-01797 (MSG), ECF No. 870 at ¶ 30 (E.D. Pa. For all of the foregoing reasons, DPPs respectfully request that the Court approve these appropriate and reasonable service awards to the Class representatives.

VIII. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, DPPs respectfully request that this Court enter an Order awarding DPPs fees in the amount of $45,000,070.46, i.e., 27.5% of $163,636,619.85, which represents the $166 million settlement less litigation expenses of $2,363,380.15. DPPs also respectfully request reimbursement of those litigation expenses of $2,363,380.15. DPPs also respectfully request that this Court approve incentive awards of $100,000 for each of the class representatives for their efforts on behalf of the Class in the prosecution of this action. A proposed order to this effect will accompany DPPs' motion for final settlement approval.

ORDER FOR AN AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES, REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES, AND PAYMENT OF SERVICE AWARDS TO THE CLASS REPRESENTATIVES

WHEREAS, the Court, having considered: (a) Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Settlement Approval and supporting documents; (b) the Plan of Allocation and Distribution; (c) the Definitive Master Settlement Agreement, dated March 3, 2014, between and among the Plaintiffs, Plaintiffs' Class Counsel, and all Defendants (the "Settlement Agreement"); (d) the Court's March 17, 2014 Preliminary Approval Order (Dkt. No. 705); (e) Plaintiffs' Unopposed Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Payment of Service Awards to the Class Representatives and supporting memorandum and exhibits; and, (f) any supplemental submissions in support thereof, having held a Fairness Hearing on July 14, 2014, and having considered all of the submissions and arguments with respect to the Settlement,[1] and otherwise being fully informed, and good cause appearing therefore;

[1] Certain capitalized terms used in this Order are defined in Section I of the Settlement Agreement.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AS FOLLOWS:

1. The Court has entered a separate order finally approving the Settlement Agreement, finding, among other things, that the Settlement Agreement was the result of extensive bona fide arm's-length good faith negotiations, is in all respects fair, reasonable, and adequate, is in the best interest of the Settlement Class, is within a range that responsible and experienced attorneys could accept considering all relevant risks and factors, and is in full compliance with all applicable requirements of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the United States Constitution (including the Due Process Clause), the Class Action Fairness Act, and in light of the factors set forth in Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153 (3d Cir. 1975).

2. Class Counsel have moved for an award of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses from the Aggregate Settlement Fund. Pursuant to Rules 23(h)(3) and 54(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and pursuant to the factors for assessing the reasonableness of a class action fee request as set forth in Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 n.1 (3d Cir. 2000), and In re Prudential Ins. Co. of American Sales Practices Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 340 (3d Cir. 1998), this Court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

(a) the Settlement confers an immediate monetary benefit to the Settlement Class of $130 million that is substantial, both in absolute terms, and when assessed in light of the risks of establishing liability and damages in this case;

(b) the Settlement also contains valuable prospective relief in the form of, among other things, (i) meaningful and enforceable commitments by Comdata to modify or not to enforce portions of Comdata's merchant services agreements with Settlement Class Members and the Major Chains that Plaintiffs had challenged in this case as being anticompetitive, and (ii) an agreement by Comdata to engage in a good faith negotiations relating to, inter alia, merchant transaction fees with certain truck stop Buying Groups that are, collectively, composed of hundreds of members of the Settlement Class;

(c) Settlement Class Members were advised of Class Counsel's intention to seek attorneys' fees of one-third of only the cash value of the Settlement Fund, litigation costs of up to $7.5 million and service awards totaling $315,000 ($150,000 for Marchbanks Truck Service, Inc. d/b/a Bear Mountain Travel Stop ("Marchbanks Truck Service"), $75,000 for Gerald F. Krachey d/b/a Krachey's BP South ("Krachey"), $75,000 for Walt Whitman Truck Stop, Inc. ("Walt Whitman"), and $15,000 for Mahwah Fuel Stop ("Mahwah")) in the Long Form Notice, approved by this Court and mailed by the Settlement Administrator to Settlement Class members by the April 14, 2014 deadline established by the Court. Additionally, Settlement Class Members were informed about the fee, costs and service award requests through the Court approved Publication Notice, which was published in the May 2014 issue of NACS (National Association for Convenience and Fuel Retailing) Magazine and NATSO's e-newsletters for the weeks of April 14 through May 5, 2014, and which publications directed Settlement Class Members to the settlement website (www.truckstopantitrustsettlement.com) established by the Settlement Administrator that was launched on April 14, 2014. The settlement website contains copies of, inter alia, the Settlement Agreement and the Long Form Notice, both of which notify Settlement Class Members of the fee, costs, and service award requests.

(d) Class Counsel filed a motion for an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of one third of the Aggregate Settlement Fund ($43,333,333) plus interest earned on that amount since the Aggregate Settlement Fund was created, as well as reimbursement of reasonable costs and expenses incurred in the prosecution of this action of $6,696,856.98. Plaintiffs' motion papers have been publicly available since May 5, 2014, on the docket of this action and on the settlement website;

(e) Representatives of four major Independent Truck Stop Buying Groups, collectively representing hundreds of Settlement Class Members, submitted declarations expressing affirmative support for the fee request, the request for reimbursement of expenses, and the requested service awards;

(f) Class Counsel have effectively and efficiently prosecuted this difficult and complex action on behalf of the members of the Settlement Class for seven years, with no guarantee they would be compensated for their time or reimbursed for their out-of-pocket costs;

(g) Class Counsel undertook numerous and significant risks of nonpayment in connection with the prosecution of this action;

(h) Class Counsel have reasonably expended 85,907.47 hours prosecuting this complex, contingent litigation over the past seven years, resulting in a total lodestar of $49,785.073.74, and reasonably incurred $6,696,856.98 in out-of-pocket expenses, in prosecuting this action, with no guarantee of recovery;

(i) the Settlement achieved for the benefit of the Settlement Class was obtained as a direct result of Class Counsel's skillful advocacy;

(j) the Settlement was reached following negotiations held in good-faith and in the absence of collusion;

(k) the "percentage-of-the-fund" method is the proper method for calculating attorneys' fees in common fund class actions in this Circuit (see, e.g., In re Rite Aid Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 305 (3d Cir. 2005));

(l) fee awards of one-third of the settlement amount are commonly awarded in this Circuit, while here Class Counsel seek only a fee of one-third of the cash value of the Settlement, even though the Settlement has valuable prospective relief;

(m) as detailed in Class Counsel's declarations, a fee of one-third of the cash competent of the Settlement would equate to less than Class Counsel's total lodestar and thus result in a multiplier below 1, and therefore no risk premium whatsoever;

(n) Plaintiffs' expert economist, Dr. Hal J. Singer, submitted a Declaration to this Court dated March 4, 2014, detailing an economic analysis of the portion of the prospective relief relating to the enforceable changes in Comdata's merchant services agreements, and valuing that relief at between $260 million and $491 million. Plaintiffs' expert economist has, therefore, opined that the total value of the Settlement to the Settlement Class is between $390 million and $621 million. Thus, if Dr. Singer is correct, the fee Class Counsel is seeking is, at most, slightly more than 11% of the total value of the Settlement;

(o) in light of the factors and findings described above, the requested fee award is within the applicable range of reasonable percentage of the fund awards.

3. Accordingly, Class Counsel are hereby awarded attorneys' fees to be paid from the Aggregate Settlement Fund in the amount of $43,333,333 plus interest in the amount of $19,674, which represents the interest earned on that amount since the Aggregate Settlement Fund was created. The Court finds this award to be fair and reasonable.

4. Further Class Counsel are hereby awarded $6,696,856.98 out of the Aggregate Settlement Fund to reimburse them for the expenses they incurred in the prosecution of this lawsuit, which expenses the Court finds to be fair and reasonably incurred to achieve the benefits to the Settlement Class obtained in the Settlement. The awarded fees and expenses shall be paid to Class Counsel from the Aggregate Settlement Fund in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

5. Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel[2] shall allocate the fees and expenses among all of Class Counsel in a manner that Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel in good faith believes reflects the contributions of each firm working for Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class in the prosecution and settlement of the claims against Defendants in this action.

6. Plaintiffs have requested that the Court approve Class Representatives receiving service awards from the Aggregate Settlement Fund of $150,000 for Marchbanks Truck Service, $75,000 Krachey, $75,000 for Walt Whitman, and $15,000 for Mahwah. In the Third Circuit, service awards may be paid to class representatives to reward efforts that benefit the class. This Court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law regarding each of the Class Representatives' service to the Settlement Class in this litigation:

a. Marchbanks Truck Service: (a) through its owner, William Patrick "Pat" Marchbanks, was one of the driving forces behind this lawsuit being filed and prosecuted; (b) submitted its employees, including Mr. Marchbanks twice, to three depositions, requiring many hours of preparation and travel time; (c) dedicated hundreds of hours, mostly by Mr. Marchbanks (i) assisting Class Counsel in the investigation and development of an initial complaint, (ii) overseeing Class Counsel's prosecution of this litigation and settlement negotiations, (iii) traveling to and attending multiple Court hearings, settlement conferences, and mediations, (iv) responding to numerous document requests and interrogatories, (v) producing documents, and (vi) interfacing with Settlement Class members and representatives of the Buying Groups.

b. Krachey: (a) submitted its employee, Douglas Krachey, to two depositions, requiring several hours of preparation and travel time; (b) dedicated numerous hours (i) assisting Class Counsel in the investigation and development of an initial complaint, (ii) overseeing Class Counsel's prosecution of this litigation and settlement negotiations, (iii) responding to numerous document requests and interrogatories, and (iv) producing documents.

c. Walt Whitman: (a) diligently represented the interest of the Settlement Class despite having been out of business since before the first complaint was filed and thus having its damages capped at pre-complaint overcharges; (b) submitted David Silverman to two depositions—requiring several hours of preparation and travel time—even though Walt Whitman did not operate as a truck stop between the two depositions; (c) dedicated time (i) assisting Class Counsel in the investigation and development of an initial complaint, (ii) overseeing Class Counsel's prosecution of this litigation and settlement negotiations, (iii) responding to numerous document requests and interrogatories, and (iv) producing documents.

d. Mahwah: (a) submitted an employee for a deposition, requiring several hours of preparation and travel time; (b) dedicated numerous hours (i) assisting Class Counsel in the investigation and development of an initial complaint, (ii) overseeing Class Counsel's prosecution of this litigation and settlement negotiations, (iii) responding to numerous document requests and interrogatories, and (iv) producing documents.

7. In recognition of the above facts regarding the service of the Class Representatives to the Settlement Class, the Class Representatives are hereby awarded service awards in the following amounts as requested by Class Counsel: $150,000 for Marchbanks Truck Service, Inc. d/b/a Bear Mountain Travel Stop, $75,000 for Gerald F. Krachey d/b/a Krachey's BP South, $75,000 for Walt Whitman Truck Stop, Inc., and $15,000 for Mahwah Fuel Stop out of the Aggregate Settlement Fund. The Court finds these awards to be fair and reasonable. These awards are in addition to whatever monetary amounts the Class Representatives may be receiving from the Aggregate Settlement Fund pursuant to the Plan of Distribution.

SO ORDERED this the 14th day of July, 2014.

I. INTRODUCTION[1]

After more than seven years of vigorous litigation that was highly contested by Defendants and their ten-highly regarded law firms, Co-Lead Counsel for the Settlement Class ("Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel")[2] achieved for the Settlement Class an extraordinary settlement, including: (a) $130 million in cash; (b) prospective relief—in the form of, among other things, meaningful and enforceable commitments by Comdata to modify or not to enforce those portions of Comdata's merchant services agreements that Plaintiffs had challenged in this case as being anticompetitive—that an expert economist has determined to be worth an additional $260 million to $491 million (bringing the total value of the settlement to between $390 and $621 million); and (c) an agreement by Comdata to engage in good faith negotiations relating to, inter alia, merchant transaction fees with certain Buying Groups of Independent Truck Stops that are, collectively, composed of hundreds of members of the Settlement Class (collectively, the "Settlement"). See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 7-10, 27.

Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel, who handled this matter on a purely contingent basis, and thus to date have received no payment for their services or reimbursement of the millions of dollars in expenses (including expert fees) that they have laid out on behalf of Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class, [1] Certain capitalized terms used in this brief are defined in Section I of the Settlement Agreement.

[2] Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel are Berger & Montague, P.C., Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP and Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP. See Preliminary Approval Order at ¶ 7 (Dkt. 705). The Court earlier had appointed these same three firms as interim Co-Lead Class Counsel, along with an Executive Committee composed of the interim Co-Leads plus the Law Offices of David Balto, Law Offices of Joshua P. Davis, and McCulley McCluer PLLC. See April 26, 2007 Order (Dkt. 12). The following firms also contributed to the prosecution of this case as counsel for the class, and are seeking attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses: Barrack Rodos & Bacine, Faruqi & Faruqi, LLP, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, Heins, Mills & Olson P.L.C., Kaplan, Fox & Kilsheimer LLP, NastLaw LLC, Reinhardt Wendorf & Blanchfield, Shepherd Finkelman Miller & Shah LLP, Spector Roseman Kodroff & Willis P.C., Taus Cebulash & Landau LLP, and Wolf Haldenstein Adler Freeman & Herz LLP. These firms and Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel are collectively referred to as "Class Counsel." See Declaration of Co-Lead Counsel for the Class Eric L. Cramer, Esq. in Support of (1) Plaintiffs' Uncontested Motion for An Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses and Payment of Service Awards to the Class Representatives and (2) Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of Settlement ("Cramer Co-Lead Decl."), at ¶ 2, Exhibits 1-19 to Cramer Co-Lead Decl.

now respectfully submit this memorandum in support of their request for an order: (i) awarding attorneys' fees in the amount of one-third of the $130 million cash value of the Settlement only (plus accrued interest); (ii) reimbursing Class Counsel for reasonably incurred litigation expenses in the amount of $6,696,856.98; and (iii) approving service awards for the Class Representatives of $150,000 for Marchbanks Truck Service, Inc. d/b/a Bear Mountain Travel Stop ("Marchbanks Truck Service"), $75,000 for Gerald F. Krachey d/b/a Krachey's BP South ("Krachey"), $75,000 for Walt Whitman Truck Stop, Inc. ("Walt Whitman"), and $15,000 for Mahwah Fuel Stop ("Mahwah").[3]

Over the seven years of litigating this complex and multifaceted antitrust case (the "Action") against five sets of well-regarded law firms (ten total law firms) representing the five Defendant groups, Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel committed their services and resources, collectively devoting 85,907.47 hours to this case, advancing $6,696,856.98 in out-of-pocket costs—including $4,055,986.61 to economic and industry experts and $680,890.35 to maintain a database of millions of pages of documents produced during the course of this litigation—and applying their skill and extensive antitrust experience to prosecuting this case on behalf of the Settlement Class.[4] See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 35-43. As noted, all of Class Counsel's fees, and recovery of all out-of-pocket expenditures, have been fully contingent upon receiving a favorable resolution of the Action on behalf of their clients and the certified Settlement Class.

The settlement that has now been achieved will provide immediate, meaningful, and certain benefits to the Settlement Class. Specifically, and as noted above, Plaintiffs and all Defendants[5] have entered into a Definitive Master Settlement Agreement (the "Settlement Agreement") that provides for: (a) immediate payment of $130 million to Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class of over 6,000 independent Truck Stops and other Retail Fueling Facilities; (b) valuable prospective relief in the form of, among other things, meaningful and enforceable commitments by Comdata to modify or not enforce those portions of Comdata's merchant services agreements with Settlement Class Members and the Major Chains that Plaintiffs had challenged in this case as being anticompetitive; and (c) an agreement by Comdata to engage in a good faith negotiations relating to, inter alia, merchant transaction fees with certain Buying Groups that are, collectively, composed of hundreds of members of the Settlement Class. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 7-10, 27.

[3] Marchbanks Truck Service, Krachey, Walt Whitman, and Mahwah are collectively referred to as "Plaintiffs" or the "Class Representatives."

[4] The Settlement Class is defined as "All owners and operators of truck stops or other retail fueling facilities with at least one physical location in the United States that paid Merchant Transaction Fees directly to Comdata on Comdata Proprietary Transactions and that were calculated based on a percentage of the face amount of the transaction during the Settlement Class Period with the exception of Mobile Fuelers, Wilco-Hess locations, the Pilot Defendants, the TA Defendants, and Love's and any of the parents, subsidiaries, affiliates, franchisees or employees of any of the Defendants." See Settlement Agreement, ¶ 2; see also Preliminary Approval Order at ¶ 4.

Class Counsel's request for an attorneys' fee award of one-third of the cash value of the Aggregate Settlement Fund (plus accrued interest)—i.e., an award of $43.33 million (plus interest)—is reasonable and appropriate. First, courts in the Third Circuit frequently award fees to class counsel of one-third of the cash value of class action settlements, including cases involving settlements of well over $100 million.[6] Second, the request is particularly appropriate here where Class Counsel are not seeking a fee of one-third of the actual total value of the Settlement. The Settlement includes prospective relief conservatively valued by economic expert, Dr. Hal J. Third, there is overwhelming support amongst members of the Settlement Class not only for the work Class Counsel did on their behalf, but also specifically for the fee Class Counsel are seeking. Leaders of four independent Truck Stop Buying Groups—on behalf of their respective membership, which includes hundreds of Settlement Class members—have each submitted declarations supporting the Settlement and the fees sought by Class Counsel.[8] Additionally, each of the Class Representatives has submitted a declaration supporting the settlement and Class Counsel's fee request.[9] Finally, the total lodestar for Class Counsel at current rates is $49,785,073.74, and thus the sought fee reflects a "multiplier" of only 0.87, and therefore includes a negative risk premium despite the wholly contingent nature of the engagement. Typically, courts in the Third Circuit approve multipliers well above 1, and thus well more than what Class Counsel are conservatively seeking here.[10]

Class Counsel's request for reimbursement of expenses is similarly appropriate. All expenses were necessarily incurred in the prosecution of the Action, which lasted seven years, required Class Counsel's retention of three prestigious economic experts, involved over 70 depositions throughout the country and required Class Counsel to store, organize, search, and access millions of pages of documents and huge amounts of data.

Finally, the requested service award for each Class Representative is appropriate. By filing complaints against Comdata the Class Representatives risked being cut off by the dominant supplier of over-the-road ("OTR") Fleet Cards used by their customers, and each significantly contributed to the prosecution of this litigation by, among other things, producing documents, responding to discovery requests, submitting to multiple depositions, providing information to prosecute the case, and overseeing Class Counsel. Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 44-54. These amounts are appropriate given the amount of risk and effort from the Class Representatives.[11] In addition to supporting Class Counsel's fees, the Buying Group

A. Plaintiffs' Claims[13]

This case is an antitrust action brought on behalf of a now certified class of independent Truck Stops and other Retail Fueling Facilities that accept Comdata's specialized payment cards (known as "Fleet Cards" or "OTR Fleet Cards") used by OTR, long-haul fleets ("Fleets") to purchase diesel fuel and other items. Comdata has been the leading OTR Fleet Card issuer for the period relevant to this case. Plaintiffs allege that the challenged conduct allowed Comdata and Ceridian (Comdata's parent) to restructure, and thereby artificially inflate, Comdata's Merchant Transaction Fees to members of the Settlement Class beginning in or about 2000-2001 (the "Fee Restructuring"). Plaintiffs alleged that, as a result of the claimed anticompetitive conduct, Settlement Class Members paid supracompetitive transaction fees to Comdata when processing Comdata Proprietary Transactions.

The challenged conduct here (the "Scheme") had two main facets. First, after acquiring several OTR Fleet Card competitors to obtain market dominance, Comdata (with Ceridian's involvement) entered into what Plaintiffs alleged were illegal agreements that restricted the Majors Chains—Comdata's customers and competitors—from competing with Comdata or supporting rival OTR Fleet Cards. Plaintiffs alleged that these Major Chain agreements reflected an overarching agreement between Comdata and the Major Chains, in which Comdata agreed to offer the Major Chains low, flat transaction fees while impairing the Major Chains' competitors—the Independents—with much higher fees. Second, Comdata imposed what Plaintiffs alleged were anticompetitive anti-steering restrictions on Independents. Plaintiffs alleged that the agreements and restrictions that constituted the Scheme blocked competitive forces and enabled Comdata to impose artificially inflated fees on the Settlement Class.

B. Procedural Background

After an extensive pre-complaint investigation that included key contributions from the Class Representatives—particularly William Patrick "Pat" Marchbanks on behalf of Marchbanks Truck Service—the first complaints in this litigation were filed in March 2007. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 14, 45-46. With discovery ongoing (having begun on October 12, 2007), Plaintiffs filed their Second Consolidated Amended Complaint on March 31, 2010. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 17.

Each of the Defendants, having consistently denied Plaintiffs' allegations and raised multiple defenses to the merits of the claims, moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Complaint, and most moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' Third Consolidated Complaint. Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 18. The Court mainly denied the first round of motions and entirely denied the second round.[14]

Before, during and after Defendants moved to dismiss, Class Counsel pursued extensive discovery from all five sets of Defendants and third parties from the moment discovery opened in October 2007 until discovery closed on May 24, 2013. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 19. During the course of the extended discovery period in this case, the parties took over 70

Trial was scheduled for August 2014.

C. The Settlement

The protracted settlement negotiations between Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel and attorneys for Defendants were hard fought, conducted at arm's length, and guided both by two separate, experienced, independent mediators, and the Court.

The case resolved only after several failed efforts at settlement over several years, including a Court-ordered in-person settlement conference with Magistrate Judge Perkin in 2011, and a July 2012 mediation between Plaintiffs and defendants Comdata and Ceridian with a private mediator. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 25. More recently, in late 2013, after the close of fact and expert discovery, with the Court's two-day hearing on the parties' Daubert motions having been held, and with a class certification hearing looming, the parties agreed to private mediation with Professor Eric Green, a nationally-recognized mediator experienced with complex and significant antitrust class actions. Id. ¶ 26. The parties held a full-day mediation with Professor Green on December 5, 2013 in New York, which initially proved unsuccessful. Id.

Following the mediation session, certain of the parties continued to negotiate throughout December 2013, culminating in an agreement under which Comdata and Ceridian would make a combined cash payment of $100 million to Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class, along with Comdata's agreement to certain prospective relief. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 26. On December 31, 2013, Plaintiffs, Comdata, and Ceridian entered into a memorandum of understanding ("MOU"), memorializing the settlement between Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class, on the one hand, and Comdata and Ceridian, on the other. Id. Contemporaneous with these negotiations, and with Professor Green's assistance, Plaintiffs and Love's negotiated an MOU, signed January 3, 2014, whereby Love's would pay the Settlement Class $10 million. Id.

On January 9, 2014, the Court held a settlement conference with Plaintiffs and the then-non-settling TA and Pilot Defendants. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 26. During that conference, the Court and counsel for the TA and Pilot Defendants engaged in further settlement discussions. Following that conference, Plaintiffs and the TA and Pilot Defendants entered into a MOU under which the TA and Pilot Defendants each agreed to pay $10 million to the Settlement Class (i.e., $20 million combined). Id.

Throughout January and February of this year, Plaintiffs and Defendants exchanged several drafts of the Settlement Agreement—including numerous attachments such as the Long Form Notice, Publication Notice, Proposed Preliminary Approval Order and Claim Form—vigorously negotiating its terms and the wording of the various attachments. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 26. On March 3, 2014, all parties entered into the Definitive Master Settlement Agreement that provides for a collective $130 million cash payment to the Settlement Class in addition to valuable prospective relief from Comdata. Subsequent to the Court's certifying the Settlement Class and granting Preliminary Approval of the Settlement (Dkt. 705), Defendants each deposited the agreed amounts into escrow accounts for the benefit of the Settlement Class, where the monies now sit, earning interest. Id. at ¶ 31. The Court-appointed escrow agent, Huntington National Bank, estimates that the interest earned on the escrow funds will amount to $60,616.45 by the July 14, 2014 final fairness hearing. Id.

The prospective relief portion of the Settlement includes a series of legally binding commitments from Comdata to refrain from including and enforcing certain provisions in its merchant services agreements. These commitments, which will be in place for five (5) years from certain specified trigger dates, are described in detail in the Settlement Agreement. They include Comdata's commitment:

- not to enforce or include any contractual provisions preventing the Major Chains from actively steering customers to non-Comdata OTR Fleet Cards, including in-house accounts;

- not to enforce or include any contractual provisions preventing Settlement Class Members from actively steering customers to non-Comdata OTR Fleet Cards, including in-house accounts;

- not to enforce or include any provision in any agreement with Settlement Class Members requiring Settlement Class Members to offer Comdata cardholders the same discount offered to customers using other payment methods. For instance, Settlement Class Members will not be precluded from offering across-the-board discounts to customers using non-Comdata OTR Fleet Cards that are not offered to Comdata cardholders;

- not to include or enforce any provision requiring any Major Chain to pay to Comdata a transaction fee that is equal to or greater than the highest transaction fee paid by that Major Chain to any other competing OTR Fleet Card company ("Transaction Fee MFN") in any of its agreements;

- not to include a Transaction Fee MFN provision requiring Settlement Class Members to pay to Comdata a transaction fee that is equal to or greater than the highest transaction fee paid by that merchant to any other competing OTR Fleet Card company in any of its agreements;

- not to prohibit Settlement Class Members from surcharging the portions of its Comdata proprietary transactions in which the fee is calculated on a percentage basis, under certain conditions set forth in more detail in the Settlement Agreement; and

- to negotiate in good faith with several Buying Groups—NATSN, PTP, AMBEST, and Roady's—with regard to reaching a commercially reasonable agreement on the rates and commercial terms for the processing of Comdata OTR Fleet Cards by merchant members of those Buying Groups, subject to certain conditions detailed in the Settlement Agreement.[15]

Class Counsel asked Dr. Singer—one of Plaintiffs' economists in the case who was very familiar with the extensive record through his work on two reports submitted in the case—to conduct an economic valuation exercise on the portion of the prospective relief pertaining to Comdata's contractual changes. Relying upon the record evidence and standard economic methodologies, Dr. Singer has opined that the value to the Settlement Class of Comdata's contractual changes falls between $260 million and $491 million.[16]

The valuation is an estimate. The Settlement Agreement, which sets forth in full the obligations of the parties under the Settlement, does not require Comdata to lower its fees to Settlement Class Members. Nevertheless, Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel believe—based on Dr. Singer's analysis and their own assessment of the importance of the changes Comdata has agreed to make to the competitive landscape—that the combined value of the Settlement to the Settlement Class (i.e., the cash portion plus the prospective relief) is between $390 to $621 million. This sum exceeds the overcharges Plaintiffs' expert estimated that the Settlement Class suffered due to the conduct challenged in the case. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 8.

III. THE COURT SHOULD APPROVE CLASS COUNSEL'S REQUEST FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES

A. The Fee Request Satisfies the Legal Standards Governing Awards of Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions

Class Counsel's fee request satisfies all applicable legal requirements. The United States Supreme Court has "recognized consistently that . . . a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole."[17] The common fund doctrine is based on the inherent powers of the federal court to "prevent . . . inequity by assessing attorney's fees against the entire fund, thus spreading fees proportionately among those benefited by the suit." Boeing Co., 444 U.S. at 478.[18] The Third Circuit favors the percentage-of-recovery method of calculating fee awards in common fund cases because it allows courts to reward litigation success and penalize failure. See In re AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d 160, 164 (3d Cir. 2006); In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 300 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practices Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 333 (3d Cir. 1998)).[19] To that end, courts in the Third Circuit and elsewhere routinely Pa. 2000) ("[T]here is no doubt that attorneys may properly be given a portion of the settlement fund in recognition of the benefit they have bestowed on class members.").

[18] Unlike in cases in which fees are assessed under a statute, fees in common fund cases "are not assessed against the unsuccessful litigant (fee shifting), but rather are taken from the fund or damage recovery (fee spreading), thereby avoiding the unjust enrichment of those who otherwise would be benefited by the fund without sharing in the expenses incurred by the successful litigant." Fickinger v. C.I. Planning Corp., 646 F. Supp. 622, 632 (E.D. Pa. 1986).

[19] For a history of the Third Circuit's approach to awarding attorneys' fees, including a discussion of the Report of the Third Circuit Task Force, Court Awarded Attorney Fees, 108 F.R.D. 237, 241 (1985) ("1985 Task Force Report") and the transition to the prevailing view that the percentage-of-the-fund method is preferred in common fund cases. See In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 255-57 (3d Cir. 2001). As noted in In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d at 306 n.16, a second Task Force was convened and issued a follow-up report in 2002, further endorsing use of the percentage-of-the-fund method in common fund cases. See Report of the Third Circuit Task Force, Selection of Class Counsel, 208 F.R.D. 340 (2002).

employ the percentage-of-the-fund method in antitrust class actions.[20] The Third Circuit urges district courts to perform a lodestar cross-check to ensure that application of the percentage method results in a "sensible" recovery.[21]

Under these standards, Class Counsel's request for a fee of one-third of the $130 million Aggregate Settlement Fund (inclusive of interest)—and no fees for the value of the prospective relief—in light of the successful prosecution of this complex and demanding case is reasonable and appropriate. Class Counsel spent over 85,900 hours through March 31, 2014 on the case. If awarded, the requested fee would amount to a "negative" multiplier of 87% of the total lodestar. Indeed, even if the lowest conservative valuation of the prospective relief is used, the total value of the Settlement is $390 million, which means that the fee request is not one-third of the total settlement value, but rather 11.1%. The request, therefore, is conservative.

B. The Fee Requested By Class Counsel Is Fair and Reasonable

The Third Circuit has instructed courts to consider the following seven factors when evaluating the reasonableness of a fee request under the percentage-of-recovery method:

> (1) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the presence or absence of substantial objections by members of the class to the settlement terms and/or fees requested by counsel; (3) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (4) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (5) the risk of nonpayment; (6) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; and (7) the awards in similar cases.

[20] See, e.g., In re Fasteners Antitrust Litig., 2014 WL 296954, at *3 ("In practice, courts in the Third Circuit assess requests for attorney's fees in antitrust cases using the percentage-of-recovery method, and then cross-check the result with the lodestar method"); Flonase, 951 F. Supp. 2d at 746 ("The latter method [i.e., percentage-of-recovery], is 'generally favored in cases involving a common fund . . . .'") (quoting In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig, 396 F.3d at 300); Remeron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, at *32 (("the percentage of fund method is the proper method for compensating Plaintiffs' Counsel in this common fund case").

Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 n.1 (3d Cir. 2000).[22] More recently, the Third Circuit has suggested that it also may be important to consider the following factors from In re Prudential Ins. Co. of American Sales Practices Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 340 (3d Cir. 1998):

> (1) the value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of class counsel as opposed to the efforts of other groups, such as government agencies conducting investigations; (2) the percentage fee that would have been negotiated had the case been subject to a private contingent fee agreement at the time counsel was retained; and (3) any "innovative" terms of settlement.

In re AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d 160, 165-66 (3d Cir. 2006) ("In reviewing an attorneys' fees award in a class action settlement, a district court should consider the Gunter factors, the Prudential factors, and any other factors that are useful and relevant with respect to the particular facts of the case.") (citations omitted). All of the Gunter and Prudential factors overwhelming support the requested fee.

1. Application of the Gunter factors

(a) The complexity and duration of the litigation

The complexity and duration of the litigation is "the first factor a district court can and should consider in awarding fees."[23] An "antitrust class action [is] perhaps the most complex case[] to litigate."[24] Here, Class Counsel diligently and skillfully prosecuted this litigation for seven years in the face of intense opposition from five different Defendant groups each represented by at least two law firms. Those efforts required extensive briefing of complex legal and factual issues and exhaustive discovery efforts, often involving detailed meetings with Defendants' counsel, and requiring counsel to travel the country for depositions and to secure document productions from Defendants and third parties. Specifically, Class Counsel's extensive and diligent efforts included the following:

- reviewing, analyzing, summarizing and organizing millions of pages of documents produced by parties and third-parties during the course of this litigation and 2.3 terabytes of transaction data;
- taking and defending over 70 depositions, including nine (9) expert witness depositions, throughout the United States;
- issuing and serving third-party document subpoenas, which required extensive negotiations (particularly with Flying J, Inc., but also with many other third parties), resulting in the production of thousands of pages of documents;
- negotiating with Defendants concerning discovery, including regarding protective orders and the ESI protocol;
- preparing and serving 29 sets of document requests, seven sets of interrogatories and seven sets of requests for admissions on Defendants, many of which were followed by an extensive meet and confer process;
- responding to ten (10) sets for documents requests and four sets of interrogatories directed at the Class Representatives;
- briefing and arguing several discovery motions;
- investigating the underlying factual record and developing the legal theories of the case;
- researching the law pertinent to the claims against Defendants and potential defenses to those claims to, among other things, formulate a discovery strategy;
- drafting the initial complaints and three comprehensive consolidated amended complaints;
- working with three economic experts on eight expert reports and on deposing Defendants' experts and analyzing multiple Defense expert reports;
- opposing and defeating in substantial part two rounds of motions to dismiss;
- fully briefing a motion for class certification;
- preparing for the hearing on Plaintiffs' motion for class certification that had been scheduled for January 28-30, 2014 (fewer than thirty days from when the first MOU was executed in the case);

- briefing and arguing six Daubert motions and other related motions to strike;
- opposing Ceridian's summary judgment motion;
- conducting arm's-length settlement negotiations, over many years, with the Defendants collectively and individually with two separate private mediators;
- developing and drafting the Settlement Agreement, Long Form Notice, Publication Notice, and Claim Form and overseeing the notice process;
- communicating with Class Representatives regarding litigation strategy, updates on the litigation and settlement negotiations and the notice process;
- communicating with Settlement Class members throughout the litigation, including during the settlement and notice period; and
- communicating with representatives of the four major Buying Groups throughout the litigation, including during the settlement and notice period.[25]

Even now, the work on this case has not ended. Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel will continue to expend many additional hours—which are not included in the lodestar cross-check calculations—in connection with the settlement administration process, responding to Settlement Class Member inquiries, working to secure final approval of the Settlement, preparing for the final approval hearing scheduled for July 14, 2014, and dealing with technical matters involving the Aggregate Settlement Fund and Settlement administration. Id. ¶ 32.

This factor weighs heavily in favor of granting Plaintiffs' motion. Bradburn, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 339 (four year old antitrust case involving litigation over class certification and collateral estoppel, expert testimony on both class certification and on the merits, and numerous depositions supported fee request).

As the Court is aware, this litigation has been followed closely by the truck stop industry generally and the Buying Groups specifically. As such, Class Counsel's extensive efforts have not gone unnoticed. A representative from each of the Buying Groups has affirmatively voiced their support for Plaintiffs' fee request.[26] In fact, Kelly Rhinehart, the President of Roady's, stated that he believes "that the requested attorneys' fee award of one-third of the total cash settlement amount is appropriate in this case" because he is "well aware of the time and effort put into this case by Class Counsel for over seven years with no guarantee of ever getting compensated."[27] Further, Rhinehardt "recognize[s] and appreciate[s] the skill, persistence, and professionalism with which Class Counsel handled the matter on behalf of the class," concluding that "the case was expensive to litigate and thus that Class Counsel deserve to be reimbursed for their out of pocket expenses."[28] The support of Buying Groups representing hundreds of members of the Settlement Class "strongly supports approval of the requested fee." Flonase, 951 F. Supp. 2d at 747 (explaining that support of a settlement by members of the class, "strongly supports approval of the requested fee").[29]

(b) The size of the fund and the number of people that benefit

The size of the fund created by and the number of people who benefit from the Settlement weigh in favor of approving the fee request.[30] The Settlement is an outstanding result for the Settlement Class—a class consisting of over 6,000 entities, most of whom are independent businesses. Namely, the Settlement provides significant, immediate and certain payment of $130 million, plus accrued interest, less attorneys' fees, expenses, administration costs, and service awards ("Net Settlement Fund").[31] The Settlement also provides for prospective relief that Dr. Singer has valued at between $260 million and $491 million. As such, the Settlement will provide the Settlement Class with a total benefit of between $390 million and $621 million. This amount is above the range of overcharge damages suffered by the class computed by Dr. Jeffrey Leitzinger, one of Plaintiffs' economic experts.[32]

The significant cash and injunctive value delivered to the Settlement Class as a result of the Settlement weighs heavily in favor of granting Class Counsel's fee request.

(c) The skill and efficiency of counsel

Class Counsel are comprised of some of the preeminent plaintiffs class action and antitrust litigation firms in the country, with decades of experience prosecuting and trying complex antitrust actions.[33] Class Counsel applied their knowledge and experience to obtain a positive result for the Settlement Class.[34] Class Counsel also faced formidable opposition from five sets of defense counsel from nationally recognized law firms and including counsel with decades of antitrust and class action experience who vigorously defended this case. The high "quality of opposing counsel" supports Plaintiffs' attorneys' fee request.[35]

Inc. Sec. Litig.*, 293 F. Supp. 2d 484, 496 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (where counsel primarily practiced in the field of shareholder securities litigation, had considerable experience, and faced formidable legal opposition, this supported awarding the requested fees).

(d) The risk of non-payment was significant

"A determination of a fair fee must include consideration of the sometimes undesirable characteristics of a contingent antitrust action[], including the uncertain nature of the fee, the wholly contingent outlay of large out of pocket sums by plaintiffs, and the fact that the risk of failure and nonpayment in an antitrust case are extremely high."[36] One court observed in an antitrust action, "[i]t is known from past experience that no matter how confident one may be of the outcome of litigation, such confidence is often misplaced."[37] Indeed, the history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability but recovered no damages or very small damages at trial or after appeal.[38]

Even if Plaintiffs had brought their case to trial and succeeded, they still would have faced certain and lengthy appeals. As Judge Pratter observed, attorneys who undertake the representation of a class are "unable to mitigate any of the risk of nonpayment; instead, they [a]re required to spend or incur obligations to effectively litigate th[e] case."[39] And, as Judge Stengel explained in awarding a one-third fee to class counsel (including, e.g., one of the Co-Lead Counsel here) in Wellbutrin SR:

> Class Counsel faced numerous risks in preparing and litigating this case, including the risks associated with the motion to dismiss, class certification, summary judgment, and – had the case continued – ultimately proving liability > and damages at trial and potentially surviving any appeals. Underlying all of these risks was the enormous one of handling this case for its entire duration on a contingent basis, doing everything necessary to honor Class Counsel's commitment and obligations to the class. . . . The substantial risk of nonpayment that Class Counsel faced throughout this litigation strongly supports their fee request.[40]

And so it is here, where the Plaintiffs' claims involve a complex set of factual and legal issues that significantly increased the odds of nonpayment. Class Counsel had to be prepared to front all of the costs and carry all of the risk that there might not be any recovery while the "the Class itself risked nothing out-of-pocket."[41] The risk faced by Class Counsel was multifaceted, as there was risk involved with: (a) building a case from the ground up without any federal government case for a foundation (in fact, industry efforts to encourage government action had largely failed); (b) defeating two rounds of motions to dismiss (nine total motions); (c) pursuing certification of a litigation class; (d) opposing summary judgment (Ceridian's summary judgment motion was fully briefed; absent settlement, Class Counsel expected four additional motions in March); (e) opposing several Daubert motions (which motions had been fully briefed and argued); and—if the case had continued, (f) preparing for trial, including opposing pretrial motions and motions in limine; (g) ultimately proving liability and damages at trial; and (h) surviving any appeals.

Having prevailed in the face of the multiple attendant risks, Class Counsel should be rewarded. The substantial "risk factor" of nonpayment strongly supports Class Counsel's fee request.

(e) The amount of time devoted to the litigation

As explained above, this case required a substantial investment of time by Class Counsel.[42] Class Counsel expended more than 85,900 hours over seven years preparing, litigating, and negotiating the settlement of this Action. And Class Counsel's commitment to [40] In re Wellbutrin SR Antitrust Litig., No. 04-5525, ECF No. 413 at 11-12 (citations omitted).

this litigation is not over. Counsel will spend substantial additional time preparing for and participating in the final approval hearing and handling claims administration.[43] The copious amount of time that Class Counsel was required to devote to this action also supports approval of this fee request.[44]

Class Counsel's lodestar calculations (discussed below) do not include any amount for this anticipated future work. See Remeron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, at *42 (observing that class counsel would "likely incur hundreds of additional hours in connection with administering the settlement, without prospect for further fees"). That Class Counsel's fee request covers not only work that has been done to date, but also any such future work, makes the request that much more reasonable.

(f) Consistency with fee awards in comparable cases

The requested fee is consistent[45] with antitrust class actions in the Third Circuit, where attorneys' fee awards of one-third of the total settlement are commonplace, including cases where settlements exceed $100 million.[46] Other Circuits similarly support fees of one-third of the total value of settlements over $100 million.[47] Here, the fee request is even more reasonable because the request is actually far lower than one-third of the total value of the Settlement.

[43] See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 32.

[44] See, e.g., Boone, 668 F. Supp. 2d at 714 (class counsel's expenditure of roughly 2,858 hours of contingent work on the litigation justified their fee request); Bradburn, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 339 (class counsel's expenditure of more than four years, including more than 9,000 attorney hours and roughly 2,000 paralegal hours weighed in favor of awarding the requested fees).

[45] Gunter, 223 F.3d at 198 (identifying "comparing awards in similar cases" as an "important factor in fee-award cases").

[46] Supra at n.6.

[47] See, e.g., In re Titanium Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 2013 WL 6577029 at *1 (awarding one-third fee on settlement of $163.5 million); In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., No. 01-12239-WHY Dkt. No. 511-10 (D. Mass April 9, 2004) (awarding one-third fee on settlement of $175 million); In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1413, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26538 (S.D.N.Y. April 11, 2003) (awarding one-third fee on settlement of $220 million).

Indeed, even using the lower end of Dr. Singer's estimate of the value of the prospective relief ($260 million), the total value of the Settlement is at least $390 million, and thus the sought fee of $43.33 million is a mere 11.1% of the settlement value—well below the typical fee in analogous cases.

Consistent with the long-line of Third Circuit precedent, and in light of the fact the Plaintiffs are only seeking fees on the cash component of the Settlement, the requested fee here of one-third of the cash value of the Settlement and only 11.1% of the total value of the Settlement is fair, exceedingly reasonable and should be approved.

(g) Presence or absence of objections

As the Third Circuit noted in Gunter, the lack of a substantial number of objections is an important consideration in evaluating a fee request because "client's views regarding her attorneys' performance and their request for fees should be considered when determining a fee award."[48] Here, pursuant to the Preliminary Approval Order, on April 14, 2014, the Settlement Administrator mailed the detailed Long Form Notice to each member of the Settlement Class. On April 14, 2014, the Settlement Administrator also posted the Long Form Notice and other pertinent information on a website devoted to this case (truckstopantitrustsettlement.com) and submitted a summary version of the Notice (the Publication Notice) to NACS (National Association for Convenience and Fuel Retailing) Magazine, for its May 2014 issue and to NATSO for its weekly e-newsletters, which will run from April 14 to May 5, 2014. The Class Notice notified all Settlement Class members of: (1) the terms of the Settlement; (2) where additional information could be obtained; (3) Class Counsel's intention to seek attorneys' fees of one-third of the cash value of the Settlement, litigation costs of up to $7.5 million and service awards totaling $315,000; and (4) the means by which Settlement Class Members may object to any aspect of the Settlement, including the attorneys' fees motion and supporting papers. See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 28-29. Although the May 27, 2014 deadline for objections has not yet passed, as of April 30, 2014, there have not been any objections, and no entity has opted out. Id. ¶ 30. Courts have found that a low number of objectors is particularly telling in cases—such as this one—that involve sophisticated class members.[49] Furthermore, as noted above, representatives of the Buying Groups counting hundreds of Settlement Class members among their membership, affirmatively support the Settlement and the requested fee.[50] This factor thus weighs in favor of Plaintiffs' fee request.

2. Application of the Prudential factors

(a) The value of benefits accruing to class members attributable to the efforts of Class Counsel, as opposed to the efforts of others[51]

The development of this case depended entirely on the investigation and efforts of Class Counsel and, unlike many antitrust cases, did not follow on the heels of a government lawsuit or investigation. To the contrary, the federal government rebuffed industry efforts to investigate Comdata's two-tiered pricing strategy following its Fee Restructuring. Notably, Class Counsel did not simply challenge Comdata's two-tiered pricing—which was the main focus of industry complaints. Instead, Class Counsel developed factual and economic evidence of the alleged anticompetitive scheme including agreements by the Major Chains not to compete with Comdata and Comdata's imposition of anticompetitive anti-steering provisions on Settlement Class Members.[52] No government entity had prosecuted the claims Plaintiffs developed against Defendants in this matter.

[49] See, e.g., Bradburn, 513 F. Supp. 2d at 338 ("The absence of objections to the requested attorneys' fees in this case is particularly notable given the sophisticated nature of the absent Class Members."); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 WL 1221350, at *5 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) ("While in some cases a lack of objections may reflect the absence of counsel or unfamiliarity with the legal system, in this case class members are represented by counsel . . . [and] include many of the largest corporations in America—entities that are hardly unfamiliar with civil litigation.").

[51] See Prudential, 148 F.3d at 340.

That Plaintiffs survived two rounds of motions to dismiss and were positioned to oppose summary judgment based on a theory of liability developed by Class Counsel weighs heavily in favor of Class Counsel's fee request.[53]

(b) The percentage fee that would have been privately negotiated[54]

A one-third contingency fee is standard in individual litigation, could be more in an antitrust case, given the complexities and risks,[55] and represents the market rate for fee awards in large antitrust class actions,[56] thus would likely be the benchmark by which the parties would have privately negotiated a fee. This factor weighs in favor of granting Plaintiffs' motion—especially given that the sought fee is a mere 11.1% of the Settlement's value.

(c) Innovative terms[57]

Class Counsel expertly negotiated the details of an innovative Settlement Agreement, involving five years of prospective relief and Comdata's commitment to negotiate with each of the Buying Groups. As discussed above, a central aspect of Plaintiffs' claims included allegations that Comdata's agreements with both the Major Chains and members of the Settlement Class insulated Comdata from competition, allowing it to charge members of the Settlement Class supracompetitive transaction [52] Supra at 6-7.

[53] See AT&T Corp., 455 F.3d at 173 (where class counsel was not aided by the efforts of any governmental group, this strengthened the district court's conclusion that the fee award was fair and reasonable).

[55] See Remeron, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27013, at *46 ("[a]ttorneys regularly contract for contingent fees between 30% and 40% with their clients in non-class, commercial litigation").

fees.[58] The prospective relief included as part of the Settlement creates a legally binding commitment by Comdata not to include or enforce the very provisions in Comdata's merchant services agreements with both the Major Chains and Settlement Class Members that Plaintiffs had challenged in this case.[59] As such, the prospective relief will better allow for competition to reduce merchant fees to Settlement Class Members by removing the contractual prohibitions on steering that Plaintiffs had alleged insulated Comdata from competition. Dr. Singer has valued that innovative relief at between $260 million and $491 million. Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶¶ 8 (citing Singer Decl., ¶ 3, 20-29); Id. ¶ 10.

C. A Lodestar Cross-Check Confirms the Reasonableness of the Fee Request.

The Third Circuit has held that it is "sensible" for district courts to perform a lodestar cross-check to ensure that application of the percentage-of-recovery method does not result in a recovery that is too great.[60] Once the lodestar is calculated,[61] "[t]he total lodestar estimate is then divided into the proposed fee calculated under the percentage method. The resulting figure represents the lodestar multiplier to compare to multipliers in other cases."[62]

Using Class Counsel's current rates, the lodestar totals $49,785,073.74, which is greater than the $43,333,333 (plus interest) that Class Counsel seeks to recover here.[63] Thus, Plaintiffs are not requesting to receive any risk premium at all for their efforts in this contingent litigation as the lodestar multiplier is below 1. Typically, Class Counsel in cases of this type recover multipliers ranging from the 2-4, or higher.[64] That Class Counsel here would, if their request were granted, recover no multiplier at all despite the outstanding results for the Settlement Class, the length of the litigation, and the risks involved confirms and bolsters the reasonableness of the fee request.

[61] The lodestar is determined by multiplying the number of hours counsel reasonably expended by a reasonable billing rate for such services. Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 433 (1983); Maldonado v. Houstoun, 256 F.3d 181, 184 (3d Cir. 2001).

IV. THE COURT SHOULD APPROVE CLASS COUNSEL'S REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES

Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to reimbursement from that fund of the reasonable litigation expenses they advanced on behalf of the class.[65] Accordingly, Class Counsel request reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses incurred litigating the case.

Class Counsel expended $6,696,856.98 in out-of-pocket expenses, without any assurance of repayment, in litigating this case on behalf of the Settlement Class. By far the largest component of such expenses comprised of substantial and necessary payments to economic experts, who were essential to the prosecution of this case. Other significant expenses included costs associated with the storage of millions of pages of documents on a secure database and costs associated with travel to depositions, Court hearings and mediations around the country.[66] These expenses, as well as others routinely charged to hourly-fee-paying clients, such as court reporting expenses, photo and data copying charges, and computerized legal research costs, were reasonable and appropriate.[67]

Given that the expenses were incurred without guarantee of reimbursement, Class Counsel had strong incentive to keep them reasonable, and did so. Plaintiffs' request for reimbursement is supported by representatives of the four Buying Groups[68] and the Class Representatives.[69] Moreover, as of April 30, 2014, there had not been any objections filed by any Settlement Class Member.[70] Class Counsel should be reimbursed for their reasonably incurred expenses.[71]

V. THE REQUESTED SERVICE AWARD TO EACH CLASS REPRESENTATIVE IS REASONABLE

$15,000 for Mahwah. In the Third Circuit, service awards may be paid to class representatives to reward efforts that benefit the class.[72] In evaluating the appropriateness of such awards, courts consider: (i) the financial, reputational and personal risks to the plaintiff; (ii) the degree of plaintiffs' litigation responsibilities; (iii) the length of litigation; and, (iv) the degree to which the plaintiffs benefited as class members.[73]

The awards requested here are well deserved. As described more fully below, each of the Class Representatives has performed a "public service of contributing to the enforcement of mandatory laws."[74] Without the efforts of the Class Representatives, the Settlement Class would have recovered nothing. Furthermore, the amounts requested, while on the higher end, are appropriate in light of the risks and sacrifices made by the Class Representatives during the seven years this litigation was prosecuted and in light of the Class Representatives receiving relatively modest pro rata recoveries under the plan of allocation.[75]

As of April 30, 2014, no Settlement Class Member has objected to the requested service awards, which further confirms their reasonableness. Indeed, far from giving rise to objections, the requested service awards have garnered the affirmative support of the Buying Groups, representing hundreds of Settlement Class members. A representative of each Buying Group, each of whom has first-hand knowledge of the long struggle against Defendants in this case, has praised the work of the Class Representatives and has supported the requested service awards.[76]

Marchbanks Truck Service,[77] located in Bakersfield, California, served as a named plaintiff since this case was initially filed in March 2007, and has been appointed by the Court to serve as a Class Representative in this litigation. (Dkt. 705). Marchbanks Truck Service not only served without any guarantee of payment or compensation, it risked being cut off by Comdata, the dominant OTR Fleet Card provider.[78] That, combined with Marchbanks Truck Service's significant discovery obligations over the course of this seven-year litigation, justifies a substantial service award. As discussed below, the contributions of Marchbanks Truck Service—primarily through its owner Pat Marchbanks—go above and beyond the typical contributions of class representatives, warranting a large service award.

Since 2001, Pat Marchbanks has spearheaded efforts to ameliorate what he saw as unfair conduct by Defendants that was harming Independent truck stop operators. Mr. Marchbanks' efforts over many years ultimately led to the retention of Class Counsel and the bringing of this lawsuit.

As Class Representative in this case, Mr. Marchbanks spent hundreds of hours, often for days at a time, away from running his business: (1) assisting Class Counsel in the investigation and development of the initial complaint; (2) discussing case strategy with Class Counsel; (3) overseeing Class Counsel's prosecution of this litigation and settlement negotiations; (4) traveling to and attending nearly all Court hearings in the case; (5) traveling to and attending multiple settlement conferences and mediations; (6) communicating with Settlement Class members about the status of the litigation and answering countless questions from Settlement Class members and representatives of the Buying Groups; (7) reviewing and producing thousands of pages of documents; and (8) diligently preparing for, traveling to, and sitting for two depositions of himself. Marchbanks Truck Service was actually deposed three times in the case, including two depositions of Mr. Marchbanks and one of employee Kathy Simmons. In addition to diverting his attention away from his business to participate actively in and oversee this litigation, Mr. Marchbanks incurred over $15,000 in out-of-pocket expenses (for traveling to Court hearings and settlement conferences, for instance) without any guarantee of reimbursement. Co-Lead Counsel, Eric L. Cramer, summed up Mr. Marchbanks's incredible contributions to this litigation in his declaration as follows:

> In my almost twenty years representing classes of antitrust direct purchasers, Pat Marchbanks stands out as a superlative class representative. Mr. Marchbanks has been intimately involved and provided invaluable insight into almost every aspect of this litigation from the pre-complaint investigation through the negotiation of the Settlement. Mr. Marchbanks' unwavering support of this litigation for over seven years, willingness to travel across the country and away from his business to attend Court hearings, two rounds of depositions and several settlement conferences/mediations along with the irreplaceable industry insight and knowledge he was willing and able to share with Class Counsel are unmatched amongst class representatives in typical antitrust class actions. Mr. Marchbanks' dedication to serving the Settlement Class is not limited to his time and effort, he also incurred over $15,000 in expenses serving as a Class Representative. Despite having only a modest recovery to gain, Mr. Marchbanks remained ever vigilant in overseeing the prosecution of this case. It is my opinion that Mr. Marchbanks is deserving of a service award of at least $150,000.[79]

The exemplary efforts of Pat Marchbanks on behalf of the Settlement Class without any promise of remuneration or repayment of his expenses, supports the $150,000 service award sought by Class Counsel.

[79] See Cramer Co-Lead Decl., ¶ 46.

Krachey,[80] located in Prairie do Chien, Wisconsin, served as a named plaintiff since April 2007, and has been appointed by the Court to serve as a Class Representative in this litigation. (Dkt. 705). In doing so without any guarantee of recovery, Krachey risked being cut off by Comdata, the dominant OTR Fleet Card provider. In addition to putting business at risk, Krachey, primarily through Douglas Krachey (Krachey's Manager), dedicated a significant amount of time, energy and resources to assisting counsel in the prosecution of this litigation. For instance, Mr. Krachey was (a) actively involved in reviewing and assisting in the development of the initial complaint filed by Krachey in this action, (b) spent several hours meeting with Class Counsel regarding the allegations in this litigation and the OTR Fleet Card and Truck Stop industries generally, (c) expended at least 40 hours reviewing pleadings and other documents, (d) worked for several hours responding to eight sets of document requests, including approximately 173 separate documents requests served over a period of four years, and (e) spent approximately 55 hours associated with gathering documents for production responsive to multiple rounds of Defendants' document requests. In addition to the many hours spent reviewing pleadings and participating in discovery, Mr. Krachey spent six days away from his business to prepare and sit for two rounds of depositions and was involved in several phone calls regarding the settlement negotiations and approving the terms of the Settlement Agreement.

Krachey's unwavering support of this litigation on behalf of the Settlement Class without any promise of compensation for seven years more than supports the $75,000 service award for Krachey sought by Class Counsel.

[80] For a detailed recitation of Krachey's efforts on behalf of the Settlement Class, see the Krachey Decl.

Walt Whitman,[81] formerly located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, served as a named plaintiff since July 2007, and has been appointed by the Court to serve as a Class Representative in this litigation. (Dkt. 705). Walt Whitman is unique among the Class Representatives in that it was forced out of business[82] before the first complaint was filed in this case due, in part, to the conduct challenged as anticompetitive in this Action. Walt Whitman's efforts on behalf of the Settlement Class were undertaken without any promise of compensation, and without regard for Walt Whitman's damages being capped at the overcharges paid before it ceased operation in 2006. David Silverman, Walt Whitman's President, diligently and doggedly fulfilled Walt Whitman's duties as a Class Representative at significant personal expense. For instance, Mr. Silverman spent (a) approximately ten hours of his own time—he was no longer in the truck stop business—meeting with Class Counsel in advance of filing a complaint in this litigation, and (b) several hours discussing the settlement negotiations and Settlement Agreement with Class Counsel. Mr. Silverman also took time away from his employment and other business ventures to prepare and sit for two rounds of depositions. Notably, Mr. Silverman did so even though Walt Whitman was not in business between his first and second depositions. Additionally, Mr. Silverman spent 35 hours reviewing pleadings and other relevant legal documents, including discovery requests; responded to eight sets of document requests, including approximately 173 separate documents requests served over a period of four years, and spent at least 15 hours gathering documents for production.

[81] For a detailed recitation of Walt Whitman's efforts on behalf of the Settlement Class, see the Silverman Decl.

[82] Walt Whitman, continues to exist as a corporate entity, but no longer operates as a truck stop. Silverman Decl., ¶ 2.

Walt Whitman's efforts on behalf of the Settlement Class—particularly David Silverman's dedication of time and effort long after he left the truck stop business—warrant the $75,000 service award requested by Class Counsel.

Mahwah,[83] located in Mahwah, New Jersey, served as a named plaintiff since April 2007, and has been appointed by the Court to serve as a Class Representative in this litigation. (Dkt. 705). Mahwah risked being cut off by Comdata, the dominant OTR Fleet Card provider. In addition to putting its business at risk, representatives of Mahwah sat for two depositions, and Mahwah has produced thousands of pages of documents pursuant to numerous document requests from Defendants. Similarly, Mahwah has responded to several sets of interrogatory requests propounded by Defendants. Mahwah did so without any guarantee of compensation or repayment for the time its employees spent preparing for and sitting a deposition, responding to discovery requests and meeting with Class Counsel regarding the claims in this litigation. Mahwah's efforts in this litigation support the relatively modest $15,000 service award that Class Counsel seek here on behalf of Mahwah.

VI. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court approve the attorneys' fee and expense application and enter an order awarding counsel fees of $43,333,333 (plus a proportionate share of the interest thereon through the date of the award), and reimbursement of reasonably incurred expenses as they appear on the books and records of all of the firms acting as Class Counsel in this case in the amount of $6,696,856.98. Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Class Counsel also request the following service awards for the Class Representatives: $150,000 for Marchbanks Truck Service, $75,000 for Krachey, $75,000 for Walt Whitman and $15,000 for Mahwah.

IN RE: PLASMA-DERIVATIVE PROTEIN THERAPIES ANTITRUST LITIGATION This Document Relates To All Actions	Case No. 09 C 7666 MDL No. 2109 Judge Joan B. Gottschall Magistrate Judge Arlander Keys

[PROPOSED] ORDER GRANTING CLASS PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR INTERIM AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES

The Court, having considered Class Plaintiffs' Motion for Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses (the "Motion"), and the memorandum and declarations in support thereof, and after a duly noticed hearing, hereby finds that:

1. The Motion seeks an award of attorneys' fees of 33 1/3% of the $64,000,000 Settlement Fund created by the settlement payments from CSL Limited, CSL Behring LLC, CSL Plasma Inc. (collectively, "CSL") and the Plasma Protein Therapeutics Association ("PPTA") (collectively with CSL, "Settling Defendants"). Class Counsel Richard A. Koffman and Charles E. Tompkins, of Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC and Williams Montgomery & John Ltd., respectively, also seek an order awarding reimbursement of $4,095,879.19 in expenses incurred in connection with the prosecution of this action.

2. The amount of attorneys' fees requested is fair and reasonable under the "percentage-of-the-fund" method. This is confirmed by a lodestar "cross-check," which reveals a negative multiplier, based upon 92,281.66 hours of work and a collective lodestar of $37,033,138.22.

3. The attorneys' fees requested were entirely contingent upon success. Class Counsel risked time and effort, and advanced significant costs and expenses with no ultimate guarantee of compensation. The award of 33 1/3% is warranted for reasons set out in Class Counsel's moving papers.

4. Given the risks involved in this case, the effort put forth by Plaintiffs' Counsel, the level of sophistication of the work done, and the extraordinary results achieved for the Class, an award of 33 1/3% is justified.

5. The expenses sought, as detailed in the Joint Declaration attached to Plaintiffs' brief, were incurred in connection with the prosecution of the litigation for the benefit of the Class, and were reasonable and necessary.

6. Therefore, upon consideration of the Motion and accompanying declarations, and based upon all matters of record including the pleadings and papers filed in this action and oral argument given at the hearing on this matter, the Court hereby finds the following: (1) the attorneys' fees requested are reasonable and proper; and (2) the expenses requested were necessary, reasonable and proper.

7. IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND DECREED:

(a) Class Counsel are awarded attorneys' fees for distribution to Plaintiffs' Counsel in the amount of $21,333,333 equal to 33 1/3% of the $64,000,000 added to the Settlement Fund. Class Counsel may be paid 33 1/3% of $64,000,000 immediately upon entry of this Order.

(b) Plaintiffs' Counsel are awarded $4,095,879.19 in reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the prosecution of this action.

(c) The attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses shall be paid from the Settlement Fund.

(d) The attorneys' fees and expenses shall be allocated amongst Plaintiffs' Counsel by Class Counsel Richard A. Koffman and Charles E. Tompkins in a manner which, in Class Counsel's good-faith judgment, accurately reflects each of such Plaintiffs' Counsel's contributions to the establishment, prosecution, and resolution of this litigation.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 22 day of January, 2014

Class Counsel – Richard A. Koffman and Charles E. Tompkins, and their respective law firms[1] – initiated their investigation into the alleged conspiracy to restrict the supply of certain life-sustaining biologic therapies that are the subject of this antitrust suit nearly five years ago. In the intervening time, Class Counsel and their legal team have successfully filed a detailed Consolidated Amended Complaint, defeated two motions to dismiss, engaged in extensive discovery-related motion practice, reviewed more than 11 million pages of documents, taken and defended more than sixty depositions on three separate continents, retained and consulted two preeminent economists (and defended their depositions), submitted several hundred pages of briefing and other materials in support of Plaintiff's motion for class certification, and engaged in protracted, arm's length settlement negotiations lasting more than a year. This extraordinary effort paid off: on October 5, 2013, Class Counsel reached a $64 million settlement with Defendants CSL and the Plasma Protein Therapeutics Association ("PPTA"). As explained more fully in the concurrently filed Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Support of Final Approval of the Settlement, this is an excellent result for the Class.

Pursuant to the terms of the Settlement and Rule 23(h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Class Counsel respectfully submit this memorandum in support of their Motion for an Interim Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses from the Settlement Fund. As compensation for their considerable work on behalf of the Class, Class Counsel seek an award of one-third of the Settlement fund, $21,333,333.33.[2] Counsel respectfully submit that this fee is eminently fair and reasonable given that Plaintiffs' counsel have invested over 92,000 professional hours, valued at more than $37 million, and invested $4,095,879.19, all without any guarantee of payment.[3] This extraordinary investment apparently mirrors Defendants': CSL publicly acknowledged that it had spent more than $20 million in legal fees related to settling this suit, and expected to spend $20 million more if the case were litigated to conclusion. The three Defendants' total legal fees to date are likely in excess of $50 million.

To date, no Class Member has objected to either the proposed Settlement or to Class Counsel's request for fees or reimbursement of expenses.[4] Additionally, not a single class member opted out of the settlement before the December 9, 2013 opt-out deadline. Given the [3] Class Counsel recently notified the Court that a Settlement has been reached with the remaining Defendant, Baxter. Class Counsel intend to request a similar award of attorneys' fees from that settlement. The total fee award sought will be one-third of the combined settlements, and will be approximately equal to plaintiffs' counsel's fee lodestar in this matter. In light of the significant challenges and risks posed by this litigation, Class Counsel believe the overall fee requested to be eminently reasonable.

[4] The deadline for receipt of exclusions and objections is January 3, 2014. If any objections are received, they will be addressed in Class Counsel's reply submission, which will be filed on January 17, 2014.

sophisticated nature of most members of the Settlement Class, which include hospitals and national drug distributors with legal counsel of their own, the fact that none of them has opted out speaks volumes about the quality of the settlement and underscores the excellent result achieved by Class Counsel on behalf of the Class.

Taking into consideration the magnitude of Class Counsel's investment in this action, the risks and challenges posed by the litigation, and the outstanding result achieved for the Class, the requested fee is fair and reasonable whether measured as a percentage of the common fund or with respect to Class Counsel's lodestar, and is amply supported by the relevant case law.

ARGUMENT

I. THE REQUESTED ATTORNEYS' FEES ARE FAIR AND REASONABLE.

It is well-settled that attorneys who, by their efforts, create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to reasonable compensation for their services. Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980) ("a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole"); Florin v. Nationsbank of Ga., N.A. ("Florin I"), 34 F.3d 560, 563 (7th Cir. 1994) ("When a case results in the creation of a common fund for the benefit of the plaintiff class, the common fund doctrine allows plaintiffs' attorneys to petition the court to recover its fees out of the fund."). Courts have recognized that, in addition to providing just compensation, substantial counsel fees encourage forceful prosecution of cases. See Halverson v. Convenient Food Mart, Inc., 458 F.2d 927, 931 n.5 (7th Cir. 1972). Moreover, providing reasonable attorneys' fees in successful private antitrust actions promotes "[p]rivate antitrust litigation [which] is widely recognized as an effective supplement to government enforcement of the antitrust laws and contributes to the maintenance of a competitive economy." In re Clark Oil & Refining Corp. Antitrust Litig., 422 F.Supp. 503, 510 (E.D. Wis. 1976) citing Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 405 U.S. 251, 262 (1972).

In making the determination regarding the appropriate amount of attorneys' fees to be awarded to counsel who have successfully prosecuted litigation on behalf of a class, the Seventh Circuit has instructed:

> when deciding on appropriate fee levels in common-fund cases, courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time.

Taubenfeld v. Aon Corp. 415 F.3d 597, 599 (7th Cir. 2005); s*ee also In re Synthroid Mktg. Litig.*, 264 F.3d 712, 718 (7th Cir. 2001) (same). In affirming an award of fees equal to nearly one third of the settlement fund plus expenses, the Seventh Circuit considered, among others, the following factors: (1) "awards made by courts in other class actions" which "amount[ed] to 30-39% of the settlement fund"; (2) "the quality of legal services rendered"; and (3) "the contingent nature of the case." Taubenfeld, 415 F.3d at 600. An examination of these three factors demonstrates that an award of attorneys' fees equal to one-third the settlement amount is both fair and reasonable.

A. The Requested Fees are Fair and Reasonable as a Percentage of the Fund.

The Seventh Circuit has strongly endorsed the percentage of the fund method, pursuant to which fees are awarded as a percentage of the total recovery, because it most closely approximates the manner in which attorneys are compensated in the marketplace for contingent work. See Gaskill v. Gordon, 160 F.3d 361, 362 (7th Cir. 1998) ("When a class suit produces a fund for the class, it is commonplace to award the lawyers for the class a percentage of the fund

... in recognition of the fact that most suits for damages in this country are handled on the plaintiff's side on a contingent-fee basis").[5] The Seventh Circuit has also recognized "that there are advantages to utilizing the percentage method in common fund cases because of its relative simplicity of administration." Florin I, 34 F.3d at 566; In re Trans Union Corp. Privacy Litig., No. 00 C 4729, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116934, at *13 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 1, 2009), modified and remanded by, 629 F.3d 741 (7th Cir. 2011) (same); see also In re Cont'l Ill. Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 573 (7th Cir. 1992) (noting it is easier to award a percentage "than it would be to hassle over every item or category of hours and expenses and what multiple to fix and so forth").[6]

The fee award requested here, amounting to one-third of the recovery, is reasonable and well justified in light of the significant risks faced in the litigation, the obstacles overcome, and the quality of Class Counsel's work. Moreover, the requested fee is also plainly consistent with fee awards made by courts in other, similar cases. In complex class action cases like this one, percentages in the range of 33% to 40% of the recovery have been held appropriate within the Seventh Circuit. See Retsky Family Ltd. P'ship v. Price Waterhouse LLP, No. 97 C 7694, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20397, at *10 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 6, 2001) ("A customary contingency fee would range from 33 1/3% to 40% of the amount recovered."); Goldsmith v. Tech. Solutions Co., No.

percentage of the fund approach and award one-third the fund as attorneys' fees.

B. The Lodestar/Multiplier Method Confirms the Requested Attorneys' Fees are Fair and Reasonable

Using the lodestar/multiplier method as a cross-check confirms the appropriateness of the requested fees. See, e.g., In re Trans Union, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116934, at *6. The lodestar/multiplier method entails multiplying the number of hours each attorney or other professional expended on the case by his or her hourly rate to derive the lodestar figure. See,e.g., Great Neck, 212 F.R.D. at 411. The court then typically adjusts the lodestar, by applying a multiplier, to reflect factors such as the contingent nature of the case, the consequent risk of non-payment (or under-payment), and the quality of work performed.

"[A] risk multiplier is not merely available in a common fund case but mandated, if the court finds that counsel 'had no sure source of compensation for the services.'" Florin I, 34 F.3d at 565 (quoting In re Continental Ill. Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 569 (7th Cir. 1992)) ("the need for such an adjustment is particularly acute in class action suits").[9] There are numerous class actions in which plaintiffs' counsel expended thousands of hours and advanced significant litigation expenses and yet received no remuneration whatsoever, despite their hard work and expertise.

As the Seventh Circuit has emphasized, "court[s] must also be careful to sustain the incentive for attorneys to continue to represent such clients on an 'inescapably contingent' basis." Florin v. Nationsbank of Ga., N.A. ("Florin II"), 60 F.3d 1245, 1247 (7th Cir. 1995). See also Gaskill, 160 F.3d at 363 (recognizing contingent-fee contracts "shift part of the risk of loss from client to lawyer"). This is particularly true in complex antitrust matters, which are notoriously complex and risky, and frequently involve unpredictable "battles of experts." See In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., No. MDL 1261, 2004 WL 1221350, at *16 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (using a multiplier to "reflect the risks of nonpayment facing counsel, to serve as an incentive for counsel to undertake socially beneficial litigation, or as a reward to counsel for an extraordinary result" in a complex antitrust matter); see also Skelton v. Gen. Motors Corp., 860 F.2d 250, 253 (7th Cir. 1988) ("The stronger the defense, the higher the risk involved in bringing the suit and the greater the multiplier necessary to compensate plaintiff's attorney for bringing the action.").

From the very outset, no matter how strong Class Counsel believed the case to be, there existed the significant possibility Defendants might prevail on motion, at trial, or on appeal – and hence Class Counsel would receive no compensation for their work on behalf of the Class. Plainly, Class Counsel here were not "assured of a paycheck." See Florin II, 60 F.3d at 1247. Nonetheless, they collectively risked significant amounts of time and money to achieve a recovery for the Class.

Here, Plaintiffs' counsel collectively expended approximately 92,000 hours of professional time[10] prosecuting the Class's claims. Joint Decl. ¶ 23. Counsel's total lodestar, derived by multiplying the number of hours by each firm's historical[11] hourly rates, amounts to more than $37 million. Id. The requested fee of $21,333,333.33 reflects only a .58% multiplier. Id. ¶ 26. In other words, Class Counsel have at this time requested an interim award that is significantly less than the lodestar to date.[12] Given the risks Class Counsel embraced in bringing this case, and the overwhelming case law supporting the use of risk multipliers, the fees requested are plainly conservative and reasonable. As discussed in greater detail in the Joint Declaration, during the course of this litigation Class Counsel have, among other things:

- Researched the law pertinent to the claims against Defendants and the potential defenses thereto;
- Prepared a detailed and comprehensive amended complaint based on the extensive factual and expert information Class Counsel collected;
- Researched and drafted comprehensive briefs (and assembled supporting materials) in opposition to Defendants' motion to dismiss;
- Prepared and served numerous discovery requests on Defendants;

[10] Since it is customary to bill paralegals at hourly rates, it is appropriate to include their time in the lodestar. In re Cont'l, 962 F.2d at 569. Courts have recognized the economic value of using paralegals to do work that otherwise would be performed by attorneys. See id.; United States Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 887 F.2d 408, 416 (2d Cir. 1989).

[11] Courts have held use of current rates is appropriate to compensate counsel for the loss of use of funds. See Smith v. Vill. of Maywood, 17 F.3d 219, 221 (7th Cir. 1994) ("A court may elect to use … current rates … as acceptable compensation for the delay in payment of fees."); Heder v. City of Two Rivers, 255 F. Supp. 2d 947, 958 (E.D. Wis. 2003) ("awarding fees at the current rate … is an accepted method"). Class Counsel's use here of historical rates, in lieu of current rates, results in a smaller lodestar and a more conservative fee request.

[12] If the Court awards both the requested interim fee and the fee counsel will request on the Baxter settlement executed today, the total fee will approximately equal Plaintiffs' counsel's lodestar.

- Briefed and argued numerous discovery disputes before Magistrate Judge Keys (and resolved numerous other discovery disputes amicably without involving the Court);

- Prepared and served subpoenas for the production of documents on seventeen third parties;

- Filed FOIA requests with the United Stated Department of Health and Human Services and the Food and Drug Administration Center for Biologics Evaluation and Research for documents relevant to a shortage of Ig or albumin, and reviewed those documents.

- Engaged in protracted negotiation of discovery issues with Defendants and third parties including the negotiation of an ESI protocol and protective order as well as extensive briefing regarding the adequacy of Defendant PPTA's document production;

- Reviewed and analyzed over 11 million pages of documents produced in this litigation;

- Reviewed tens of thousands of pages of other information concerning the Plasma industry, including: (a) Market Research Bureau Reports; (b) transcripts from the Advisory Committee on Blood Safety and Availability; (c) the Defendants' press releases; (d) transcripts of CSL's and Baxter's quarterly analyst conference calls; (e) news articles regarding consolidation in the plasma industry and alleged shortages of products; and (f) materials from the Federal Trade Commission's investigation and complaint challenging CSL's proposed acquisition of Talecris;

- Defended the Class Representatives' depositions;

- Deposed more than sixty witnesses on three continents;

- Located and interviewed dozens of former employees of Defendants and leaders from relevant patient populations;

- Retained and consulted with two preeminent economists – Dr. Richard Frank and Dr. Raymond Hartman – to analyze the Class's claims, to examine whether the economics of the industry support the Class's theory of conspiracy, to estimate damages, and to assess various issues relating to proving damages;

- Prepared and filed the motions, briefs, and Declarations – totaling several hundred pages – in support of Class Certification;

- Conducted arm's-length settlement negotiations with Defendants' counsel;
- Prepared and negotiated the Settlement Agreement and relevant exhibits;
- Prepared the motions and briefs in support of Preliminary Approval and Final Approval of the proposed Settlement;
- Coordinated issuance of Notice and various settlement administration-related matters with the Claims Administrator and with the escrow agent that is presently holding the Settlement Fund assets in an interest-bearing account for the benefit of the Class; and
- Communicated with the Class Representatives with updates on litigation status throughout.

See Joint Decl. ¶¶ 5, 6, 15.

Class Counsel have made every effort to be efficient in litigating this Action. As much as possible, Class Counsel managed the assignment of work in this case to avoid unnecessarily duplicative or overlapping work. Where appropriate, work was assigned to junior lawyers, paralegals, and others with lower hourly rates.

Courts have held the hourly rates to be applied in calculating the lodestar are those normally charged for similar work by attorneys of comparable skill and experience in the community where the attorney practices. See In re Synthroid, 264 F.3d at 718 ("when deciding on appropriate fee levels in common-fund cases, courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time").[13] "The attorney's actual billing rate for comparable work is 'presumptively appropriate' to use as the market rate." Aspacher v. Rosenthal Collins Group, No. 00 C 7520, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19464, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 6, 2001) (quoting *People Who Care v. The hourly fee rates claimed by Plaintiffs' Counsel are the same as the regular rates historically charged for their services and which have been approved in other complex class action litigation. Joint Decl. ¶ 25. In short, the hours expended by Plaintiffs' Counsel, which produced the Settlement now before the Court, were reasonable in view of the work performed, the stage of the proceedings reached, and the complexity of the claims and defenses asserted.

Olsten Corp.*, 109 F.3d 111, 115 (2d Cir. 1997) ("[t]he 'lodestar' figure should be 'in line with those [rates] prevailing in the community for similar services by lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience, and reputation'"); In re NASDAQ Mkt.-

C. The Quality of Legal Services Rendered Supports the Fee Request

Class Counsel respectfully submit that they rendered superior representation to the Class through their efforts and persistence in litigating the Action. The "prosecution and management of a complex national class action requires unique legal skills and abilities." Edmonds v. United States, 658 F. Supp. 1126, 1137 (D.S.C. 1987). Class Counsel practice extensively in the highly challenging field of antitrust litigation and have skillfully litigated these types of actions in courts across the country. See Joint Decl. ¶ 27. This expertise proved essential in litigating the Class's claims.

Throughout the course of this case, Class Counsel were confronted with a number of legal and factual obstacles to establishing, among other things, an illegal conspiracy among Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 489 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (appropriate rate in performing lodestar analysis is "the rate 'normally charged for similar work by attorneys of like skill in the area,' taking into account factors such as the experience of the attorney performing the work and the type of work performed").

Defendants, antitrust impact, and damages. Defendants have consistently argued that Plaintiffs would not be able to prove Defendants agreed to reduce the supply of plasma-derivative protein therapies as opposed to merely acting interdependently in an oligopolistic market.

However, despite the complexity of the issues and the substantial difficulties of establishing liability and damages, Class Counsel helped the Class achieve an excellent recovery. It was only through the extensive efforts of Class Counsel in preparing a detailed amended complaint following a comprehensive investigation,[14] successfully opposing Defendants' motions to dismiss, and developing the claims with evidence derived from fact and expert discovery that Class Counsel were able to secure $64 million for the Class in this initial settlement (and more in connection with the Baxter settlement executed today).

D. To Date, No Class Member Has Objected to the Fee and Expense Request

In accordance with the Court's Order for Notice and Hearing, dated October 18, 2013, over 3000 copies of the Notice of (i) Pendency and Proposed Settlement of Class Action; (ii) Settlement Fairness Hearing; and (iii) Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses (the "Notice"), and the Proof of Claim and Release form were distributed to potential Class Members. See Declaration of David Garcia of Epiq, the Settlement

[14] Because Class Counsel are requesting fees only for the period post-dating the Court's appointment of the Plaintiffs' Steering Committee, Class Counsel have not included in this fee request the substantial time expended in investigating the Class's claims and drafting the Amended Complaint. Additionally, because counsel seek fees for their work on the case only through October 18, 2013, Class Counsel have ensured that no time spent preparing this fee request will be compensated. These facts once again underscore the conservative nature of Counsel's fee request.

Administrator in the Action, Regarding Mailing of the Notice and Proof of Claim; Publication of the Internet Ads; and Report on Requests for Exclusion, attached to Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of the CSL/PPTA Settlement as Exhibit 2, at ¶ 6. In addition, information regarding the settlement was posted on several websites[15] identified as regularly visited by class members. See id.

The Notice advised Class Members that Class Counsel would be seeking fees of up to 33 1/3% of the Settlement Fund and reimbursement of expenses. See Long-Form Notice at 7, attached as Exhibit A to Garcia Declaration. The Notice further apprised Class Members of their right to object to the motion for fees and expenses. The Court-established deadline for filing objections is January 3, 2014, and if any objections are received, they will be addressed in Class Counsel's reply submission to be filed on January 17, 2014. To date, no Class Member has objected. That not a single Class Member has objected to the motion for fees and expenses to date underscores the reasonableness of the fee and expense award sought, especially where, as here, the Class is comprised of many sophisticated hospitals and national distributors more than capable of objecting should they believe the requested fees to be unreasonable.[16] See In re Remeron, 2005 WL 3008808, at *13 ("The lack of objections from the Class supports the reasonableness of the fee request.").

[15] These websites included Hospital and Health Networks, HEM/ONC Today, Medical Economics, and Modern Healthcare

[16] As noted above, the fact that no class members opted out of the settlement by the December 9 deadline (or since) is a testament to the quality of the settlement achieved.

II. THE REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS AND EXPENSES IS FAIR AND REASONABLE.

Class Counsel seek reimbursement from the Settlement Fund of $4,095,879.19 in litigation expenses reasonably and actually incurred by Class Counsel in connection with commencing and prosecuting the claims against the Defendants. Courts regularly award reimbursement of the expenses counsel incurred in prosecuting the litigation. See Spicer v. Chicago Bd. Options Exch., Inc., 844 F. Supp. 1226, 1256 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (detailing and awarding expenses incurred during litigation); Miltland Raleigh-Durham v. Myers, 840 F. Supp. 235, 239 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) ("Attorneys may be compensated for reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred and customarily charged to their clients, as long as they 'were incidental and necessary to the representation' of those clients.").[17] In prosecuting this complex antitrust action, Class Counsel collectively have incurred litigation costs and expenses in the total amount of $4,095,879. Joint Decl. ¶ 32.

These costs and expenses were incidental and necessary to the prosecution of the Class's claims, and are detailed in the Joint Declaration (¶¶ 32-38) and the declarations in the Compendium. Two significant components of these expenses were (1) the retention of expert economists and (2) the maintenance of an electronic document database and review platform for electronic discovery. Indeed, these costs amount to 56% and 24% of the total expenses in the case, respectively. Id. ¶¶ 35-36. As these expenses were critical to achieving the excellent result obtained for the Class, and fully reasonable in light of the demands of complex antitrust litigation and the market for these types of litigation support services, Class Counsel ask that their expenses be reimbursed.

CONCLUSION

Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court approve their motion for an award of attorneys' fees equal to one third of the Settlement Fund to be paid out of the Settlement Fund (approximately $21.33 million). In addition, Class Counsel requests an award of $4,095,879.19 from the Settlement Fund for reimbursement of their actual costs and expenses incurred in connection with their representation of the Class in this Action.

Rule 23(h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 1

William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 14:6 (4th ed.) 7

This case involves allegations that the two largest manufacturers of life-sustaining biologic therapies conspired to restrict the supply and increase the prices of those therapies in violation of the antitrust laws. Following a lengthy pre-filing investigation, Class Counsel and their legal team have engaged in nearly five years of intensive litigation, during which they have: successfully filed a detailed Consolidated Amended Complaint; defeated two motions to dismiss; engaged in extensive discovery-related motion practice; reviewed more than 11 million pages of documents; taken and defended more than sixty depositions on three separate continents; retained and consulted two preeminent economists (and defended their depositions); submitted several hundred pages of briefing and other materials in support of Plaintiff's motion for class certification; and engaged in protracted, arm's length settlement negotiations with all three Defendants. All of these efforts have now come to fruition, as Class Counsel have reached a Settlement with the final remaining defendant, Baxter, for $64 million. This brings the total relief to the Class to $128 million. As explained more fully in the simultaneously filed Motion for Final Approval of the Baxter Settlement, this is a truly excellent result for the Class.

Class Counsel – Richard A. Koffman and Charles E. Tompkins, and their respective law firms[1] – hereby submit this memorandum in support of their Motion for a Final Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses pursuant to Rule 23(h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. As compensation for their considerable work on behalf of the [1] Class Counsel have been ably assisted throughout by a team of experienced attorneys from many of the nation's top plaintiffs' firms, including Liaison Counsel from Freeborn & Peters LLP.

Class, Class Counsel seek an award of one-third of the Settlement fund, $21,333,333.33.[2] Counsel respectfully submit that this fee is eminently fair and reasonable given that Plaintiffs' counsel have invested over 94,000 professional hours, valued at more than $37.75 million, and invested $5 million in out-of-pocket expenses, all without any guarantee of payment or reimbursement. This extraordinary investment apparently mirrors Defendants': Baxter stated in open Court that it had engaged one hundred contract attorneys to work on this matter[3] and CSL publicly acknowledged that it had spent more than $20 million in legal fees related to this suit, and expected to spend $20 million more if the case were litigated to conclusion. Applying simple mathematics and logic to these facts, the three Defendants' total legal fees to date are likely in excess of $50 million.

Counsel also asks that the Court approve an incentive award of $50,000 for each of the Class Representatives in this matter. The Class Representatives have collectively spent thousands of hours prosecuting this matter on behalf of the Class, and their efforts have been critical to the successful result achieved for the Class. The Class Representatives devoted significant resources to the case despite the fact that each of the Class Representatives'

[2] Attached as Exhibit 1 is the Joint Declaration of Richard A. Koffman and Charles E. Tompkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of Class Action Settlement and Plan of Allocation and Class Counsel's Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses, and Approval of Incentive Awards for Class Representatives (the "Joint Declaration" or "Joint Decl."), which contains a description of the history of the litigation, the claims asserted, the investigation and discovery undertaken, the negotiation and substance of the Settlement, and the substantial risks and uncertainties presented by and overcome in this litigation.

Class Counsel will submit shortly the detailed declarations and time entries for each Firm requesting attorneys' fees in this case for the Court's review in camera.

respective recoveries from the Settlement is comparatively small. The Class Representatives took seriously their responsibilities as "private attorneys general" enforcing the antitrust laws, and each took significant risks and made enormous sacrifices to that end. As the requested incentive awards collectively amount to only .1% of the total recovery to the Class and individually are de minimus in relation to the recovery obtained by other members of the Class, the requested payments are both justified and reasonable.

To date, no Class Member has objected to either the proposed Settlement, to Class Counsel's request for fees and expenses, or to the award of $50,000 to each of the Class Representatives.[4] Additionally, not a single class member opted out of the settlement before the March 3, 2014 opt-out deadline. Given the sophisticated nature of most members of the Settlement Class, which include hospitals and national drug distributors with legal counsel of their own, the fact that none of them has opted out speaks volumes about the quality of the settlement and underscores the excellent result achieved by Class Counsel and the Class Representatives.

Both Class Counsel and the Class Representatives devoted tremendous time and effort to the prosecution of the Class's claims, and their efforts paid off. The requested attorneys' fees and incentive awards are both conservative and amply justified in light of the investment, risks, and excellent results obtained for the Class.

[4] The deadline for objections is March 31, 2014. If any objections are received, they will be addressed in Class Counsel's reply submission, which will be filed on April 14, 2014.

ARGUMENT

I. THE REQUESTED ATTORNEYS' FEES ARE FAIR AND REASONABLE.

It is well-settled that attorneys who, by their efforts, create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to reasonable compensation for their services. Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980) ("a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole"); Florin v. Nationsbank of Ga., N.A. ("Florin I"), 34 F.3d 560, 563 (7th Cir. 1994) ("When a case results in the creation of a common fund for the benefit of the plaintiff class, the common fund doctrine allows plaintiffs' attorneys to petition the court to recover its fees out of the fund."). Courts have recognized that, in addition to providing just compensation, substantial counsel fees encourage forceful prosecution of cases. See Halverson v. Convenient Food Mart, Inc., 458 F.2d 927, 931 n.5 (7th Cir. 1972). Moreover, providing reasonable attorneys' fees in successful private antitrust actions promotes "[p]rivate antitrust litigation [which] is widely recognized as an effective supplement to government enforcement of the antitrust laws and contributes to the maintenance of a competitive economy." In re Clark Oil & Refining Corp. Antitrust Litig., 422 F. Supp. 503, 510 (E.D. Wis. 1976), citing Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., 405 U.S. 251, 262 (1972).

In making the determination regarding the appropriate amount of attorneys' fees to be awarded to counsel who have successfully prosecuted litigation on behalf of a class, the Seventh Circuit has instructed: "[W]hen deciding on appropriate fee levels in common-fund cases, courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time." Taubenfeld v. Aon

Corp., 415 F.3d 597, 599 (7th Cir. 2005); s*ee also In re Synthroid Mktg. Litig.*, 264 F.3d 712, 718 (7th Cir. 2001) (same). In affirming an award of fees equal to nearly one-third of the settlement fund plus expenses, the Seventh Circuit considered, among others, the following factors: (1) "awards made by courts in other class actions" which "amount[ed] to 30-39% of the settlement fund"; (2) "the quality of legal services rendered"; and (3) "the contingent nature of the case." Taubenfeld, 415 F.3d at 600. An examination of these three factors demonstrates that an award of attorneys' fees equal to one-third the settlement amount is both fair and reasonable.

A. The Requested Fees are Fair and Reasonable as a Percentage of the Fund.

The Seventh Circuit has strongly endorsed the percentage of the fund method, pursuant to which fees are awarded as a percentage of the total recovery, because it most closely approximates the manner in which attorneys are compensated in the marketplace for contingent fee work. See Gaskill v. Gordon, 160 F.3d 361, 362 (7th Cir. 1998) ("When a class suit produces a fund for the class, it is commonplace to award the lawyers for the class a percentage of the fund . . . in recognition of the fact that most suits for damages in this country are handled on the plaintiff's side on a contingent-fee basis").[5] The Seventh Circuit has also recognized "that there are advantages to utilizing the percentage method in common fund cases because of its relative simplicity of administration." Florin I, 34 F.3d at 566; In re Trans Union Corp. Privacy Litig., No. 00 C 4729, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116934, at *13 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 1, 2009), modified and remanded by, 629 F.3d 741 (7th Cir. 2011) (same); see also In re Cont'l Ill. Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 573 (7th Cir. 1992) (noting it is easier to award a percentage "than it would be to hassle over every item or category of hours and expense and what multiple to fix and so forth").[6]

The fee award requested here, amounting to one-third of the recovery, is reasonable and well justified in light of the significant risks faced in the litigation, the obstacles overcome, and the quality of Class Counsel's work. Moreover, the requested fee is also plainly consistent with fee awards made by courts in other, similar cases. In complex class action cases like this one, percentages in the range of 33% to 40% of the recovery have been held appropriate within the Seventh Circuit. See Retsky Family Ltd. P'ship v. Price Waterhouse LLP, No. 97 C 7694, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20397, at *10 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 6, 2001) ("A customary contingency fee would range from 33 1/3% to 40% of the amount recovered."); Goldsmith v. Tech. Solutions Co., No. 92 C 4374, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15093, at *27 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 10, 1995) ("Thus, where the percentage method is utilized, courts in this District commonly award attorneys' fees equal to approximately one-third or more of the recovery.").[7] Moreover, an award of one-third the

Apr. 24, 2012) (awarding one-third of recovery as attorneys' fees); In re Ready–Mixed Concrete Antitrust Litig., No. 1:05-cv-00979-SEB-TAB, 2010 WL 3282591, at *3 (S.D. Ind. Aug. 17, 2010) (awarding 33.3% of the common fund as fees in direct-purchaser antitrust action); Taubenfeld, 415 F.3d at 598 (affirming award of 30%); McKinnie v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 678 F. Supp. 2d 806, 816 (E.D. Wis. 2009) (awarding 30% of common fund); Great Neck Capital Appreciation Inv. P'ship, L.P. v. PricewaterhouseCoopers, L.L.P., 212 F.R.D. 400, 417 (E.D. Wis. 2002) (approving 30% fee award); Retsky, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20397, at *10 - *11 (awarding 33 1/3% of fund); Goldsmith, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS Settlement is consistent with other complex antitrust actions involving the pharmaceutical industry. See, e.g., In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. Civ. 03-0085 FSH, 2005 WL 3008808, at *12 - *14 (D. N.J. Nov. 9, 2005) (33.3% in direct-purchaser antitrust suit in pharmaceutical industry).[8] Finally, "Empirical studies show that, regardless whether the percentage method or the lodestar method is used, fee awards in class actions average around one-third of the recovery." William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 14:6 (4th ed.). Accordingly, Class Counsel request that the court adopt the percentage of the fund approach – as it did with respect to the prior Settlement with CSL and PPTA – and award one-third of the Settlement fund as attorneys' fees.

B. The Lodestar/Multiplier Method Confirms the Requested Attorneys' Fees are Fair and Reasonable

Using the lodestar/multiplier method as a cross-check confirms the appropriateness of the requested fees. See, e.g., In re Trans Union, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116934, at *6. The lodestar/multiplier method entails multiplying the number of hours each attorney or other professional expended on the case by his or her hourly rate to derive the lodestar figure. See, e.g., Great Neck, 212 F.R.D. at 411. The court then typically adjusts the lodestar, by applying a multiplier, to reflect factors such as the contingent nature of the case, the consequent risk of non-payment (or under-payment), and the quality of work performed.

Apr. 15, 1993) (32% of settlement or $1.3 million); see also In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 671 F. Supp. 2d 467, 516 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (33.3% of $586 million settlement).

Apr. 9, 2004), ECF No. 297 (awarding 33.3% fee of a $175 million settlement); Minute Order and Final Judgment, In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig., 211 F.R.D. 249, No. 01-CV-07951 (JGK) (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 17, 2003) (awarding a 33.3% fee of a $220 million settlement); Final Order and Judgment Approving Settlement Between Class Plaintiff and Defendant Bristol-Myers Squibb Company at §14, North Shore Hematology-Oncology Assoc., P.C. v. Bristol Myers Squibb Co., No. 1:04-cv-248 (EGS) (D.D.C. Nov. 30, 2004), ECF No. 30 (awarding a 33.3% fee of a $50 million settlement); Order and Final Judgment at §24, In re Terazosin Hydrocholride Antitrust Litig., 352 F. Supp. 2d 1279, No. 99-MD-1317 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 19, 2005), ECF No. 1557; (awarding a 33.3% fee of a $72.5 million settlement).

"[A] risk multiplier is not merely available in a common fund case but mandated, if the court finds that counsel 'had no sure source of compensation for the services.'" Florin I, 34 F.3d at 565 (quoting In re Continental Ill. Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 569 (7th Cir. 1992)) ("the need for such an adjustment is particularly acute in class action suits").[9] There are numerous class actions in which plaintiffs' counsel expended thousands of hours and advanced significant litigation expenses and yet received no remuneration whatsoever, despite their hard work and expertise. At the outset of this litigation, there was no guarantee this would not be one of those class actions.

As the Seventh Circuit has emphasized, "court[s] must also be careful to sustain the incentive for attorneys to continue to represent such clients on an 'inescapably contingent' basis." Florin v. Nationsbank of Ga., N.A. ("Florin II"), 60 F.3d 1245, 1247 (7th Cir. 1995) (quoting In re Continental Ill. Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d at 569). See also Gaskill, 160 F.3d at 363 (recognizing contingent-fee contracts "shift part of the risk of loss from client to lawyer"). This is particularly true in complex antitrust matters, which are notoriously complex and risky, and frequently involve unpredictable "battles of experts." See, e.g., In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., No. MDL 1261, 2004 WL 1221350, at *16 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (using a multiplier to "reflect the risks of nonpayment facing counsel, to serve as an incentive for counsel to undertake socially beneficial litigation, or as a reward to counsel for an extraordinary result" in a complex antitrust matter); see also Skelton v. Gen. Motors Corp., 860 F.2d 250, 253 (7th Cir. 1988) ("The stronger the defense, the higher the risk involved in bringing the suit and the greater the multiplier necessary to compensate plaintiff's attorney for bringing the action.").

Supp. 410, 414 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("Because counsel who rendered services were not being compensated for their work as it was being performed and because of the significant risk that they might never receive any compensation if the action was unsuccessful, courts have, when warranted, applied a multiplier to the lodestar to arrive at a fair contingent fee.").

From the very outset, no matter how strong Class Counsel believed the case to be, there existed the significant possibility Defendants might prevail on motion, at trial, or on appeal – and hence Class Counsel would receive no compensation for their work on behalf of the Class. Plainly, Class Counsel here were not "assured of a paycheck." See Florin II, 60 F.3d at 1247. Nonetheless, they collectively risked significant amounts of time and money to achieve a recovery for the Class.

Here, Plaintiffs' counsel collectively expended approximately 94,000 hours of professional time[10] prosecuting the Class's claims. Joint Decl. ¶ 24. Counsel's total lodestar, derived by multiplying the number of hours by each firm's historical hourly rates, amounts to approximately $39 million. Id. The requested fee of $21,333,333.33 reflects only a .56%

[10] Since it is customary to bill paralegals at hourly rates, it is appropriate to include their time in the lodestar. In re Cont'l, 962 F.2d at 569. Courts have recognized the economic value of using paralegals to do work that otherwise would have to be performed by attorneys. See id.; United States Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 887 F.2d 408, 416 (2d Cir. 1989).

multiplier. Id. ¶ 26. However, this Court approved an identical award from the CSL/PPTA Settlement. See Dkt. No. 693. Taking that award, along with the award requested here, into consideration, Class Counsel have requested a total fee only slightly larger than their total lodestar in the case – a multiplier of approximately 1.13. This is particularly conservative given that Class Counsel's lodestar was calculated using historical rates and includes only time invested since this Court's appointment of Plaintiffs' Steering Committee.[11] Courts have held use of current rates is appropriate to compensate counsel for the loss of use of funds. See Smith v. Vill. of Maywood, 17 F.3d 219, 221 (7th Cir. 1994) ("A court may elect to use . . . current rates . . . as acceptable compensation for the delay in payment of fees."); Heder v. City of Two Rivers, 255 F. Supp. 2d 947, 958 (E.D. Wis. 2003) ("awarding fees at the current rate . . . . is an accepted method"). Using current rates rather than historical rates, and including time spent on pre-filing investigations, the total fees sought from both settlements would likely be less than Class Counsel's lodestar.

Given the risks Class Counsel embraced in bringing this case, and the overwhelming case law supporting the use of risk multipliers, the fees requested are plainly conservative and reasonable. As discussed in greater detail in the Joint Declaration, during the course of this litigation Class Counsel have, among other things:

- Researched the law pertinent to the claims against Defendants and the potential

[11] Class Counsel, in an effort to be conservative in their billing, have included in their fee applications only time spent since this Court's appointment of Plaintiffs' Steering Committee, thereby excluding significant time spent on counsel's pre-filing investigations and briefing of leadership issues. Additionally, Class Counsel have not sought compensation for time spent preparing this and their previous application for attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses.

defenses thereto;

- Prepared a detailed and comprehensive amended complaint based on the extensive factual and expert information Class Counsel collected;
- Researched and drafted comprehensive briefs (and assembled supporting materials) in opposition to Defendants' motion to dismiss;
- Prepared and served numerous discovery requests on Defendants;
- Briefed and argued numerous discovery disputes before Magistrate Judge Keys (and resolved numerous other discovery disputes amicably without involving the Court);
- Prepared and served subpoenas for the production of documents on seventeen third parties;
- Filed FOIA requests with the United Stated Department of Health and Human Services and the Food and Drug Administration Center for Biologics Evaluation and Research for documents relevant to a shortage of Ig or albumin, and reviewed those documents.
- Engaged in protracted negotiation of discovery issues with Defendants and third parties including the negotiation of an ESI protocol and protective order as well as extensive briefing regarding the adequacy of Defendant PPTA's document production;
- Reviewed and analyzed over 11 million pages of documents produced in this litigation;
- Reviewed tens of thousands of pages of other information concerning the Plasma industry, including: (a) Market Research Bureau Reports; (b) transcripts from the Advisory Committee on Blood Safety and Availability; (c) the Defendants' press releases; (d) transcripts of CSL's and Baxter's quarterly analyst conference calls; (e) news articles regarding consolidation in the plasma industry and alleged shortages of products; and (f) materials from the Federal Trade Commission's investigation and complaint challenging CSL's proposed acquisition of Talecris;
- Defended the Class Representatives' depositions;
- Deposed more than sixty witnesses on three continents;
- Located and interviewed former employees of Defendants and leaders from relevant patient populations;

- Retained and consulted two preeminent economists – Dr. Richard Frank and Dr. Raymond Hartman – to analyze the Class's claims, to examine whether the economics of the industry support the Class's theory of conspiracy, to estimate damages, and to assess various issues relating to proving damages;
- Prepared and filed the motions, briefs, and Declarations – totaling several hundred pages – in support of Class Certification;
- Conducted arm's-length settlement negotiations with Defendants' counsel;
- Prepared and negotiated the Settlement Agreements and relevant exhibits;
- Prepared the motions and briefs in support of Preliminary Approval and Final Approval of the proposed Settlements;
- Coordinated issuance of Notice and various settlement administration-related matters with the Claims Administrator and with the escrow agent that is presently holding the Settlement Fund assets in an interest-bearing account for the benefit of the Class; and
- Communicated with the Class Representatives with updates on litigation status throughout.

See Joint Decl. ¶ 7.

Class Counsel have made every effort to be efficient in litigating this Action. As much as possible, Class Counsel managed the assignment of work in this case to avoid unnecessarily duplicative or overlapping work. Where appropriate, work was assigned to junior lawyers, paralegals, and others with lower hourly rates, and hourly rates for first-level document review were capped at $400/hr., even for senior attorneys who typically bill at higher hourly rates.

Courts have held the hourly rates to be applied in calculating the lodestar are those normally charged for similar work by attorneys of comparable skill and experience in the community where the attorney practices. See In re Synthroid, 264 F.3d at 718 ("when deciding on appropriate fee levels in common-fund cases, courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time").[12] "The attorney's actual billing rate for comparable work is 'presumptively appropriate' to use as the market rate." Aspacher v. Rosenthal Collins Grp., No. 00 C 7520, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19464, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 6, 2001) (quoting People Who Care v. Rockford Bd. of Educ., 90 F.3d 1307, 1310 (7th Cir. 1996)). See also In re Cont'l, 962 F.2d at 569 ("lawyers . . . are entitled to be compensated at market rates").

The hourly fee rates claimed by Plaintiffs' Counsel are the same as the regular rates historically charged for their services and which have been approved in other complex class action litigation. Joint Decl. ¶ 26. In short, the hours expended by Plaintiffs' Counsel, which produced the Settlement now before the Court, were reasonable in view of the work performed, the stage of the proceedings reached, and the complexity of the claims and defenses asserted.

C. The Quality of Legal Services Rendered Supports the Fee Request

Class Counsel respectfully submit that they rendered superior representation to the Class through their efforts and persistence in litigating the Action. The "prosecution and management of a complex national class action requires unique legal skills and abilities." Edmonds v. United States, 658 F. Supp. 1126, 1137 (D.S.C. 1987). Class Counsel practice extensively in the highly

Flynn*, 786 F.2d 320, 324 (7th Cir. 1986) ("[w]hen the 'prevailing' method of compensating lawyers for 'similar services' is the contingent fee, then the contingent fee is the 'market rate'") (internal citations not included); Luciano v. Olsten Corp., 109 F.3d 111, 115 (2d Cir. 1997) ("[t]he 'lodestar' figure should be 'in line with those [rates] prevailing in the community for similar services by lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience, and reputation'") (quoting Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 895 n.11 (1984)); In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 489 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (appropriate rate in performing lodestar analysis is "the rate 'normally charged for similar work by attorneys of like skill in the area,' taking into account factors such as the experience of the attorney performing the work and the type of work performed") (quoting City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 560 F.2d 1093, 1098 (2d Cir. 1977)) .

challenging field of antitrust litigation and have skillfully litigated these types of actions in courts across the country. See Joint Decl. ¶ 28. This expertise proved essential in litigating the Class's claims.

Throughout the course of this case, Class Counsel were confronted with a number of legal and factual obstacles to establishing, among other things, an illegal conspiracy among Defendants, class-wide antitrust impact, and damages. Defendants have consistently argued that Plaintiffs would not be able to prove Defendants agreed to reduce the supply of plasma-derivative protein therapies, as opposed to merely acting interdependently in an oligopolistic market. Had the case not settled, Defendants undoubtedly would have contested class-wide impact and damages, as well.

However, despite the complexity of the issues and the substantial difficulties of establishing liability and damages, Class Counsel helped the Class achieve an excellent recovery. Only the skillful and persistent efforts of Class Counsel enabled the Class to secure $64 million in this final settlement and $128 million in total.

D. To Date, No Class Member Has Objected to the Fee and Expense Request

In accordance with the Court's Order for Notice and Hearing, dated January 8, 2014, more than 2000 copies of the Notice of (i) Pendency and Proposed Settlement of Class Action; (ii) Settlement Fairness Hearing; and (iii) Motion for Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses and Approval of Incentive Awards for the Class Representatives (the "Notice"), and the Proof of Claim and Release form were distributed to potential Class Members. See Declaration of Lauren Edwardson of Epiq, the Settlement Administrator in the Action, Regarding Mailing of the Notice and Proof of Claim; Publication of the Internet Ads; and Report on Requests for Exclusion, attached to Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of the Baxter Settlement as Exhibit 2, at ¶¶ 5-6. In addition, information regarding the settlement was posted on several websites[13] identified as regularly visited by class members. See id ¶¶ 12-15.

The Notice advised Class Members that Class Counsel would be seeking fees of up to 33 1/3% of the Settlement Fund and reimbursement of expenses, along with $50,000 incentive awards for each Class Representatives. See Long-Form Notice at 7, attached as Exhibit A to Garcia Declaration. The Notice further apprised Class Members of their right to object to the motion for fees and expenses. The Court-established deadline for filing objections is March 31, 2014, and if any objections are received, they will be addressed in Class Counsel's reply submission to be filed on April 14, 2014. To date, no Class Member has objected. That not a single Class Member has objected to the motion for fees and expenses to date underscores the reasonableness of the fee and expense award sought, especially where, as here, the Class is comprised of many sophisticated hospitals and national distributors more than capable of objecting should they believe the requested fees to be unreasonable.[14] See In re Remeron, 2005 WL 3008808, at *13 ("The lack of objections from the Class supports the reasonableness of the fee request.").

II. THE REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS AND EXPENSES IS FAIR AND REASONABLE.

Class Counsel seek reimbursement from the Settlement Fund of $280,971.12 in litigation expenses reasonably and actually incurred by Class Counsel in connection with commencing and prosecuting the claims against the Defendants. Courts regularly award reimbursement of the expenses counsel incurred in prosecuting the litigation. See Spicer v. Chicago Bd. Options Exch., Inc., 844 F. Supp. 1226, 1256 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (detailing and awarding expenses incurred during litigation); Miltland Raleigh-Durham v. Myers, 840 F. Supp. 235, 239 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) ("Attorneys may be compensated for reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred and customarily charged to their clients, as long as they 'were incidental and necessary to the representation' of those clients.") (quoting Reichman v. Bonsignore, Brignati & Mazzotta, P.C., 818 F.2d 278, 283 (2d Cir. 1987)).[15] The vast majority of Class Counsel's expenses (more than $4.5 million) were reimbursed out of the prior CSL/PPTA Settlement. The remaining expenses, detailed more fully in the Joint Declaration and declarations attached to the compendium, reflect primarily: (1) the maintenance of Plaintiffs' document database, (2) conferences with Plaintiffs' experts to resolve Settlement notice and administration matters, and (3) travel for Court-ordered hearings, and (4) copying and mailing expenses related to court filings. Joint Decl. ¶¶ 36-39. As these expenses were critical to achieving the excellent result obtained for the Class, and fully reasonable in light of the demands of complex antitrust litigation and the market for these types of litigation support services, Class Counsel ask that their remaining unreimbursed expenses be reimbursed from the Settlement fund.

[13] These websites included Hospital and Health Networks, HEM/ONC Today, Medical Economics, and Modern Healthcare.

[14] As noted above, the fact that no class members opted out of the settlement by the March 3 deadline (or since) is a testament to the quality of the settlement achieved.

[15] In re Ikon Office Solutions, Inc. Sec. Litig., 194 F.R.D. 166, 192 (E.D. Pa. 2000) ("Counsel for each firm has submitted an affidavit attesting to the unreimbursed expenses paid out, and the court sees no reason to disallow any particular category or claim.").

III. INCENTIVE AWARDS FOR THE CLASS REPRESENTATIVES ARE WARRANTED AND THE AMOUNT REQUESTED IS REASONABLE.

"Incentive awards are justified when necessary to induce individuals to become named representatives." Synthroid , 264 F.3d at 722–23. In determining whether incentive awards are appropriate, "relevant factors include the actions the plaintiff has taken to protect the interests of the class, the degree to which the class has benefitted from those actions, and the amount of time and effort the plaintiff expended in pursuing the litigation." Cook v. Niedert, 142 F.3d 1004, 1016 (7th Cir. 1998); Spicer v. Chicago Bd. Options Exch., Inc., 844 F. Supp. 1226, 1267 (N.D. Ill.1993).

Here, incentive payments of $50,000 to each of the Class Representatives are reasonable and appropriate. To begin, simply by agreeing to serve as a named plaintiff the Class Representatives opened themselves up to scrutiny and attention which, in and of itself, has been found worthy of some type of remuneration. See Schulte v. Fifth Third Bank, 805 F.Supp. 2d 560, 600-01 (N.D. Ill. 2011). But the efforts of the Class Representatives in this matter went much further than this. All three Class Representatives provided essential assistance in the litigation by locating and producing responsive documents and information, participating in teleconferences and meetings with counsel, making employees available to counsel, preparing for and sitting for depositions, maintaining expensive legacy document systems, and participating in a quarterly review of their document retention policies to ensure compliance with the Court-ordered litigation hold. Decl. of Linda S. Tyler in Support of Petition for Incentive Award to Named Plaintiff University of Utah (attached hereto as Exhibit 3); Decl. of Giteshchandra Patel in Support of Petition for Incentive Award to Named Plaintiff Ravi Patel,

M.D., Inc. d/b/a Comprehensive Blood and Cancer Center (attached hereto as Exhibit 4); Decl. of LCDA. Moraima Torres Toro in Support of Petition for Incentive Award to Named Plaintiff Hospital Damas, Inc. (attached hereto as Exhibit 5). This substantial effort was time-consuming: each of the three named plaintiffs spent hundreds of hours in the prosecution of this case. Id.

Not only did the Class Representatives exert this tremendous effort despite the understanding that their individual recovery was likely to be small, they did so knowing that such an effort would require them to invest significant time and resources to benefit the Class as a whole. It additionally bears mention that the Class Representatives undertook this effort despite a risk that the Defendants, who the Class Representatives remained dependent upon for the purchase of medication and therapies throughout the litigation, would retaliate against them in some manner.[16] Given the substantial efforts involved in serving as a Class Representative in this litigation and the risks of retaliation, it is not surprising that there is no evidence that any member of the Class was willing to serve as a named plaintiff absent the possibility of an incentive award. Joint Decl. ¶¶ 40-41. As such, this is precisely the type of case in which the Seventh Circuit has found incentive payments to be appropriate. See Synthroid , 264 F.3d at 722–23

Notably, the incentive awards requested here collectively amount to only .1% of the total recovery to the Class – an almost negligible percentage. Reducing each class member's recovery by 0.1% to compensate the Class Representatives for the risks and efforts they undertook to benefit the Class as a whole is more than reasonable under the circumstances of this case. See Cook, 142 F.3d at 1016 (7th Cir. 1998) (approving settlement that amounted to .19% of Settlement Fund); In re Lawnmower Engine Horsepower Marketing & Sales Practices Litig., 733 F. Supp. 2d 997, 1016 (E.D. Wis. 2010) (approving incentive payments to class representatives where the total award "is only a tiny percentage (0.12%) of the class's overall recovery"). Moreover, it bears mention that the requested incentive awards amount to a small fraction of the recoveries obtained by many of the larger Class members. Here, the recovery for some members of the Class is measured in the millions of dollars. Thus, there is no concern that the Class Representatives will be disproportionately compensated. Kaufman v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs. Co., Inc., 264 F.R.D. 438, 448 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (refusing to award incentive payments 125 times greater than the maximum recovery of any similar Class member). Indeed, as discussed previously, were the requested incentive award unfair or unreasonable in any way, it is highly likely that absent class members would have objected. That they did not serves only to reinforce the appropriateness of the requested award.

[16] To Defendants' credit, there is no evidence of such retaliation in this matter, but each Class Representative ran the risk of retaliation by stepping forward to prosecute these claims on behalf of the Class.

Finally, $50,000 incentive awards are reasonable in light of the efforts required and the recovery obtained for the Class. See Cook, 142 F.3d at 1016 (affirming incentive award of $25,000 of $13 million Settlement fund); Lucken Family Ltd. P'ship, LLLP, v. Ultra Res., Inc., 09-cv-01543-REB-KMT, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144366, at *16-*17 (D. Colo. Dec. 22, 2010) (noting Enterprise Energy Corp. v. Columbia Gas Transmission Corp., 137 F.R.D. 240, 251 (S.D. Ohio 1991) (approving incentive awards of $50,000 for each of 6 class representatives, for a total of $300,000 out of a settlement fund of $56.6 million, which was 0.56% of the common fund) and In re Mego Financial Corp. Sec. Litig., 213 F.3d 454, 463 (9th Cir. 2000) (approving

$5,000 incentive award to each plaintiff where settlement was valued at $1.75 million)).[17]

The efforts of the Class Representatives were absolutely essential to the Class's recovery, see Joint Decl. ¶¶ 40-41, and the Class Representatives should be rewarded accordingly. See Cook, 142 F.3d at 1016 (7th Cir. 1998).

CONCLUSION

Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court approve their motion for an award of attorneys' fees equal to one third of the Settlement Fund (approximately $21.33 million). In addition, Class Counsel requests an award of $280,971.12 from the Settlement Fund for reimbursement of their actual costs and expenses incurred in connection with their representation of the Class in this Action and not previously reimbursed. Finally, Counsel asks that the Court grant their request to award each of the three Class Representatives $50,000 in recognition of their significant efforts on behalf the Settlement Classes.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER
08-cv-42 (JG) (VVP)

JOHN GLEESON, United States District Judge:

This putative class action alleges a conspiracy to fix prices in the international commercial freight forwarding industry.[1] Plaintiffs are various businesses who purchased freight forwarding services from defendants. Defendants are domestic and foreign providers of freight forwarding services and freight forwarding trade associations.[2] Plaintiffs allege that beginning in

[1] This case is related to a Multi District Litigation ("MDL") pending in this district, In Re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., No. 06-md-1775 (JG) (VVP) ("Air Cargo MDL"). The Air Cargo MDL is a putative antitrust class action brought in the wake of an investigation by governmental authorities of international price-fixing activity in the air cargo industry. Plaintiffs in that case are domestic and foreign purchasers of allegedly price-fixed air freight shipping services, and they include freight forwarders who are among the defendants in this action.

Inc.; Yusen Air & Sea Service Co., Ltd.; and Yusen Air & Sea Service (U.S.A.), Inc. (collectively "the Japanese Defendants"); and (11) Deutsche Post AG; Danzas Corporation, doing business as DHL Global Forwarding; DHL Express (USA) Inc.; DHL Global Forwarding Japan K.K.; DHL Japan Inc.; Exel Global Logistics, Inc.; Air Express International USA, Inc. (collectively "DHL"), for the Japanese, severed-claims only (the "DHL Japanese agreement").

Plaintiffs' counsel ("Class Counsel") also seek approval of their proposed plan of allocation, as well as an interim fee award of 25% of the total available settlement fund and reimbursement of expenses. I held a final fairness hearing on November 2, 2015, at which there was oral argument in support of the proposed settlement, allocation plan, and the requested attorneys' fees. No one objected at the hearing and there have not been any written objections filed.

For the reasons discussed below, I approve the 11 settlement agreements and allocation plan, and I grant the request for attorneys' fees.

BACKGROUND

I assume familiarity with the facts of the case as set forth in Panalpina 1. As noted above, I have granted final approval to 10 settlements and have awarded $16,853,536.74 in interim fee awards.[4] The 11 new settlements for which plaintiffs seek approval are briefly summarized below.

A. The Settlement Agreements

1. The SDV Settlement Agreement

SDV has agreed to pay $350,000.00 into the settlement fund, and has agreed to provide substantial cooperation. SDV Settlement §§ II.B.1.a, II.B.2.[5] SDV has also agreed to pay 75% of the proceeds it has received or may receive from the Air Cargo MDL. Id. § II.B.1.b. Thus far, SDV has paid approximately $1,955,573.19, and the amount "is likely to grow" based on SDV's continued receipt of proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL. See Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307, at 9.

2. The Panalpina Settlement Agreement

Panalpina has agreed to pay $35,000,000.00 and 100% of its future proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL. Panalpina Settlement § II.A.1.[6] Thus far, plaintiffs have received approximately $39,158,324.45 from the Panalpina settlement, and that amount is expected to grow based on future receipt of proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 9-10. In addition, Panalpina agreed to provide substantial cooperation to plaintiffs in their ongoing prosecution of the case. Panalpina Settlement § II.A.2.

[5] The SDV settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 3 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-3.

[6] The Panalpina settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 4 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-4.

3. The Geodis Settlement Agreement

Geodis agreed to pay $3,000,000.00, as well as to cooperate. Geodis Settlement § II.A.[7]

4. The DSV Settlement Agreement

DSV agreed to pay $1,500,000.00 to the settlement class, as well as 100% of any future proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL. DSV Settlement § II.A.1.[8] DSV has also agreed to cooperate with the plaintiffs' ongoing prosecution of the case. Id. § II.A.2.

5. The Jet Speed Settlement Agreement

Jet Speed agreed to pay $750,000.00 and 100% of any future proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL into the settlement fund. Jet Speed Settlement § II.A.1.[9] In addition, Jet Speed agreed to cooperate with plaintiffs in their ongoing prosecution of the case. Id. § II.A.2.

6. The Toll Settlement Agreement

Toll agreed to pay $900,000.00 and 100% of any future proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL into the settlement fund. Toll Settlement § II.A.1.[10] Toll has also agreed to cooperate with the plaintiffs' ongoing efforts against other defendants. Id. § II.A.2.

7. The Agility Settlement Agreement

Agility agreed to pay $16,000,000.00 and 100% of its proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL into the settlement fund. Agility Settlement § II.A.2.[11] The Agility settlement thus [7] The Geodis settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 5 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-5.

[8] The DSV settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 6 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-6.

[9] The Jet Speed settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 7 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-7.

[10] The Toll settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 8 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-8.

[11] The Agility settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 9 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-9.

far amounts to $17,859,499.23, and plaintiffs expect the amount to grow based on Agility's receipt of future proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 11. Agility has also agreed to cooperate. Agility Settlement § II.A.3.

8. The UPS Settlement Agreement

UPS agreed to pay 100% of its proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL received from June 18, 2014 forward, in an amount not to exceed $25,000,000.00. UPS Settlement § II.A.1.[12] If the proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL are less than $25,000,000.00, UPS will pay the difference up to $7,000,000.00. Id. Class Counsel estimates that UPS will receive $18,000,000.00 from the Air Cargo MDL, and thus the Class will receive $25,000,000.00 from the UPS settlement. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 11. UPS has also agreed to cooperate with the plaintiffs. UPS Settlement § II.A.2.

9. The Dachser Settlement Agreement

Dachser agreed to pay $2,500,000.00 and assign 100% of its rights to proceeds from the Air Cargo MDL into the settlement fund. Dachser Settlement § II.A.1.[13] Dachser has also agreed to cooperate. Id. § II.A.2.

[12] The UPS settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 10 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-10.

[13] The Dascher settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 11 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-11.

10. The Japanese Settlement Agreement

The Japanese Defendants agreed to settle all claims on a collective basis by paying $100,000,000.00 into the settlement fund.[14] Japanese Settlement § II.A.1.[15] They also agreed to cooperate. Id. § II.A.2.[16]

11. The DHL Japanese Settlement Agreement

DHL has agreed to settle the severed claims affecting the Japanese-only routes as defined in the settlement agreement by paying $5,000,000.00 into the settlement fund. DHL Japanese Settlement § II.A.1.[17] Plaintiffs continue to litigate against DHL on the non-severed claims. See Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 13.

B. Preliminary Approval of the Settlement Agreements and the Notice Program

1. Preliminary Approval of the Settlement Agreements

On October 7, 2013, I entered an order preliminarily approving the SDV settlement agreement and certifying the settlement class. Order, ECF No. 894. On August 22, 2014, I entered an order preliminarily approving the Panalpina, Geodis, DSV, and Jet Speed [14] The $100,000,000.00 payment is subject to a pro-rata opt-out reduction provision that authorizes up to a $10 million reduction "based on the total dollar amount of qualifying surcharges paid for by an Opt-Out Class member to the Japanese Defendants" between October 16, 2002 and November 12, 2007. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 12; accord Japanese Settlement § II.E. However, Class Counsel represent that there is no reduction to the settlement amount "[b]ecause there were so few opt-outs." Letter, Nov. 5, 2015, ECF No. 1328.

[15] The Japanese Defendants' settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 12 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-12.

[16] This settlement implicates the Most Favored Nations ("MFN") clauses in the Vantec and Nishi-Nippon settlement agreements, which I approved on September 23, 2013. See Vantec Settlement, Ex. C to the W. Joseph Bruckner Decl., ECF No. 527-4; and Nishi-Nippon Settlement, Ex. A to the Christopher Lovell Decl., ECF No. 590-2; Order, Sept. 25, 2013, ECF No. 879 (approving the Vantec settlement); Order, Sept. 25, 2013, ECF No. 883 (approving the Nishi-Nippon settlement). Those MFN provisions establish a "Settlement Ratio" of 88.35%, which represents "the ratio of the settlement amount to the fuel, AMS, and security and explosives surcharge revenues for air cargo shipments from Japan to the United States from October 2002 to November 2007." Panalpina 1, 2013 WL 4525323, at *2; see also Vantec Settlement § II.D; Nishi-Nippon Settlement § II.D. If the settlement ratio is less than 88.35%, Vantec and Nishi-Nippon are entitled to receive the amount necessary to reduce the 88.35% settlement ratio to that used by the subsequent settling defendant. Id. This provision as implicated here results in a $14,729,135.52 total repayment to Nishi-Nippon and Vantec. See Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 13.

[17] The DHL settlement agreement was filed as Ex. 13 to the Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval, ECF No. 1307-13.

settlement agreements and certifying the settlement classes. Order, ECF No. 1102. Also on August 22, 2014, I entered an order preliminarily approving the Toll settlement agreement and certifying the settlement class. Order, ECF No. 1103.

On December 18, 2014, I entered an order preliminarily approving the Agility and UPS settlement agreements and certifying the settlement classes. Order, ECF No. 1124. On February 20, 2015, I entered an order preliminarily approving the Dachser settlement agreement and certifying the settlement class. Order, ECF No. 1147. On April 27, 2015, I entered an order preliminarily approving the settlement agreements as to the Japanese Defendants and as to DHL for the Japanese-only claims, as well as certifying the settlement class. Order, ECF No. 1189.

2. The Notice Program

On May 21, 2015, plaintiffs moved for approval of their class notice program. Mot. to Approve Class Notice Program, ECF No. 1201. On May 29, 2015, I entered an order approving the program.[18] Order, May 29, 2015, ECF No. 1216. Proof of the implementation of the notice program has been filed with the Court. See Katherine Kinsella Decl., ECF No. 1309; Julie Redell Decl., ECF No. 1308. It consisted of four components: (1) direct mail notice to 1.67 million potential class members identified in customer lists provided by the defendants between July 7, 2015 and July 10, 2015; (2) publication notice in magazines, domestic and international newspapers, trade publications, and Internet ads; (3) an "earned media" program consisting of a press release distributed on PR Newswire's Premier Global Service on July 20, 2015, which reaches more than 35,000 global points; and (4) a settlement website, which as of October 1, 2015 had been visited by over 6,000,000 unique visitors. Kinsella Decl. ¶¶ 6, 10-11, 22, 41-43.

[18] I also approved a subsequent request to revise the notice program to permit a ministerial change to the notice papers. See Order, June 9, 2015, ECF No. 1229.

The notice papers provided a deadline of September 18, 2015 for class members to opt out of or object to any settlement. Redell Decl. ¶¶ 9-10. Only six class members have opted out, and no class members have objected to final approval of any of the 11 settlement agreements. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 18-19; Redell Decl. ¶¶ 9-10.

C. The Plan of Allocation

The Plan of Allocation is the same as that for the first round of settlements, which I previously approved. See Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 25 & Ex. 14; Panalpina 1, 2013 WL 4525323, at *13. As I described in Panalpina 1: "10% of the net settlement funds will be allocated pro rata based on the total worldwide freight forwarding charges paid for shipments to, from, or within the United States during the [relevant time period]. Second, 90% of the net settlement funds will be allocated pro rata based on the surcharges paid on the shipping routes of all defendants that conspired on that particular surcharge for which a particular Class Member paid surcharges on freight forwarding services during the same period." Panalpina 1, 2013 WL 4525323, at *13 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); accord Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 25 & Ex. 14.

D. Fee Award Request

Counsel for plaintiffs seek a total interim fee award of $42,246,681.08 payable in the following installments: (1) $40,684,181.08, representing 25% of the settlement proceeds currently paid into the settlement fund, payable now; (2) $250,000.00, representing 25% of the settlement proceeds scheduled to be paid by Geodis upon final approval of its settlement agreement, payable at the time of final approval of that agreement; (3) $1,250,000.00, representing 25% of the settlement proceeds scheduled to be paid by Agility on the later of 15 days after final approval of that agreement or on January 4, 2016, payable on the same date; and

(4) $62,500.00, representing 25% of the settlement proceeds scheduled to be paid by Jet Speed on May 8, 2016, payable on the same date. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 24. In addition, Class Counsel seek reimbursement of $4,046,323.05 for interim litigation expenses. Id.

DISCUSSION

A. The Standard for Approving a Proposed Settlement

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(e), any settlement of a class action requires court approval. A court may grant approval of a proposed settlement of a class action if it is "fair, adequate, and reasonable, and not a product of collusion." Joel A. v. Giuliani, 218 F.3d 132, 138 (2d Cir. 2000). In so doing, the court must "eschew any rubber stamp approval" yet simultaneously "stop short of the detailed and thorough investigation that it would take if it were actually trying the case." Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 462 (2d Cir. 1974), abrogated on other grounds by Goldberger v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 209 F.3d 43 (2d Cir. 2000). Judicial discretion is informed by a general policy favoring settlement. See Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 73 (2d Cir. 1982); see also Denney v. Jenkins & Gilchrist, 230 F.R.D. 317, 328 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) ("There is a strong judicial policy in favor of settlements, particularly in the class action context. The compromise of complex litigation is encouraged by the courts and favored by public policy." (citations and internal quotation marks omitted), aff'd in part and vacated in part, 443 F.3d 253 (2d Cir. 2006)).

To evaluate whether a class settlement is fair, I examine (1) the negotiations that led up to it, and (2) the substantive terms of the settlement. See In re Holocaust Victims Assets Litig., 105 F. Supp. 2d 139, 145 (E.D.N.Y. 2000). In evaluating procedural fairness, "[t]he [negotiation] process must be examined 'in light of the experience of counsel, the vigor with which the case was prosecuted, and the coercion or collusion that may have marred the negotiations themselves.'" Id. at 145-46 (quoting Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d 426, 433 (2d Cir. 1983)). Factors relevant to the substantive fairness of a proposed settlement include: "(1) the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; and (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation." See Grinnell, 495 F.2d at 463 (internal citations omitted).

B. The Proposed Settlements

1. Procedural Fairness

I find that the 11 settlement agreements are procedurally fair. Plaintiffs represent that the settlements were each "entered into in good faith, after extensive arms' length negotiations between experienced and informed counsel on both sides." Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 14. Nine of the settlement agreements—the Panalpina, Geodis, Jet Speed, Toll, Agility, UPS, Dachser, DHL and Japanese Settlement Agreements—were aided by a "nationally recognized mediator." Id. at 15. Further, plaintiffs represent that Class Counsel "zealously represented the interests of the Class during all settlement negotiations," that extensive discovery had occurred, and that Class Counsel "were well informed as to the facts of the case and the strengths of the claims asserted" in negotiating the settlement terms. Id. There is nothing in the record to indicate otherwise. Rather, the record supports that each settlement agreement was the product of numerous meetings, resolutions of "disputed terms," and the assessment of relevant data, including revenue data and other information about settling defendants' operations. See Joint Decl. of Co-Lead Counsel, ECF No. 1282, ¶¶ 278-312.

I have no reason to believe that the parties entered into the settlement agreements through collusive behavior or that any preferential treatment was improperly conferred upon the class representative or any portion of the class. See, e.g., In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 176 F.R.D. 99, 102 (S.D.N.Y. 1997). Accordingly, I conclude that the settlement agreements were reached by good-faith negotiations that were "fair, adequate, and reasonable, and not a product of collusion." Joel A., 218 F.3d at 138.

2. Substantive Fairness

I also find that the settlement agreements are substantively fair. My findings here borrow from those set forth in my previous opinion approving settlements in this case.

First, the complexity of federal antitrust cases is well known. See, e.g., Virgin Atl. Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 263 (2d Cir. 2001) (noting the "factual complexities of antitrust cases"); Weseley v. Spear, Leeds & Kellogg, 711 F. Supp. 713, 719 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) (Nickerson, J.) (antitrust class actions "are notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought"). As I noted in Panalpina 1, "the potential for this complex litigation to consume considerable time and resources has been great. Complex factual and legal issues abound." Panalpina 1, 2013 WL 4525323, at *7. Continued proceedings would likely involve some or all of the following necessities to present proof and litigate a case: voluminous discovery, dueling experts, trial preparation, damages calculations, and appeals of any adverse jury verdicts. Each of these stages involve risk. As I wrote in Panalpina 1, "[i]t is undisputed that developing cases against any of the settling defendants would have required significant time and expense. In addition, as a result of many of these defendants' bargained-for cooperation, these settlement agreements may facilitate a more expeditious outcome of the remaining claims, and may advance the final resolution of this litigation." Id. The same conclusions remain undisputed here.

Due process requires that class members be given notice of a proposed settlement and opportunity to be heard. Notice papers were mailed to over 1.67 million potential class members, Kinsella Decl. ¶ 11, and plaintiffs estimate the class size to number in the hundreds of thousands. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Final Approval at 18. Only six members of the class have opted out, and there was not a single objection. Id. at 18-19. That the overwhelming—almost unanimous—majority of the class members have elected to remain in the settlement class supports a finding that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate. See, e.g., In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 189 F.R.D. 274, 281 (S.D.N.Y. 1999); In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 527 (E.D. Mich. 2003).

I also find that the settlement amounts presented here are within the range of reasonableness. In the aggregate, the settlement proceeds from the 11 agreements presently establish a guaranteed settlement fund worth approximately $197,623,497.87. In addition, the defendants have agreed to cooperate to help the plaintiffs pursue their claims. "[T]hough the agreement[s] to cooperate with Plaintiffs ha[ve] not been factored in to the overall value of these settlements, [they] add[] significant value." See In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., No. 06-MD-1775 (JG)(VVP), 2011 WL 2909162, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. July 15, 2011). Finally, the settlement proceeds from the agreements will continue to grow as settling defendants receive payments from the Air Cargo MDL.[19] I find that the reasonableness of the settlements in light of the best possible recovery and all attendant litigation risks weighs in favor of approving the settlements.

In sum, I conclude that the 11 proposed settlement agreements are both procedurally and substantively fair, and I therefore approve them.

C. Plan of Allocation

"As a general rule, the adequacy of an allocation plan turns on . . . whether the proposed apportionment is fair and reasonable" under the particular circumstances of the case. In re Painewebber Ltd. P'ships Litig., 171 F.R.D. 104, 133 (S.D.N.Y. 1997), aff'd, 117 F.3d 721 (2d Cir. 1997). "An allocation formula need only have a reasonable, rational basis, particularly if recommended by experienced and competent class counsel." In re American Bank Note Holographics, Inc., 127 F. Supp. 2d 418, 429-30 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (internal quotation marks omitted). Whether the allocation plan is equitable is "squarely within the discretion of the district court." In re PaineWebber, 171 F.R.D. at 132.

I find that the plan is both fair and reasonable, and thus I approve it. The plan is the same as the one I approved in Panalpina 1, and I see no reason to reach a different result here. Moreover, no class member has objected to the plan, strongly suggesting it is fair, reasonable and adequate to the class.

D. Attorneys' Fees

I may award attorneys' fees using either a percentage of the fund or the lodestar method.[20] In re Payment Card Interchange Fee & Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., 991 F. Supp. 2d 437, 440 (E.D.N.Y. 2014); see also Wal-Mart, 396 F.3d at 121. Regardless of which method of calculation is employed, class action fee awards are evaluated for reasonableness based on the six-factor standard set forth in Goldberger v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 50 (2d Cir. 2000). Under that standard, I must weigh "(1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation . . . ; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations." Id. at 50 (alterations in original).

Class Counsel seek an interim fee award of $42,246,681.08, which represents 25% of the total available settlement fund ($168,986,724.33, payable in four installments).[21] Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Interim Attorneys' Fees, ECF No. 1281, at 24. They assert that the amount is fair and reasonable when examined under the Goldberger factors and when "cross-checked" against that lodestar. They assert that the total lodestar from inception of the case through August 15, 2015 is $69,869,851.59. Id. at 21. No objections to the requested fees have been filed. With respect to comparing the requested fee to the lodestar, Class Counsel assert that because 25% of the total available settlement fund is less than the lodestar, the recommended fee represents a deflator, not a multiplier.[22]

I find the requested attorneys' fees are fair and reasonable, and satisfy the Goldberger factors. This litigation is almost eight years old, and Class Counsel represent that they have "spent a total of 153,782.18 hours prosecuting the litigation." Pls.' Mem. in Supp.

[21] Class Counsel calculated the $168,986,724.33 representing the total available settlement fund as follows: $21,092,361.98, representing proceeds obtained from the Air Cargo MDL based on provisions in the Panalpina 1 settlements; less $14,729,135.52, representing the refund due to Vantec and Nishi-Nippon based on the most favored nation clauses in their respective settlement agreements, see supra note 16; plus $179,623,497.87, representing the guaranteed payments and proceeds already received from the Air Cargo MDL from the instant 11 settlement agreements; less the $7 million UPS guaranteed minimum payment not yet due; less the $10 million maximum refund to the Japanese Defendants under the opt-out ratchet-down provision discussed supra note 14. Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Interim Attorneys' Fees at 6.

[22] Class Counsel assert that this is true even looking at the aggregate fees awarded so far in the case—$59,100,217.82 (the $16,853,536.74 awarded in connection with Panalpina 1, plus the $42,246,681.08 currently sought). Pls.' Mem. in Supp. Mot. Interim Attorneys' Fees at 6.

Mot. Interim Attorneys' Fees at 12. The amount of time and energy spent on the litigation is directly related to the factual and legal complexity of this action. "[A]ntitrust cases, by their nature, are highly complex," and this case is no different. Wal-Mart, 396 F.3d at 122; see also Weseley, 711 F. Supp. at 719 (antitrust class actions "are notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought"). As I have already discussed, this litigation was obviously risky and complex.

As I stated in Panalpina 1, 2013 WL 4525323, at *16: "Class Counsel are highly experienced practitioners in complex litigation generally and antitrust litigation specifically. The settlement agreements [are] the result of hard fought arms'-length negotiation with settlement defendants' respective counsel." The settlement amounts proposed here attest to Class Counsel's abilities. In sum, I find the proposed attorneys' fees reasonable and thus grant the request.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the SDV, Geodis, Jet Speed, DSV, Toll and Japanese Defendants' settlement agreements are approved, and all claims against those defendants by those members of the settlement class who have not timely exercised their right to be excluded from the settlement agreements are dismissed with prejudice. My grant of final approval to the Agility, UPS, and DHL Japanese settlement agreements will be held in abeyance until January 7, 2016.[23] My grant of final approval to the Panalpina and Dachser settlement agreements will be held in abeyance until January 11, 2016.[24] The plan of allocation is approved. Class Counsel are awarded $42,246,681.08 in fees and expenses of $4,046,323.05.

[23] On October 26, 2015 and October 27, 2015, plaintiff's counsel informed the Court by letter that settling defendants had not served notices for these settlements 90 days prior to the fairness hearing as required under the Class Action Fairness Act ("CAFA"). See Letter, Oct. 26, 2015, ECF No. 1317; Letter, Oct. 27, 2015, ECF No. 1318. I. INTRODUCTION

Co-Lead Counsel and other Class Counsel (collectively "Class Counsel") submit this memorandum in support of their Petition For A Second Interim Award Of Attorneys' Fees And Reimbursement Of Expenses. Settling Defendants have made (or soon will make) payments pursuant to their settlement agreements yielding a Total Available Settlement Fund of $168,986,724.33, from which no attorneys' fees or litigation expenses have been awarded. Class Counsel now respectfully request the Court to award from those funds a second interim fee award of 25% of that amount, for a total second interim fee award of $42,246,681.08, and further seek an award of unreimbursed litigation expenses totaling $4,046,323.05.

In the more than seven years this case has been pending, Class Counsel have worked tirelessly on behalf of the Class to litigate these complex international claims. As summarized below and described in more detail in the Joint Declaration,[1] Class Counsel:

- Have reached favorable and complete settlements with 27 of the 29 Defendant groups named in the Corrected Third Amended Class Action Complaint ("CTAC");
- Have reached a partial settlement with DHL, one of the two remaining Defendants; and
- Have completely resolved four of Plaintiffs' 11 claims.

The settlements reached to date cumulatively have resulted in a recovery by the Class of approximately $317.6 million. That amount likely will grow as settling Defendants make additional payments due under their settlement agreements. The settlements also have afforded Plaintiffs valuable cooperation that will assist them in prosecuting their claims against the two remaining Defendant families, DHL and Hellmann.

As the Court previously recognized in this case, "[f]rom the outset, the potential for this complex litigation to consume considerable time and resources has been great. Complex legal and factual issues abound." Precision Assocs., Inc. v. Panalpina World Transport (Holding) Ltd., No. 08-cv-42 (JG)(VVP), 2013 WL 4515323, at *7 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 2013). The Court's observation two years ago remains undoubtedly correct. The Joint Declaration briefly summarizes the motion practice, discovery, depositions, interviews, appearances, conferences, negotiations, settlements, stipulations, and other work Class Counsel have done thus far in this case and for which no fees have yet been recovered. The Joint Declaration's description of those seven-plus years of litigation comprises more than 100 pages. Class Counsel's zealous and extensive work directly resulted in the settlement funds from which Class Counsel now seek this second interim award.

II. FEES AND EXPENSES REQUESTED

A. Background Regarding First Interim Fee Award

On December 27, 2013, the Court ordered a first interim award of attorneys' fees, and awarded Class Counsel 15% of the recoveries they had then obtained under settlement agreements with 10 groups of settling Defendants ("First Round Settlements").[2] See Electronic Order dated Oct. 3, 2013 (awarding fees and expenses); ECF No. 984 (granting Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration of October 3 order regarding fees and increasing Class Counsel's first interim fee award to 15%). That first interim award used as a lodestar cross-check only those attorneys' fees and expenses accrued directly in obtaining the First Round Settlements; the Court specifically directed Class Counsel not to submit any attorney lodestar or expenses that did not directly relate to the First Round Settlements. The first interim fee award also did not cover any work performed after January 28, 2013.

[2] First Round Settlements were reached with Deutsche Bahn AG, Schenker AG, Schenker, Inc., Bax Global Inc. and DB Schenker (collectively, "Schenker"); EGL, Inc. and EGL Eagle Global Logistics, LP, Inc. (collectively, "EGL"); Vantec Corporation and Vantec World Transport (USA), Inc. (collectively, "Vantec"); Expeditors International of Washington, Inc. ("Expeditors"); Nishi-Nippon Railroad Co., Ltd. ("Nishi-Nippon"); United Aircargo Consolidators, Inc. ("UAC"); Kuehne + Nagel International and Kuehne + Nagel, Inc. (collectively, "Kuehne + Nagel"); Morrison Express Logistics Pte. Ltd (Singapore) and Morrison Express Corporation (U.S.A.) (collectively, "Morrison Express"); UTi Worldwide, Inc. ("UTi"); and ABX Logistics Worldwide NV/SA ("ABX"). The Court entered final approval as to each. ECF Nos. 879-88.

B. Additional Payments Made And Refunds Due Under The First Round Settlements

Most of the First Round Settlements required settling Defendants to pay for the benefit of the Class some or all future proceeds they were then and are yet to recover in In re: Air Cargo Shipping Services Antitrust Litigation, MDL No. 1775 (E.D.N.Y.) ("Air Cargo"). Thus, in addition to the First Round Settlement recoveries on which the Court calculated the first interim fee award, some of those First Round Settlement Defendants now also have received supplemental payments from the second Air Cargo distribution, and also have received a third round of Air Cargo distributions. Those additional funds, totaling $21,092,361.98 have now been deposited into the First Round Settlement escrow accounts.[3]

In addition, Vantec and Nishi-Nippon will receive refunds totaling $14,729,135.52 from their respective escrowed settlement funds due to the "most favored nation" clauses in their settlement agreements. See Joint Decl. ¶ 7 n.1.

C. Second Round Settlements

Since the First Round Settlements, Plaintiffs have reached, and the Court has preliminarily approved, 11 settlements covering 19 additional corporate families of Defendants[4] [3] As this Court is aware, the Air Cargo litigation is ongoing.

[4] These settling Defendants are: SDV Logistique Internationale ("SDV"); Panalpina World Transport (Holding) Ltd. and Panalpina, Inc. (collectively "Panalpina"); Geodis S.A. and

(the "Second Round Settlements"). Those Second Round Settlements provide for cash payments totaling a minimum of $179,623,497.87, nearly all of which has been received and deposited in interest-bearing escrow accounts. See generally Joint Decl. ¶ 8. The amount ultimately recovered under the Second Round Settlements will likely exceed that amount as a result of certain settling Defendants' agreement to pay to the Class in this case the proceeds the settling Defendants will receive in Air Cargo. Each settlement agreement in the Second Round Settlements includes specified funds reserved to pay the cost of notice to the Class of these (collectively "DHL"). The Court has preliminarily approved each of those settlements. ECF Nos. 894, 1102, 1103, 1124, 1147, and 1189.

The Second Round Settlements are individually summarized in paragraphs 279 through 312 of the Joint Declaration, in Plaintiffs' preliminary approval briefs filed at ECF Nos. 870, 1081, 1096, 1119, 1120, 1140, and 1175, and in the forthcoming final approval brief.

proposed settlements and for other related expenses, and most settlement agreements require the settling Defendant to provide substantial cooperation that will continue to assist Plaintiffs in prosecuting their claims against DHL and Hellmann, the two remaining Defendant groups.

Class Counsel specifically exclude two portions of the Second Round Settlements' $179.6 million guaranteed minimum recovery from this fee petition, and instead reserve the right to seek fees on those portions at an appropriate future time:[5]

First, the settlement agreement with the nine Defendant families named in the Japanese Claims (the "Japanese Defendants") contains a ratchet-down provision providing that, under certain circumstances, up to $10 million of the total $100 payment may be returned to the Japanese Defendants based on any opt-outs from that settlement. Because the opt-outs are not yet known, it cannot currently be determined whether and how much of that $10 million must be refunded to the Japanese Defendants. Accordingly, Class Counsel seek fees based only on the $90 million not subject to refund. At an appropriate time after any ratchet-down has materialized, Class Counsel will seek the Court's award of fees on whatever portion of the $10 million ultimately is not refunded to the Japanese Defendants.

Second, UPS's settlement agreement provides that it will pay 100% of all future Air Cargo recoveries, with a minimum payment of $7 million and a cap of $25 million. Because UPS's total payment is for an amount and date not yet certain, and because to date UPS has not paid (and has not been required to pay) anything to the Class under its settlement agreement, at this time Class Counsel are not seeking the Court's award of fees on any amounts to be received in the future under the UPS settlement. Rather, Class Counsel intend to do so at an appropriate time after those funds are deposited in the escrow account.[6]

[5] Although three settling Defendants (Geodis, Jet Speed, and Agility) have not yet deposited all of the funds due under their respective settlement agreements, those three Defendants' remaining payments are for an amount certain and, under the deadlines set by their settlements agreements, will be made before any distributions from the Second Round Settlements can be made to qualified Class members. See generally Joint Decl. ¶ 9 and notes 2-4. For those reasons, Class Counsel now seek fees on the full amounts due under the Geodis, Jet Speed, and Agility settlements. If the Court grants Class Counsel's fee petition, Class Counsel will not deduct any fees from either of those Defendants' final payments until such funds are actually paid, in the escrow account, and available for distribution to qualified class member claimants.

D. Calculation Of Total Available Settlement Fund And Requested Fees And Expenses

At this time, Class Counsel request that the Court order a fee award of 25% of the Total Available Settlement Fund, calculated as follows:

$21,092,361.98	New Air Cargo proceeds from First Round Settlements
- $14,729,135.52	MFN refund due to Vantec and Nishi-Nippon
+ $179,623,497.87	Second Round Settlements' guaranteed payments and Air Cargo proceeds received from Second Round Settlements
-$7,000,000.00	UPS guaranteed minimum payment not yet due
-$10,000,000.00	Maximum refund to Japanese Defendants under ratchet-down
= $168,986,724.33	Total Available Settlement Fund
x 25%	Fee award percentage requested by Class Counsel
= $42,246,681.08	Total second interim fee award requested

The Court previously ordered a first interim fee award of 15% of the then-available settlement funds, or $16,853,536.74. Joint Decl. ¶ 5; ECF No. 984. If the Court now awards the second interim fee request of $42,246,681.08, then the aggregate fees awarded thus far in this case of $59,100,217.82 will represent not a multiplier, but a deflator with respect to the value of Class Counsel's time spent from the inception of the case through August 15, 2015. Joint Decl. ¶ 325. Class Counsel will continue to vigorously litigate the case against the two remaining [6] Although the UPS settlement does not directly affect the amount sought in this fee petition, Class Counsel describe the settlement here to provide the Court with a full and accurate picture of the work performed on behalf of, and the benefit obtained for, the Class.

Defendants to a resolution, through trial, if necessary. If additional settlements are reached or a judgment obtained after trial, the Court can consider then what future fee award to Class Counsel is appropriate, including any overall multiplier for the results achieved.

In addition, Class Counsel request unreimbursed expenses incurred from the inception of the case through August 15, 2015.[7] (To the extent that expenses were incurred in connection with the First Round Settlements, and thus were reimbursed in the first interim award, those expenses are not included in this fee petition.) The unreimbursed expenses for this period total $4,046,323.05 and are set forth in the Joint Declaration at ¶¶ 327-31 and in each of the law firm declarations (Exhibits A-N) and the summaries of unreimbursed expenses (Exhibits P and Q) filed therewith.

III. ARGUMENT

A. The Court Should Award Attorneys' Fees And Expenses Under The Common Fund Doctrine.

The equitable fund doctrine provides that plaintiffs' attorneys in a class action may petition the court for compensation from any benefits to the class that resulted from counsel's efforts. Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980). The Second Circuit permits either the "percentage of the fund" approach or the lodestar approach when calculating fees in a common fund case. See, e.g., McDaniel v. Cnty. of Schenectady, 595 F.3d 411, 419 (2d Cir. 2010) (holding that a district court may, in its discretion, chose either approach). But the "trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method, which directly aligns the interests of the class and its counsel and provides a powerful incentive for the efficient prosecution and early resolution of litigation." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir.

[7] As described more fully in the Joint Declaration at ¶ 333 and note 42, expenses paid from the Litigation Fund are described through August 27, 2015. Co-Lead Counsel's contributions to the Litigation Fund therefore are also described, and reimbursement for such contributions is also sought, through that date.

2005) (citation omitted); accord In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 263 F.R.D. 110, 128 (S.D.N.Y. 2009).

The use of the percentage method dispenses with the "cumbersome, enervating, and often surrealistic process of lodestar computation." Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 50 (2d Cir. 2000) (quotation marks and citations omitted). However, the Court of Appeals recommends considering the hours submitted by counsel as a "cross-check" on the reasonableness of the requested percentage. Id. Accordingly, Class Counsel's lodestar in this case and the cross-check it provides are discussed in Sections III.B. and III.D. below.

Regardless of which method of calculation a court uses, the key consideration in awarding fees is what is reasonable under the circumstances. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h) ("In a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees . . . ."). In addition, the fee award should be based on the entire settlement fund, not a portion of the fund. See Masters v. Wilhelmina Model Agency, Inc., 473 F.3d 423, 437 (2d Cir. 2007) ("The entire Fund, and not some portion thereof, is created through the efforts of counsel at the instigation of the entire class. An allocation of fees by percentage should therefore be awarded on the basis of the total funds made available, whether claimed or not.").

An interim award of attorneys' fees and expenses is warranted at this time, even though the litigation continues. Since the Court's first interim award, Class Counsel have continued their tireless litigation efforts. This Court has implicitly recognized the appropriateness of an interim fee based on the settlements achieved up to that point. See Precision Assocs., Inc. v. Panalpina World Transport (Holding) Ltd., No. 08-cv-42 (JG)(VVP), 2013 WL 4525323, at *13-17 (ordering first interim award); In re Air Cargo Shipping Serv. Litig., No. 06-MD-1775 (JG)(VVP), 2011 WL 2909162, at *5-7 (E.D.N.Y. July 15, 2011) ("Air Cargo 2"); In re Air Cargo Shipping Serv. Litig., No. 06-MD-1775 (JG)(VVP), 2012 WL 3138596, at *1 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 2, 2012) ("Air Cargo 3"). Now that Class Counsel's continued work has resulted in even greater recoveries for the Class, consideration of another interim fee award is appropriate.

B. Co-Lead Counsel Seek A Reasonable Percentage Of The Total Available Settlement Fund.

In calculating the lodestar cross-check to assess the reasonableness of Class Counsel's current fee request, Class Counsel respectfully submit that the Court should compare the total of all fees awarded in the first petition and fees requested in this second petition, to the lodestar reflecting all work done in this case from inception until August 15, 2015, including work that related to the First Round Settlements and which was covered by the first interim fee award. The Joint Declaration describes the work Class Counsel have performed since the inception of this case through August 15, 2015, because the reasonableness of Class Counsel's current fee request is most appropriately measured over the life of the entire case thus far. All of this work is directly related to Class Counsel's efforts to prove participation by all Defendants in the conspiracies at issue, and to prosecute the claims of a proposed class consisting of purchasers from all settling and non-settling Defendants.

For instance, discovery from one Defendant directly bears on the participation of other Defendants in the same conspiracy. Thus, the documents reviewed, witnesses interviewed, and depositions taken of settling Defendants were all directed toward the goals of negotiating incrementally more favorable settlements with Defendants and proving the liability of non-settling Defendants. See, e.g., In re Ethylene Propylene Diene Monomer (EPDM) Antitrust Litig., 681 F. Supp. 2d 141, 160-61 (D. Conn. 2009) (evidence found in competitor's files was considered important evidence against another defendant); In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 662-63 (7th Cir. 2002) (evidence of statements from competitor employees' documents used to defeat ADM's motion for summary judgment). Indeed, it is for this reason that nearly every settlement agreement in this case to date has required the settling Defendant to provide substantial cooperation to Plaintiffs through discovery and trial.

The work Class Counsel have performed from inception also has been necessary for upcoming class certification proceedings, dispositive motions, and trial. The work performed to date also has cumulatively enabled Co-Lead Counsel to negotiate in an informed manner with any Defendant who was willing to discuss settlement.

For these reasons, it is appropriate for the Court to consider the lodestar amount for all work performed in the case from inception through August 15, 2015 in assessing the reasonableness of the requested fee. See Air Cargo 2, 2011 WL 2909162, at *6-7 (awarding 25% and applying a lodestar cross-check based on counsel's "tireless work over the course of four years," i.e., since co-lead counsel was first appointed).

Class Counsel are mindful of this Court's fee decisions in In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litigation, 297 F. Supp. 2d 503, 520 (E.D.N.Y. 2003), aff'd sub nom. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2005), in which the Court not only considered the appropriate percentage that should be applied in a "mega-case" such as Visa Check, but also scrutinized the multiplier that would result if plaintiffs' counsel's request was granted. See Visa Check, 297 F. Supp. 2d at 424-25 & n.33. This Court concluded that a multiplier of almost 10 was not warranted, but a multiplier of 3.5 was reasonable. See id. at 522, 524.

The nature of this litigation — a case with relatively small government fines for many Defendants and no fines for others, 68 Defendants from 29 Defendant families, and eleven distinct international conspiracies alleged — make it easily distinguishable from a typical monolithic two-defendant mega-conspiracy such as in Visa Check. Unlike Visa Check, where class counsel obtained a $3,383,400,000 settlement (a large fund by any measure) against two defendants for domestic conduct, in this case there are 68 Defendants from 29 Defendant families alleged to have engaged in widespread international conduct, with Class Counsel achieving full or partial settlements as to 28 different corporate families so far. Although the large number of settling Defendants magnifies the total amount of the settlements here, each of the individual settlement agreements is well below megafund amounts. In this case, as discussed in more detail below, the lodestar crosscheck shows that Class Counsel's request for 25% of the Total Available Settlement Fund — which results in a deflator — is very reasonable given the risks, complexities and work involved to prosecute these multiple international conspiracies against many Defendants.

Class Counsel respectfully suggest that, depending on the outcome of this case through future settlements or a favorable judgment at trial, a multiplier could be appropriate. However, that determination should be made after the extent of additional recoveries is quantified and the amount and quality of work is assessed taking into consideration all of the relevant factors. At the present time, it is well within the Court's discretion to award the request of 25%. See, e. g., Air Cargo 3, 2012 WL 3138596, at *5 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 2, 2012) ("Air Cargo 3") (granting class counsel's requested interim fee of 25% of the gross amount of the settlement fund when such a request represented a modest 1.11 multiplier); In re Checking Account Overdraft Litig., Case No. 09-MD-02036-JLK, 2011 WL 5873389 at *28 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 22, 2011) (approving fee award of 30% of $410 million settlement fund); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., No. MDL 1261, Civ. A. 98-5055, Civ. A. 99-1000, Civ. A. 99-1341, 2004 WL 1221350, at *17 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (approving fee award of 30% of $202,572,489 fund); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. Misc. 99-197 (TFH), MDL No. 1285, 2001 WL 34312839, at *10 (D.D.C. July 16, 2001)

(approving fee award of 34.6% of $365 million fund); see also Visa Check, 297 F. Supp. 2d at 525 & n.33 (distinguishing large size of $3 billion fund in that case and the size of the multiplier; and stating that if the fund was not as large, "a larger percentage might be appropriate").

C. Class Counsel's Request Is Consistent With The Goldberger Factors.

"Generally, the factor given the greatest emphasis [when awarding a percentage of a fund] is the size of the fund created, because 'a common fund is itself the measure of success. . . [and] represents the benchmark from which a reasonable fee will be awarded.'" Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 14.121 (2004) (quoting Alba Conte & Herbert B. Newberg, 4 Newberg on Class Actions § 14.6, at 547, 550 (4th ed. 2002)). Courts in this Circuit have repeatedly held that "a fee award should be assessed based on scrutiny of the unique circumstances of each case . . . [with] a jealous regard to the rights of those who are interested in the fund." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 53; see McDaniel, 595 F.3d at 426. In determining the reasonableness of a fee request, the Court should consider: (1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50 (citation omitted); Precision Assocs., 2103 WL 4525323, at *14 (applying Goldberger). Application of the Goldberger factors shows that Class Counsel's request for 25% of the Total Available Settlement Fund is reasonable.

1. The Time And Labor Expended By Counsel Supports The Requested Fee.

The large international scale of this litigation, the sheer number of Defendants, the enormous amount of discovery, and the contentious motion practice have required an intensive effort by Class Counsel. Since the inception of this case, Class Counsel have spent a total of 153,782.18 hours prosecuting the litigation, and to date have received no compensation for 120,722.14 of that time, either because it was performed in service of the litigation as a whole

(and not specifically in connection with the First Round Settlements) and thus was specifically excluded from the Court's first interim award, or because it was performed after January 28, 2013. See Joint Decl. ¶ 325.

The Joint Declaration describes the uncompensated work Class Counsel have performed since the case's inception, which is briefly summarized as follows:

- Prepared a First Amended Class Action Complaint consisting of 326 numbered paragraphs containing specific and detailed allegations against Defendants, including names, dates, places and subject matters of conspiratorial meetings and other communications;
- Responded to 18 motions to dismiss the First Amended Complaint and 11 objections on Magistrate Judge Pohorelsky's resulting Report & Recommendation;
- Prepared a Corrected Third Amended Class Action Complaint, comprising 593 numbered paragraphs and additional detailed and specific allegations;
- Responded to 15 motions to dismiss the Corrected Third Amended Complaint (including the 13 initial motions and two later-filed motions by Hellmann and JAFA, respectively), one motion to sever certain claims, and 11 objections on Magistrate Judge Pohorelsky's resulting Report & Recommendation;
- Filed 22 non-ministerial motions (including 12 motions to compel) and 2 objections;
- Made 14 appearances before Magistrate Judge Pohorelsky and 4 appearances before Judge Gleeson;
- Attempted to negotiate a confidentiality order with Defendants concerning confidential material to be produced in discovery and, when Defendants refused to agree, successfully moved the Court for a confidentiality order;
- Participated in lengthy briefing and motion practice to obtain customer lists from non-settling Defendants to assist in providing Class notice;
- Participated in Rule 26(f) conferences, negotiating multiple disputed provisions;
- In addition to the motions described above, responded to a total of 3 pre-motions and submitted briefing in response to 4 motions;

- Reviewed 84,842 Plaintiff documents, and ultimately produced 46,064 of those documents, to Defendants;

- Utilized advanced analytical search tools, as well as keyword searches, to identify the most relevant documents of the more than 5.1 million documents produced by Defendants;

- Ultimately reviewed 1,062,552 million Defendant documents (including translating and reviewing several documents in Japanese, German, and Italian);

- Engaged in innumerable meetings and conferences with Defendants to obtain and understand Defendants' transactional data;

- Prepared witness and Defendant factual summaries to assist in depositions, discovery responses, work by experts engaged by Plaintiffs, and trial;

- Prepared for and conducted 50 depositions in 4 countries spread across three continents;

- Prepared and served 16 sets of discovery requests;

- Responded to 20 sets of document requests propounded by Defendants;

- Interviewed 43 witnesses and prepared for and participated in approximately 18 attorney proffers;

- Prepared for and engaged in arms-length settlement negotiations and several mediations that led to the 10 First Round Settlements and the 11 Second Round Settlements;

- Prepared and supervised an extensive program to provide notice to potential claimants of the First Round Settlements and engaged in extensive communications with Class Members relating to the claims-administration process;

- Prepared and supervised an extensive program to provide notice to potential claimants of the Second Round Settlements and engaged in extensive communications with Class Members relating to the claims-administration process;

- Conducted legal research and factual research regarding pertinent issues; and

- Worked with industry and economic consultants and experts to develop pleadings, evaluate transactional data, guide discovery, formulate settlement strategies, assess damages, and prepare for Plaintiffs' class certification motion.

See Joint Decl. generally and ¶ 15 specifically.

2. The Magnitude And Complexities Of The Litigation Support The Requested Fee.

Antitrust class actions "are notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought." Wesely v. Spear, Leeds & Kellogg, 711 F. Supp. 713, 719 (E.D.N.Y. 1989); see In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 263 F.R.D. at 129 ("antitrust cases are typically complex"). Indeed, as this Court has recognized, this litigation is "irrefutably complex." Precision Assoc., 2013 WL 4525323, at *15. It involves international conspiratorial conduct across the globe with 68 different Defendants, 28 Defendant families, and 11 conspiracies.

Because of the large number of Defendants, the complexity of the legal issues, and the extensive motion practice, this litigation is over seven years old. Indeed, Plaintiffs filed the first complaint in this case in January 2008, but formal discovery in the case was stayed for nearly five years from its initial filing,[8] and the various motions to dismiss were not, for the most part, finally resolved until January 28, 2014.

The Joint Declaration also describes the manner in which the time reported by Class Counsel was scrutinized to eliminate time entries that did not comply with the guidelines set by Co-Lead Counsel. Joint Decl. ¶¶ 319-20.

3. The Risk Of Litigation Supports The Requested Fee.

The risk of litigation is "perhaps the foremost factor to be considered in determining whether to award an enhancement." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54 (quotation omitted); accord In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litig., 263 F.R.D. at 129. The litigation risk "must be measured as of when the case is filed." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55 (citing DiFilippo v. Morizio, 759 F.2d 231, 234 (2d Cir. 1985)). Courts in this Circuit have repeatedly recognized that the risk associated with a case undertaken on a contingent basis is an important factor in determining an appropriate fee award. In re Marsh ERISA Litig., 265 F.R.D. 128, 148 (S.D.N.Y. 2010); In re NASDAQ Mkt. Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 489 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). And this Court has acknowledged that this action "is obviously risky." Precision Assoc., 2013 WL 4525323, at *15.

To establish a price-fixing violation, a plaintiff must demonstrate not only that a conspiracy existed, but also that the conspiracy caused antitrust impact and damages, measurable by reference to prices that would have existed but for the conspiracy. Here, even if Plaintiffs prevail through class certification and other pre-trial proceedings and obtain a judgment of liability, such a judgment could be overturned on appeal. See, e.g., Anixter v. Home-Stake Prod. Co., 77 F.3d 1215, 1218-19 (10th Cir. 1996) (overturning plaintiffs' verdict obtained after two decades of litigation); Backman v. Polaroid Corp., 910 F.2d 10, 12 (1st Cir. 1990) (en banc) (reversing plaintiffs' verdict and ordering entry of judgment for defendants).

Moreover, risk must be measured at the outset of the litigation. When Plaintiffs filed their original complaint in January 2008, no government complaints had been filed, and no guilty pleas had been entered. The first fines related to government investigations did not occur until the JFTC issued fines in March 2009, over a year after the inception of the case. And the DOJ did not announce any guilty pleas until 2010 — more than two and one-half years after Plaintiffs' case began. The EC did not impose fines until 2012. As such, the case faced significant initial risks with respect to showing liability. Plaintiffs have also vigorously pursued claims and alleged conspirators where no DOJ guilty pleas or EC fines exist, all of which have been sustained under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (i.e., Count 1: Security Surcharge; Count 9: Ocean AMS; Count 10: Global Agreement).

Plaintiffs have faced, and will continue to face, other risks. All Defendants sought dismissal under one or more provisions of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12, each making multiple of arguments, and often in multiple motions. Plaintiffs have already defeated a total of 33 motions to dismiss under Rules 12(b)(1) and (6).[9]

Even if Plaintiffs succeed on liability at trial and through appeal, remaining Defendant DHL has made clear that, as the amnesty applicant to the Department of Justice, it will seek an order that it is not subject to treble damages or joint and several liability pursuant to the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004 ("ACPERA"), Pub. L. No. 108-237, § 213(a)-(b), 118 Stat. 661, 666-668 (June 22, 2004). Plaintiffs will vigorously contest any such motion and argue that DHL's limited cooperation has not earned it ACPERA's benefit, but the question ultimately is for the Court to decide, and a ruling in DHL's favor would significantly reduce Plaintiffs' potential recovery.

Due to the significant international dimension of the case, Plaintiffs have encountered difficulties obtaining necessary discovery, and the collection of any judgments against foreign Defendants would be frustrated.

In addition, Defendants have made clear they intend to argue that Plaintiffs lack standing, that no class can be certified, and that no damages exist because the surcharges and rates at issue would have been passed through to Plaintiffs even absent any conspiracy. Plaintiffs will vigorously contest such challenges, as they have each challenge to date, and believe they will prevail on each of those issues, but those arguments also pose risks to any eventual recovery by the Class.

In this instance, the risks Class Counsel undertook in advancing this litigation justify the requested fee. In the seven-and-a-half years Class Counsel have spent litigating this case, they have committed 153,782.18 hours of their time — amounting to over $69.8 million in lodestar — and incurred $4,659,708.89 in expenses, all of which were and are at risk of never being recovered. Joint Decl. ¶¶ 13, 325; Electronic Order dated Oct. 3, 2013 (making first interim expense award of $613,385.84).

4. The Quality Of Counsel's Representation Supports The Requested Fee Award.

As the Court has recognized, Class Counsel in this case "are highly experienced practitioners in complex litigation generally and antitrust litigation specifically." Precision Assoc., 2013 WL 4525323, at *16. Notwithstanding Defendants' ongoing efforts to defeat this case, Co-Lead Counsel has managed to obtain eleven new and substantial settlements — for a total of 21 settlement agreements to date — which in nearly every applicable instance exceeded the fines paid by settling Defendants in the United States,[10] and in many other instances involved settlements with Defendants who were never criminally charged in the United States.[11] Such a recovery is consistent with Co-Lead Counsel's extensive experience successfully litigating antitrust class actions, and supports the fee request. See ECF No. 101 (outlining Co-Lead

[10] The only settlement that did not exceed the fines paid to the Department of Justice was the "ice-breaker" settlement with Schenker, which in addition to cash provided extensive and early cooperation. That cooperation enabled Plaintiffs and the Class to survive Defendants' first barrage of motions to dismiss and facilitated future settlements that in many instances far exceeded the settling Defendants' fines paid to the Department of Justice.

[11] The following settling Defendant groups were never charged in the United States: Expeditors, UAC, Morrison Express, UTi, ABX, SDV, DSV, Geodis, Jet Speed, Toll, Dachser, and UPS.

Counsel's extensive experience and success in the class action field).

Similarly, in addition to the collective wealth represented by Defendants themselves, they are represented by top antitrust legal practitioners; the law firms representing Defendants are some of the largest and most skilled law firms in the world. See Joint Decl. ¶ 18. Throughout this litigation, Defendants' counsel have worked tirelessly to protect their clients' interests, and Co-Lead Counsel's ability to obtain these significant settlements at this stage of the litigation further underscores the adequacy of the requested fee award. See In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Research Reports Sec. Litig., 246 F.R.D. 156, 174 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) ("The quality of opposing counsel is also important in evaluating the quality of Class Counsels' work."); In re NASDAQ Market Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 488 (S.D.N.Y. 1998).

5. The Requested Fee Is Supported By The Size And The Scope Of The Settlement.

The requested fee represents 25% of the Total Available Settlement Fund, which represents a deflator. Class Counsel respectfully suggest the requested award is fair given the extensive effort that was required to achieve these excellent results.

The fee requested is consistent with fee awards in other class action litigations with settlements of this size. See, e.g., Air Cargo 2, 2011 WL 2909162, at *6-7 (awarding 25% fee recovery in related antitrust case); In re Initial Public Offering Sec. Litig., 671 F. Supp. 2d 467, 516 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (awarding one-third fee in a securities fraud case); In re Priceline.com, Inc. Sec. Litig., 2007 WL 2115592, at *4 (awarding 30% of $80 million settlement); see also In re Prudential Sec., Inc. Ltd. P'ships Litig., 912 F. Supp. 97, 103 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) ("Many courts have approved and awarded fees in class actions of one-third of the settlement fund in recognition of the substantial services performed by counsel and the risks undertaken.").

6. Public Policy Considerations Support the Award of the Requested Fee.

The award of the percentage of fee requested by Class Counsel will encourage the private enforcement of antitrust laws and support attorneys who decide to take such cases on a contingent fee basis. The Supreme Court has held repeatedly that private enforcement of U.S. antitrust laws is essential to effective antitrust enforcement, e.g., Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472 (1982); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130-31 (1969), and a market-rate fee award such as is requested here incentivizes competent, experienced counsel to undertake such high-risk, complex class action litigation. This Circuit has noted that "[i]n the absence of adequate attorneys' fee awards, many antitrust actions would not be commenced, since the claims of individual litigants, when taken separately, often hardly justify the expense of litigation." Alpine Pharmacy, Inc. v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., Inc., 481 F.2d 1045, 1050 (2d Cir. 1973). In determining whether public policy supports the requested fee request, the court should balance providing lawyers with a "sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases" against preventing an "unwarranted windfall" to counsel. Air Cargo 2, 2011 WL 2909162, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. July 15, 2011). In light of the time and effort Co-Lead Counsel have dedicated to this litigation, the requested fee of 25% fairly compensates Co-Lead Counsel, helps to perpetuate the availability of skilled counsel in future antitrust class actions, and does not result in a windfall to counsel.

D. Co-Lead Counsel's Request For Attorneys' Fees Is Reasonable Under A Lodestar Crosscheck.

The use of the lodestar crosscheck on the reasonableness of a percentage fee award is encouraged. Farinella v. Paypal, Inc., 611 F. Supp. 2d 250, 269 (E.D.N.Y. 2009). Courts may award fees higher than the lodestar by applying a multiplier based on factors such as the riskiness of litigation. See In re Nortel Networks Corp. Secs. Litig., 539 F.3d at 132 n.4. Courts commonly award multipliers from two to six times the lodestar. See Monserrate v. Tequipment, Inc., No. 11 CV 6090, 2012 WL 5830557, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 16, 2012) (collecting cases).

The total lodestar in this case, from inception, is $69,869,851.59. Joint Decl. ¶ 325. This Court has implicitly recognized that, in long-lasting, hard-fought litigation such as this, it is appropriate to calculate the lodestar cross-check over the duration of the entire case, rather than piecemeal, from interim fee award to interim fee award. See Air Cargo 2, 2011 WL 2909162, at *6-7 (making a second interim award of 25% of settlement proceeds and applying a lodestar cross-check period from the appointment of co-lead counsel through the conclusion of counsel's requested cross-check period). A lodestar cross-check against the award Class Counsel seek in this petition yields a deflator, which this Court has deemed reasonable under analogous circumstances. Air Cargo 2, 2011 WL 2909162, at *6 (granting an interim attorneys' fee request of 25% where the requested fee was less than the lodestar and thus represented a deflator).

The lodestar in this case is based on rates currently charged by counsel, Joint Decl. ¶ 325, an approach which courts have considered reasonable. Velez v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., 04 CIV 09194 CM, 2010 WL 4877852, at *23 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 2010) ("The use of current rates to calculate the lodestar figure has been repeatedly endorsed by courts as a means of accounting for the delay in payment inherent in class actions and for inflation. . . .") (citation omitted). These rates are well within the normal range for counsel litigating similar antitrust class actions.

E. Class Counsel's Request For An Award Of Expenses Incurred Is Reasonable.

Class Counsel's request for an award of $4,046,323.05 for payment of expenses is reasonable. "Attorneys may be compensated for reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred and customarily charged to their clients." Miltland Raleigh-Durham v. Myers, 840 F. Supp. 235, 239 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). Within the Second Circuit, courts "normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course." In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 WL 5289514, at *11 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2012); In re Arakis Energy Corp. Sec. Litig., No. 95CV3421, 2001 WL 1590512, at *17 n.12 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 31, 2001). Co-Lead Counsel seek reimbursement of reasonable litigation expenses including economic and industry experts, deposition transcription, class notice and claims administration, data hosting, online legal research, travel expenses, document imaging and copying, and an online document repository. See Joint Decl. ¶¶ 327-31. The expenses incurred by Class Counsel were reasonably necessary to advance the interests of the Class and to obtain an excellent result on their behalf. Due to the risk that they might never be recovered, Class Counsel endeavored to keep expenses to a minimum. Accordingly, Class Counsel respectfully request reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $4,046,323.05.[12]

F. In The Future, Co-Lead Counsel Will Make Subsequent Applications For The Court's Consideration For Fees and Expenses Related To Claims Settlement, Administration, And Processing.

The processing and administration of Class Members' claims for the Second Round Settlements will begin in earnest following the March 31, 2016 deadline to submit claims. The Claims Administrator has mailed direct notice to potential Class members in accordance with the Court-approved notice plan. Class Members have been submitting claims and will continue to do so through the March 31, 2016 deadline. Before payment of such claims can be [12] In addition to the expenses described here and in greater detail in the Joint Declaration, payments totaling $5,142,299.00 have been made from the settlement escrow accounts for class notice as directed by the Court, related expenses regarding preliminary or final approval, and related bank fees. In addition, invoices related to notice totaling $494,000.00 are outstanding and in the process of review. To the extent appropriate, they will be paid from the settlement escrow accounts. These payments were, or will be, made pursuant to language in each of the Settling Defendant's Settlement Agreements reserving a specific amount of such Settling Defendant's payment that may be used for payment of notice and related costs (and which would be non-refundable to the settling Defendant in the event the settlement was not finally approved), and have already been authorized by the Court. While these payments are not included in the requested reimbursement in this petition, and have already been paid or have been authorized by the Court to be paid from those escrow accounts, we describe those expenditures here to fully describe all litigation-related expenses incurred in this case.

recommended to the Court for its approval, each claim will have to be verified and in some cases audited, to ensure that the Class Member is qualified and that its claimed purchases are allowable.

Expenditures for escrow fees, taxes on the escrowed funds, and preparation of those tax forms, also will be necessary in the foreseeable future. In addition, as described in the long-form Class Notice, see ECF No. 1204-6 at 12, at the end of the litigation Co-Lead Counsel intend to ask the Court to allow service awards to the Plaintiffs who have served as Class Representatives.

Accordingly, in the future and as appropriate Co-Lead Counsel will apply to the Court for approval to pay expenses related to the escrow accounts, claims administration and processing, and Class Representative service awards. These items may be considered by the Court in due course before any such expense payments are made.

G. Class Members Have Received Notice and Will Have an Opportunity to Object.

The Class Notice approved by this Court informed potential Class members that Class Counsel would seek a fee award of up to 33% of the settlement fund, and would also seek reimbursement for expenses. ECF No. 1204-6 at 12. That Notice has been distributed to potential Class members in accordance with the Court's order approving notice. Joint Decl. ¶ 314. Likewise, this fee petition and all papers filed in connection with it will be posted to the settlement website within 24 hours of filing, as directed by the Court. ECF No. 1229. Any objections from Class Members, if any, are to be filed by September 18, 2015. If there are any such objections, Class Counsel will respond before the November 2, 2015 final approval hearing.

IV. CONCLUSION

For all of the reasons set forth above, Co-Lead Counsel respectfully requests that the Court enter an Order awarding a second interim award of attorneys' fees and expenses as follows:

(1) Class Counsel is awarded 25% of the Total Available Settlement Fund of $168,986,724.33 as interim attorneys' fees, for a total second interim fee award of $42,246,681.08, to be paid as follows:

a. $40,684,181.08, to be paid immediately from funds currently paid into the Settlement Fund;

b. $250,000.00, to be paid upon Final Approval of the Geodis settlement from the final portion of the settlement proceeds ($1,000,000.00) scheduled to be paid into the Settlement Fund by Geodis at that time;

c. $1,250,000.00, to be paid fifteen days after Final Approval of the Agility settlement, or on January 4, 2016, whichever is later, from the final portion of the settlement proceeds ($5,000,000.00) scheduled to be paid into the Settlement Fund by Agility at that time; and

d. $62,500.00, to be paid on May 8, 2016, from the final portion of the settlement proceeds ($250,000) scheduled to be paid into the Settlement Fund by Jet Speed at that time; and

(2) Class Counsel is awarded $4,046,323.05 as reimbursement for interim litigation expenses.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

IN RE: NOVARTIS AND PAR ANTITRUST LITIGATION THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: All Direct Purchaser Class Actions	Case No. 1:18-cv-04361 (AKH)

~~[PROPOSED]~~ ORDER GRANTING FINAL JUDGMENT AND ORDER OF DISMISSAL APPROVING DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS SETTLEMENT AND DISMISSING DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS CLAIMS

Pursuant to Rule 23(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement dated December 23, 2022, between plaintiffs Drogueria Betances, LLC ("Betances"), Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. ("RDC"), FWK Holdings, LLC ("FWK") and KPH Healthcare Services, Inc., a/k/a Kinney Drugs, Inc. ("KPH") (collectively, the "Class Representatives"), and on behalf of the Class defined below (together with the Class Representatives, the "Plaintiffs"), and Defendants Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corporation and Novartis AG (collectively "Novartis"), it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

1. This Final Judgment and Order of Dismissal hereby incorporates by reference the definitions in the Settlement Agreement among Plaintiffs and Novartis, and all capitalized terms used and not otherwise defined herein shall have the meanings set forth in the Settlement Agreement.

2. The following class (the "Class" or "Direct Purchaser Class") has been certified under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3):

> All persons or entities in the United States, including its territories, possessions, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, who purchased > Exforge directly from Novartis, or who purchased a generic version of Exforge directly from Par, at any time during the Class Period from September 21, 2012, until March 30, 2015 ("Exforge Direct Purchasers"). Excluded from the Class are Novartis and Par and their officers, directors, management and employees, predecessors, subsidiaries and affiliates, and all federal governmental entities.

> Also excluded from the Class for purposes of this Settlement Agreement are the following entities: CVS Pharmacy, Inc. (which includes Omnicare), Rite Aid Corporation, Rite Aid Hdqtrs. Corp., Walgreen Co., The Kroger Co. (which includes Peytons), and H-E-B L.P. ("Retailer Plaintiffs").

3. The Court previously appointed the Class Representatives Betances, RDC, FWK and KPH. The Court previously appointed Garwin Gerstein & Fisher, LLP as Lead Counsel for the Class ("Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives and Class Counsel have fairly and adequately represented the interests of the Class and satisfied the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g).

4. The Court has jurisdiction over these actions, each of the parties, and all members of the Class for all manifestations of this case, including this Settlement.

5. The notice of settlement (substantially in the form presented to this Court as Exhibit B to the Settlement Agreement) (the "Notice") directed to the members of the Class via First Class Mail, constituted the best notice practicable under the circumstances. In making this determination, the Court finds that the Notice provided for individual notice to all members of the Class who were identified through reasonable efforts. Pursuant to, and in accordance with, Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court hereby finds that the Notice provided Class Members due and adequate notice of the Settlement, the Settlement Agreement, these proceedings, and the rights of Class Members to object to the Settlement.

6. Due and adequate notice of the proceedings having been given to the Class and a full opportunity having been offered to the Class to participate in the May 16, 2023 Fairness

Hearing, it is hereby determined that all Class Members are bound by this Order and Final Judgment.

7. The Settlement of this Direct Purchaser Class Action was not the product of collusion between the Class Representatives and Novartis or their respective counsel, but rather was the result of bona fide and extensive arm's-length negotiations conducted in good faith between Class Counsel and counsel for Novartis, with the assistance of a mediator, Eric D. Green.

8. Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this Court hereby approves the Settlement, and finds that the Settlement is, in all respects, fair, reasonable and adequate to Class members and in their best interests. Accordingly, the Settlement shall be consummated in accordance with the terms and provisions of the Settlement Agreement.

9. The Court hereby approves the Plan of Allocation of the Settlement Fund as proposed by Class Counsel (the "Plan of Allocation"), which was summarized in the Notice of Proposed Settlement and is attached to Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of Settlement, and directs RG/2 Claims Administration, the firm retained by Class Counsel and previously appointed by the Court as the Claims Administrator, to distribute the net Settlement Fund as provided in the Plan of Allocation.

10. All claims brought by the Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs against Novartis in In re: Novartis and Par Antitrust Litigation, 18-cv-04361-AKH (S.D.N.Y.) (the "Direct Purchaser Class Action") are hereby dismissed with prejudice, and without costs (other than as provided herein).

11. Upon the Settlement Agreement becoming final in accordance with Paragraph 6 of the Settlement Agreement, Novartis and its past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, joint ventures, stockholders, officers, directors, management, supervisory boards, insurers, general or limited partners, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, representatives (and the parents', subsidiaries', and affiliates' past, present, and future officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, and assigns of each of the foregoing (collectively, the "Releasees") from all manner of claims, rights, debts, obligations, demands, actions, suits, causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including costs, expenses, penalties and attorneys' fees, under federal or state laws, whether known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, contingent or non-contingent, in law or equity, that arise out of or relate, in whole or in part in any manner to the Direct Purchaser Class Action that accrued prior to the date of this Settlement Agreement, (collectively, this entire paragraph represents the "Released Claims").

12. In addition, Plaintiffs and each Class member, on behalf of themselves and all other Releasors, hereby expressly waive, release and forever discharge, upon the Settlement becoming final, any and all provisions, rights and/or benefits conferred by § 1542 of the California Civil Code, which reads:

> Section 1542. General Release; extent. A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor;

or by any law of any state or territory of the United States, or principle of common law, which is similar, comparable or equivalent to § 1542 of the California Civil Code. Each Releasor may hereafter discover facts other than or different from those which he, she or it knows or believes to be true with respect to the claims which are the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement, but each Releasor hereby expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles, releases, and discharges, upon this Settlement becoming final, any known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, asserted or unasserted, contingent or non-contingent claim that would otherwise fall within the definition of Released Claims, whether or not concealed or hidden, without regard to the subsequent discovery or existence of such different or additional facts. Each Plaintiff and member of the Class also hereby expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles, releases, and discharges any and all claims that are the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement that it may have against any Releasees under § 17200, et seq., of the California Business and Professions Code or any similar comparable or equivalent provision of the law of any other state or territory of the United States or other jurisdiction.

13. As set forth in Paragraph 12 of the Settlement Agreement (with subheading "Reservation of Claims"), the release set forth in Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement (and in Paragraphs 11 and 12 of this Order) shall not release any claims between Plaintiffs, members of the Class, and the Releasors, on the one hand, and Novartis and the Releasees, on the other (a) arising in the ordinary course of business between Releasors and Releasees under Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code (pertaining to sales), the laws of negligence or product liability or implied warranty, breach of contract, breach of express warranty, or personal injury; (b) arising out of or in any way relating to any alleged price-fixing agreement between or among manufacturers of generic pharmaceutical products, including but not limited to Novartis or Sandoz Inc., including claims alleged in In re: Generic Pharmaceuticals Pricing Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 2724, Case No. 16-MD-2724 (E.D. Pa.); and/or (c) of any sort that do not relate specifically to brand or generic Exforge.

14. Upon consideration of Class Counsel's petition for fees, costs and expenses, Class Counsel are hereby awarded attorneys' fees totaling $42,150,000.00 (representing 33 1/3 % of the Settlement Fund net of service awards awarded pursuant to paragraph 15, below), to be paid solely from the Settlement Fund and only if and after the Settlement becomes final in accordance with Paragraph 6 of the Settlement Agreement.

15. Upon consideration of Class Counsel's petition for service awards for Class Representatives, Betances, RDC, FWK and KPH are each hereby awarded $100,000, to be paid solely from the Settlement Fund and only if and after the Settlement becomes final in accordance with Paragraph 6 of the Settlement Agreement. Class Counsel Bruce E. Gerstein of Garwin Gerstein & Fisher LLP shall allocate and distribute such attorneys' fees among the various Class Counsel which have participated in this litigation. The Releasees shall have no responsibility for, and no liability whatsoever with respect to, any payment or disbursement of attorneys' fees, expenses, costs or service awards among Class Counsel and/or Class Representatives, nor with respect to any allocation of attorneys' fees, expenses, costs or service awards to any other person or entity who may assert any claim thereto. The attorneys' fees and service awards authorized and approved by this Final Judgment and Order shall be paid to Garwin Gerstein & Fisher LLP within five (5) business days after the first distributions of the Settlement Fund are made to Class Members or as soon thereafter as is practical and in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement and the Escrow Agreement. The attorneys' fees and service awards authorized and approved by this Final Judgment and Order shall constitute full and final satisfaction of any and all claims that Plaintiffs and any Class member, and their respective counsel, may have or assert for reimbursement of fees, costs, and expenses, and service awards, and Plaintiffs and members of the Class shall not seek or demand payment of any fees and/or costs and/or expenses and/or service awards from Novartis other than from the Settlement Fund.

16. The Court retains exclusive jurisdiction over the Settlement and the Settlement Agreement as described therein, including the administration and consummation of the Settlement, and over this Final Judgment and Order.

17. The Court finds that this Final Judgment and Order adjudicates all of the claims, rights and liabilities of the parties to the Settlement Agreement (including the members of the Class), and is final and shall be immediately appealable. Neither this Order nor the Settlement Agreement nor any other Settlement-related document shall constitute any evidence, admission, or concession by Novartis or any other Releasee, in this or any other matter or proceeding of any kind whatsoever, civil, criminal or otherwise, before any court, administrative agency, regulatory body, or any other body or authority, present or future, nor shall either the Settlement Agreement, this Order, or any other Settlement-related document be offered in evidence or used for any other purpose in this or any other matter or proceeding except as may be necessary to consummate or enforce the Settlement Agreement, the terms of this Order, or if offered by any Releasee in responding to any action purporting to assert Released Claims, or if offered by any Releasor in asserting that a claim is not a Released Claim, including because such claim is covered by Paragraph 12 of the Settlement Agreement ("Reservation of Claims").

SO ORDERED this 25 day of July, 2023

The Honorable Alvin K. Hellerstein
United States District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

Class Counsel representing Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs Drogueria Betances, LLC ("Betances"), Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. ("RDC"), FWK Holdings, LLC ("FWK") and KPH Healthcare Services, Inc., a/k/a Kinney Drugs, Inc. ("KPH"), and the Direct Purchaser Class[1] respectfully submit this memorandum in support of their Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Service Awards for the Class Representatives.

After nearly five years of hard-fought litigation, Class Counsel has secured a $126,850,000 cash payment from Defendants Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corporation and Novartis AG (collectively, "Novartis")[2] for the benefit of the Class (the "Settlement"), which Novartis already has funded into an escrow account. If approved by the Court, the proposed Settlement would be "an exceedingly good settlement." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 7:4-5. Moreover, efficiency was paramount in Class Counsel's efforts. As the Court observed, "given what's at stake with this case, the number of times that you needed judicial intervention to resolve the dispute was very few. And I think it says something about the professionalism of both plaintiffs' and defendants' lawyers." Id. 23:20-25. The Settlement was a result of the skill, creativity, perseverance, and hard work of

[1] The "Class" or "Direct Purchaser Class" is defined in the Court's preliminary approval order (ECF No. 595) as:

> All persons or entities in the United States, including its territories, possessions, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, who purchased brand Exforge directly from Novartis, or who purchased a generic version of Exforge directly from Par, at any time during the period from September 21, 2012 until March 30, 2015 ("Exforge Direct Purchasers"). Excluded from the Class are Novartis and Par and their officers, directors, management and employees, predecessors, subsidiaries and affiliates, and all federal governmental entities.
> Also excluded from the Class for purposes of this Settlement Agreement are the following entities: CVS Pharmacy, Inc. (which includes Omnicare), Rite Aid Corporation, Rite Aid Hdqtrs. Corp., Walgreen Co., The Kroger Co. (which includes Peytons), and H-E-B L.P. ("Retailer Plaintiffs").

[2] Prior to being dismissed with prejudice on January 6, 2023 (ECF No. 594), Par Pharmaceutical, Inc. ("Par") was also a Defendant in this litigation. Novartis and Par may be collectedly referred to as "Defendants" herein.

Class Counsel, who shepherded this case from the outset through briefing class certification, summary judgment and Daubert motions, and intensive preparations for imminent trial. The extensive efforts of Class Counsel in achieving this excellent result are described below and in more detail in the Declaration of Bruce E. Gerstein (the "Gerstein Decl.") and individual law firm declarations, filed contemporaneously herewith (Gerstein Decl. Exs. A-J).

On behalf of Betances, Class Counsel filed the first complaint challenging the December 2, 2011 Novartis-Par License Agreement (the "NPLA") in May 2018. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 1. That complaint challenged the NPLA as a "pay for delay" agreement in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act under the standards set forth in FTC v. Actavis, Inc., 570 U.S. 136 (2013). Class Counsel unearthed this case on behalf of the class without the aid of a preceding government action or investigation. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 2-3.

Class Counsel pursued this case on a wholly contingent basis without any guarantee of success or compensation. The exceptional outcome was the result of their unique skill and experience gained from a 25-year history (and collectively decades of experience) handling similar cases, and perseverance in the face of vigorous defenses from some of the most distinguished defense firms in the country with commensurate experience and skill.

From case investigation through preliminary approval and notice of the Settlement, Class Counsel expended over 43,000 hours of uncompensated professional time equating to approximately $28 million in lodestar based on 2022 rates, and incurred nearly $2.5 million in unreimbursed out-of-pocket expenses. Id. ¶¶ 61, 63-64. As compensation for their efforts, Class Counsel seek an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of 1/3 (or 33 ⅓%) of the settlement fund, net of expenses, reimbursement of incurred expenses, and service awards for the class representatives, i.e., $41,325,497.58, plus a proportionate amount of accrued interest.[3] In support of this request Class Counsel submit their contemporaneous time records as Exhibits K-T to the Gerstein. Decl. Class Counsel also seek reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $2,473,507.26. Id. ¶¶ 61, 63-64. Finally, Class Counsel also seek service awards in the amount of $100,000 each for class representatives Betances, RDC, FWK and KPH. These requests are justified for several reasons.

First, the size of the settlement—$126,850,000—is substantial. As the Court observed, the settlement recovery of $126.85 million, or approximately 85% of Plaintiffs' conservative damages estimates, is "an exceedingly good settlement." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 3:17 - 7:5; Gerstein Decl. ¶ 46.[4]

Second, the sought fee is consistent with "a baseline reasonable fee by reference to other common fund settlements of a similar size, complexity and subject matter." Moreno v. Deutsche Bank Ams. Holding Corp., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36942, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 7, 2019). See also Christine Asia Co. v. Jack Yun Ma, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179836, at *61 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 2019) (to determine reasonableness, courts compare "fee application to fees awarded in similar . . . class-action settlements of comparable value.") (quotation omitted). Here, Class Counsel's requested fee is in line with numerous prior pay-for-delay antitrust cases:

Case	Settlement	Fee	Multiplier
La. Wholesale Drug Co. v. Pfizer, Inc. (In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig.), No. 02-1830, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 206338, at *17 (D.N.J. Aug. 6, 2014)	$191MM	33 ⅓%	1.99

[3] This amount is derived by subtracting the total requested service awards ($400,000) and expenses ($2,473,507.26) from the settlement amount of $126,850,000.00 and multiplying the result by 1/3. [($126,850,000 - $400,000 - $2,473,507.26) * 1/3 = $41,325,497.58].

[4] Other damages estimates depend on Plaintiffs being able to prove, inter alia, that the NPLA was fraudulently concealed from Plaintiffs, which was the subject of one of Defendants' summary judgment motions and about which the Court expressed skepticism. Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 3:25 - 4:5.

Third, as a general matter, "[d]istrict courts in the Second Circuit routinely award attorneys' fees that are 30 percent or greater." Velez v. Novartis Pharms. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125945, at *59 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 30, 2010) (collecting cases); N.J. Carpenters Health Fund v. Royal Bank of Scot. Grp., PLC, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39807, at *22 (S.D.N.Y. LEXIS 177175, at *31 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2014)).

Fourth, the fee sought equates to a 1.48 multiplier[5] of Class Counsel's total lodestar, which is reasonable and within the range of multipliers approved by courts in similar cases. See infra III.C. This modest multiplier is justified by the unusually high risk, length, and complexities of this case, coupled with Class Counsel's high-quality performance. A simple investment of hours alone would not have sufficed to achieve what this Court described as an "exceedingly good settlement," as Class Counsel were faced with novel substantive, procedural and expert-related issues requiring Class Counsel to make use of all of their decades of experience litigating delayed generic entry cases. Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 7:11-15. Indeed, only a small number of law firms have the experience and resources to prosecute and finance direct purchaser Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases like this one. Class Counsel have worked in this area of the law for decades and have developed the field. See Gerstein Decl. Exs. A-J. (counsel declarations).

Fifth, while most antitrust cases are complex and involve risk, delayed generic entry cases such as this are inherently risky. And this case presented even more challenges and risks than the typical case. Class Counsel faced a thicket of complex facts involving multiple contracts in the context of the intersection of antitrust law, patent law, drug manufacturing, and Hatch-Waxman drug approval regulations. Layered atop these complex questions of fact and law, Class Counsel also had to prove, among other things, (1) what would have occurred in the absence of the challenged reverse payment (i.e., whether and when Par, and other generics, would have won a patent challenge, launched generic Exforge without a license, or entered the market under a lawful license, and whether Novartis would have been willing and able to launch authorized generic Exforge simultaneously with Par's launch); and (2) the damages to the Class from the reverse payment. If not addressed properly, the Class's potential recovery could have been curtailed or eliminated.

Class Counsel were undeterred by these unique complications and risks, resulting in an excellent settlement for the Class.

The risks Class Counsel faced here were real. Previous reverse-payment cases were dismissed after significant outlays of time and expenses by Class Counsel because of intervening judicial decisions, successful summary judgment motions, or adverse jury verdicts. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 51-54. For instance, in 2010, over the Honorable Rosemary Pooler's dissent, the Second Circuit, en banc, affirmed a district court's grant of summary judgment in a case alleging a $400 million cash reverse payment concerning the drug Cipro, because of the then-emerging "scope-of-the-patent" test. See Ark. Carpenters Health & Welfare Fund v. Bayer AG, 604 F.3d 98 (2d Cir. 2010), reh'g denied, 625 F.3d 779 (2d Cir. 2010). Three years later, after denying certiorari in Cipro, the Supreme Court issued FTC v. Actavis, Inc., 570 U.S. 136 (2013), enabling a later-filing group of Cipro indirect purchasers to reach settlements in California state court worth hundreds of millions of dollars. See In re Cipro Cases I & II, 348 P.3d 845 (Cal. 2015), on remand, 2018 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 3258, at *3 (Cal. Ct. App. May 14, 2018) (settlement described). The direct purchaser class in that case made no recovery despite significant expenditures of time and money by Class Counsel.

Even after Actavis was decided, dismissals of other cases at the Rule 12 and Rule 56 stages quickly revealed that Actavis was not a panacea for the risk these cases present. See In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 133 F. Supp. 3d 734 (E.D. Pa. 2015) (granting the defendants' summary judgment motion in reverse payment case), aff'd, In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 868 F.3d 132 (3d Cir. 2017); In re Actos End Payor Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127748 (S.D.N.Y. Sep. 22, 2015) (pre-answer dismissal in reverse payment case); In re Effexor XR Antitrust Litig., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142206 (D.N.J. Oct. 6, 2014) (same); In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 46 F. Supp. 3d 523 (D.N.J. 2014) (same); In re Loestrin 24 Fe Antitrust Litig., 45 F. Supp. 3d 180 (D.R.I. 2014) (same); In re Lamictal Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 18 F. Supp. 3d 560

(D.N.J. 2014) (same). Wellbutrin XL was affirmed on appeal while the others were reversed, but the legal landscape was plainly challenging (and unpredictable) after Actavis. Even getting to a jury was no guarantee of success for the plaintiffs. E.g., Second Amended Judgment in a Civil Case, In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., No. 1:14-cv-10150 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 22, 2022), ECF No. 1067 (granting judgment after trial following jury verdict for defendant in a reverse payment case); In re Nexium (Esomeprazole) Antitrust Litig., 842 F.3d 34, 39 (1st Cir. 2016) (upholding jury verdict for defendant where plaintiff proved an antitrust violation but not causation or damages). See also La. Wholesale Drug Co. v. Sanofi-Aventis, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77206, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 28, 2009) (reflecting jury verdict for defendant in generic delay case).

Sixth, this case was settled at a very advanced stage, with nothing left but trial and with intense preparations for same under way. Class Counsel took this case through exhaustive fact and expert discovery, significant motion practice (under Rules 12, 23, 56, 702/Daubert, privilege-related proceedings, and the preparation of numerous motions in limine), trial preparation (including preparation and exchange of a joint pretrial order and jury instructions), and mediation proceedings. The volume of work and level of commitment from Class Counsel required to reach that late stage in the litigation and ability, against the backdrop of numerous variables that could have diminished or eliminated the chance of any recovery by the Class, to secure such a favorable settlement for the Class further supports Class Counsel's fee request.

In short, these factors strongly support the requested fee—equaling a modest multiplier of 1.48—requested herein.

II. SUMMARY OF CLASS COUNSEL'S LITIGATION EFFORTS

A. Pre-Filing Investigation

Class Counsel began investigating this case in the spring of 2018. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 1. Class Counsel analyzed the sequencing of entry of brand, generic and authorized generic ("AG") Exforge and discovered that Novartis's authorized generic Exforge launched on March 31, 2015, just over 180 days after Par's September 30, 2014 generic Exforge launch. Other companies' generic versions of Exforge launched at the same time as Novartis's AG.

Class Counsel determined through independent research and analysis that Par's launch date was the result of a negotiated license agreement between Novartis and Par. ECF No. 1 ¶¶ 106, 131. Class Counsel then analyzed Novartis's licensed patents: the 5,399,578, 6,294,197 and 6,395,728 patents. As to the 5,399,578 patent, Class Counsel determined that it expired on September 21, 2012, and could not have prevented Par's entry after that date. Class Counsel next analyzed Novartis's 6,294,197 and 6,395,728 patents, as well as Par's generic product, and determined that it was unlikely that Par's product infringed those patents. Id. ¶¶ 75-90. Based on FDA documents, Class Counsel also determined that there appeared to be no regulatory impediment to Par launching generic Exforge earlier than it did.

Based on these facts, i.e., the existence of an agreement, the timing of Novartis's AG launch about 181 days after Par's generic launch, and the apparent non-infringing nature of Par's generic, Class Counsel concluded that the NPLA was likely a "No-AG" reverse payment agreement that was unlawful under Actavis and caused the Class to suffer overcharges.

On May 16, 2018, Class Counsel filed the first case under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, with four claims challenging Novartis's reverse payment to Par under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 1. Other direct purchasers, retailers and end-payors followed with complaints of their own. Id. ¶¶ 1, 5.

B. Prosecution of the Case

1. The Motion to Dismiss

On September 17, 2018, Novartis and Par filed a motion to dismiss. ECF No. 86. Reflecting the strength of Plaintiffs' allegations, Defendants did not seek to dismiss the core allegation that the NPLA constituted an unlawful reverse payment under Actavis and therefore did not seek complete dismissal of Plaintiffs' case. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 7. Instead, the motion centered on whether agreeing to a No-AG period of September 30, 2014 through March 1, 2015, during which Par, but not Novartis, competed in the generic market, was per se unlawful under the antitrust laws or subject to analysis under the rule of reason. Because the core of Plaintiffs' allegations were not dismissed, Class Counsel turned to discovery next.

2. Discovery

(a) Fact Discovery

Even though, as the Court observed,[6] Class Counsel avoided significant judicial intervention in discovery, Plaintiffs mostly prevailed when intervention was necessary. For example, by Order dated June 6, 2019, the Court granted Plaintiffs' motion to compel Novartis to produce documents reflecting prior instances it launched an AG, because those prior instances were benchmarks against which to weigh the timing of the Exforge AG launch. ECF No. 165. Similarly, on June 18, 2019, the Court granted Plaintiffs' motion to compel the production of Defendants' sales data through December 2017, an important input to Plaintiffs' expert's damages model. ECF No. 167. The Court also granted Plaintiffs' motion to compel non-party Lupin Limited and Lupin Pharmaceuticals, Inc.'s responses to a document subpoena, which were important for causation purposes. ECF No. 253. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 23. Class Counsel also were largely successful [6] Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 23:20-25 ("The Court: . . . given what's at stake with this case, the number of times that you needed judicial intervention to resolve the dispute was very few. And I think it says something about the professionalism of both plaintiffs' and defendants' lawyers.").

in enforcing a subpoena in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania against non-party Alembic for sales data. Id. ¶ 22.

Class Counsel analyzed millions of pages of documents and lines of transaction data from Defendants and third parties for use in depositions, expert reports, seeking class certification, opposing summary judgment and in anticipation of trial. Id. ¶¶ 12-15. Class Counsel also served two sets of document requests and two sets of interrogatories, twenty subpoenas on third parties, took nineteen fact and five expert depositions, and defended four fact and ten expert depositions (38 depositions overall). Id. ¶¶ 12-18. Class Counsel did so efficiently, limiting the participation of counsel for the direct purchaser class to one attendee during the five depositions during which counsel for another plaintiff group was the primary questioner. October 8, 2020 Hearing Tr. 8:9-15.

As discussed below, Class Counsel's diligent pursuit of evidence armed Plaintiffs with documentary evidence and testimony to support their class certification motion, to oppose Defendants' summary judgment and Daubert motions, and to prepare for trial.

(b) Privilege Disputes

Class Counsel materially advanced the case by doggedly pursuing privilege related disputes. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 24-25. At the Court's suggestion (Aug. 4, 2021 Hearing Tr. at 63:25-64:2), Plaintiffs submitted a privilege waiver/evidence preclusion motion, arguing that Novartis placed legal advice "at issue" by asserting defenses that impliedly invoked legal advice. ECF No. 359. These issues included Defendants' subjective beliefs concerning patent strength, interpretation of the NPLA, and whether Defendants could have reached an alternative procompetitive license agreement providing for an earlier generic entry date instead of the NPLA. Id. This motion, which was fully briefed at the time of settlement, had the potential to substantially narrow Novartis's available defenses. Plaintiffs continued to press the waiver argument in connection with Defendants' Daubert and summary judgment arguments. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 25.

3. Class Certification

Class Counsel developed the evidence necessary to support their motion for class certification, which was filed on March 15, 2022. ECF No. 497. While that motion was pending, Plaintiffs and Novartis settled and Plaintiffs again sought certification in the settlement context. During a hearing on January 6, 2023, the Court determined that the requirements for class certification had been met. Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 18:11-26:13. The Court certified the Class by Order dated January 6, 2023. ECF No. 595.

4. Experts

At their sole risk and expense (totaling $2 million), Class Counsel retained ten experts who each issued at least one report, and who sat for at least one deposition. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 27-28. Plaintiffs also deposed each of Defendants' five experts. Id. ¶¶ 29-30. This effort required Class Counsel to master exceptionally complex material. Class Counsel ensured that each expert was fully prepared to provide comprehensible testimony at trial had this action not settled. Plaintiffs' experts provided crucial reports and testimony on the subject matter listed below:

Expert	Subject Matter
Donald S. Allen	Whether Novartis, or a reasonable company in Novartis's position, would have been ready and able to launch Exforge AG earlier and to satisfy demand for both the brand and the AG.
Glen P. Belvis	How a reasonable and experienced patent litigator would assess Novartis's chances of success in patent litigation.
Stephen R. Byrn	Noninfringement and invalidity of certain Novartis's patents.
Einer Elhauge	Whether the NPLA was anticompetitive and whether there existed an economically rational entry date absent the challenged reverse payment.

Jeffrey J. Leitzinger	Class certification, including class wide antitrust impact and damages, and aggregate damages for the Class.
Luis A. Molina	Whether Novartis, or a reasonable company in Novartis's position, would have been willing and financially incentivized to launch AG Exforge simultaneously with Par's generic launch.
Arthur Schwartzbard	Clinical differentiation of Exforge from other hypertension treatments.
Martha A. Starr	Relevant market and market power.
Bernice Tao	Whether there were regulatory impediments to Par and other generic companies receiving earlier FDA final approval to sell generic Exforge.
Jay R. Thomas	FDA drug approval framework established by the Hatch-Waxman Act and the Patent Act.

5. Summary Judgment and Daubert Motions

After expert discovery ended, Defendants filed two summary judgment motions. Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 33-34. Defendants' first motion argued that the statute of limitations either mandated dismissal of Plaintiffs' claims, or significantly diminished their value. Id. ¶ 34. Specifically, they argued that the "continuing violation" doctrine did not apply because the NPLA's 2012 execution was the allegedly unlawful conduct, and Plaintiffs did not sue until 2018. Id. While Defendants' motion was pending, the issue of the application of the continuing violation doctrine to purchasers was presented to the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Litovich v. Bank of America, case No. 21-2905. The outcome of the appeal in Litovich, which is pending a decision, introduced significant risk for Plaintiffs. Id. Defendants also argued that even if the continuing violation doctrine applied, Plaintiffs could not satisfy the elements of fraudulent concealment to toll the running of the statute of limitations and thus Plaintiffs' claims were time barred as to damages incurred before May 2014. Id. While Class Counsel believe that Plaintiffs had good responsive arguments, the Court expressed skepticism. See Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 3:19-4:5 (expressing skepticism about fraudulent concealment).

Defendants' second motion for summary judgment argued that Plaintiffs could not prove causation or damages. Defendants argued that Plaintiffs' theory — that Defendants would have entered into a lawful agreement without a reverse payment and with earlier Par entry — was speculative and unsupported. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 34. Although Class Counsel believe that their causation theories were well-supported, a victory was not certain.

Including their reply, Defendants supported their 99 pages of summary judgment arguments with a 273-paragraph fact statement and 108 exhibits. Id. ¶ 34. Defendants also filed six Daubert motions, totaling an additional 122 pages of briefing (including replies) and 33 exhibits. Id. ¶¶ 33, 35.

Class Counsel opposed Defendants' summary judgment and Daubert motions with extensive filings. Id. ¶¶ 37-38. Defendants sought to strike some of Plaintiffs' factual responses to their summary judgment motions from the record. Id. ¶ 34. Plaintiffs opposed, but there was a risk that certain key responses would be stricken.

Settlement discussions in this case came against the backdrop of these pending summary judgment and Daubert motions, and the pending class motion.

6. Trial Preparation

Following summary judgment briefing, Class Counsel began preparing for trial scheduled for January 9, 2023. ECF No. 379. Class Counsel exchanged with Novartis a proposed pretrial order, jury instructions, stipulations of fact and voir dire questions. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 40. Class Counsel also prepared drafts of exhibit lists, deposition designations, and multiple motions in limine and were generally preparing for trial. Id.

7. Mediation and Settlement

The parties reached an agreement in principle on October 6, 2022, following a full-day mediation in Boston before Eric D. Green of Resolutions, LLC, a prominent mediator. Id. ¶ 42. As part of that process, Class Counsel provided Mr. Green with voluminous submissions. Id. ¶ 43. During the mediation, counsel for each side presented their views of the merits of each other's positions and proceeded to an intense period of arm's-length negotiations. Id.

III. ARGUMENT

A. Class Counsel Should Be Awarded Reasonable Attorneys' Fees

As the Court acknowledged, the $126,850,000 settlement with Novartis on behalf of the Class is an "exceedingly good settlement." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 7:11-15. As explained below, the indisputable value and benefit conferred on the Class by this settlement is a testament to Class Counsel's determined pursuit of victory at every stage of this litigation and warrants the reasonable attorneys' fees sought here of 33 ⅓% of the net settlement amount, constituting a modest multiplier of 1.48.

Under the "equitable fund" doctrine, attorneys for the plaintiffs in a class action may petition the court for compensation from the settlement fund. Boeing v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h) ("In a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees . . . that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement."). "[R]egardless of whether a case is brought pursuant to a statute with a fee-shifting provision, if the parties settle the case by creating a common fund, common-fund principles control class counsel's fee recovery." Fresno County Emps. Ret. Ass'n v. Isaacson, 925 F.3d 63, 67 (2d Cir. 2019). The reasonableness of a fee is determined from the "plaintiff's perspective" and "can account for contingency risk where such risk exists." Id. at 70.

In common fund cases, to determine a fee, courts may use both the "percentage of the fund" or the "lodestar" methods. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 369 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir. 2005). However, "[t]he trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method." In re Payment Card Interchange Fee & Merch. Disc. Antitrust Litig., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 216796, at *25 (E.D.N.Y. Dec. 16, 2019). This is because "once the parties have agreed to settle, the percentage-of-the-fund methodology serves as an important motivation for counsel to maximize the class's recovery, and, a fortiori, counsel's fee." Fresno County Employees, 925 F.3d at 71. See also Fitzpatrick, Brian T., A Fiduciary Judge's Guide to Awarding Fees In Class Actions, 89 Fordham Law Review 1151, at 1170 (2021) (observing that where a court can monitor against premature settlement—which clearly is not an issue here where the parties were preparing for trial—then the percentage of recovery, not lodestar, is the best method for determining appropriate attorneys' fees). The percentage method also dispenses with the burden of a lodestar computation, but courts generally assess the hours submitted by counsel as a "cross-check" on the reasonableness of the requested percentage. Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 50 (2d Cir. 2000) (quotation omitted). See also In re Telik, Inc. Sec. Litig., 576 F. Supp. 2d 570, 586 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) ("[T]he administrative problems associated with the lodestar method, and the advantages presented by the percentage of recovery approach, [have] led most district courts in this Circuit to adopt the percentage of recovery methodology.").

Guided by the following factors, this Court has discretion to determine a reasonable fee: "(1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation …; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50; In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 671 F. Supp. 2d 467, 480 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). At bottom, a fee award should be based on what is reasonable under the circumstances. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 47.

Where, as here, the contingency risk is significant, a reasonable fee should include compensation for such risk. The Second Circuit explained this:

> The plaintiff class is therefore appropriately charged for contingency risk where such risk is appreciable because the class has benefited from class counsel's decision to devote resources to the class's cause at the expense of taking other cases. That is, because class counsel has decided to represent the plaintiff class, class counsel's ability to freely represent other clients is limited by the risk she has assumed that the class's cause will be unsuccessful. The class, having been enriched by counsel's acceptance of its cause at the expense of other clients' causes, may be charged for counsel's assumption of risk on its behalf.

Fresno County Emps., 925 F.3d at 70. In In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation, the district court awarded a 33 ⅓% fee on a $586 million settlement, concluding that "[i]t is precisely the promise of a reasonable fee that encourages plaintiffs' attorneys to accept cases such as these and risk spending their own financial resources and personal efforts for years until recovery can be obtained for the class." 671 F. Supp. 2d at 502; id. at 516 ("[t]his fee takes into account the risks counsel undertook to represent class members and the hard work that was put into resolving this litigation.").

Here, Class Counsel's request for a fee of 33 ⅓% of the settlement fund is supported by the Goldberger factors and consistent with the law and awards in similar cases.

B. The Goldberger Factors Support Class Counsel's Fee Request

1. The Time and Labor Counsel Expended

Class Counsel expended 43,348.60 hours in prosecuting this case starting from its investigation in early 2018 through the end of January 2023 (excluding time relating to this motion). Gerstein Decl. ¶ 61. As detailed above and in the Gerstein Declaration, Class Counsel: (a) survived a motion to dismiss (id. ¶¶ 7-10); (b) reviewed and analyzed millions of pages of documents and lines of transaction data from Defendants and third parties (id. ¶¶ 12-17); (c) took or defended 38 fact and expert depositions (id. ¶ 18); (d) consulted with and retained 10 experts in wide-ranging disciplines (id. ¶ 27); (e) engaged in substantial discovery motion practice, including on the issue of privilege (id. ¶¶ 19-26); (f) fully briefed class certification (id. ¶ 32); (g) opposed Defendants' comprehensive summary judgment and Daubert motions (id. ¶¶ 33-38); (h) substantially prepared for trial that was scheduled for January 2023(id. ¶ 40); and (i) prepared for and participated in successful mediation (id. ¶¶ 42-43).

This was a large amount of work, performed efficiently, rapidly and creatively in the heart of the pandemic. Moreover, Class Counsel will be expending a significant number of hours in connection with administering the Settlement. See Garcia v. Pancho Villa's of Huntington Vill., Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144446, at *22-23 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 4, 2012) (acknowledging that class counsel would perform more work on behalf of the class after final approval, including "assisting with the administration of the settlement, and answering Class Member questions, which further supports their fee request"). The significant time and labor that has been (and will be) expended by Class Counsel support the reasonableness of the fee request.

2. The Magnitude and Complexities of the Litigation

"An antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute." In re Motorsports Merch. Antitrust Litig., 112 F. Supp. 2d 1329, 1337 (N.D. Ga. 2000). See also In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138479, at *148-49 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015) (price-fixing conspiracy required "complex expert analysis and review of mountains of documents"); In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 951 F. Supp. 2d 739, 743 (E.D. Pa. 2013) ("Antitrust class actions are particularly complex to litigate and therefore quite expensive."). This lawsuit in particular featured unique wrinkles. For instance, this case uniquely required Class Counsel to master various complexities of patent law to show the likelihood that Par would have prevailed on infringement and validity challenges. Contrary to other generic delay cases, Class Counsel would have to show this without the benefit of an underlying patent litigation record, since Novartis opted never to sue Par for infringement before the NPLA was executed. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 31. As a prerequisite, Class Counsel had to master the biopharmaceutical aspects of hypertension. Id. This case also required Class Counsel to master several challenging and interwoven areas of FDA generic drug approval, pharmaceutical manufacturing procedures and timing, as well as Novartis and Par's internal forecasting and manufacturing planning documents. Id. Class Counsel used their learning to construct a but-for world absent the challenged conduct with robust earlier generic competition, including from non-party generic manufacturers.

It is hard to overstate the complexities that this massive litigation presented, and the challenge Class Counsel faced in making them comprehensible to a lay jury.

3. The Risk of the Litigation

"[R]isk of the litigation is one of the most important factors, if not the foremost factor, to consider when determining the reasonableness of fee." Woburn Ret. Sys. v. Salix Pharms., Ltd., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132515, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 18, 2017). See also Christine Asia Co., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179836, at *62 (similar). When lawyers undertake litigation on a contingency basis, they face the risk of non-payment. See id. at *63 ("might never have been recovered."). See also Woburn Ret. Sys., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132515 at *17 (lawyers on contingency "assume a great deal of risk").

This litigation presented substantial risks. When Class Counsel filed this case five years ago, no government agency had taken any action to prosecute the challenged conduct. Class Counsel did not have the advantage of "piggy backing" on pre-existing litigation or the reassurance of liability associated with a coinciding government indictment or guilty plea when it initiated the case. Class Counsel then spent years, thousands of hours, and millions of dollars, on a purely contingent basis, facing off against some of the most highly regarded law firms in the country with attorneys who, like Class Counsel, have extensive experience litigating delayed generic entry cases and filed two summary judgment motions which were pending at the time of settlement.

Further, even if unsuccessful at summary judgment, Novartis still could have persuaded the jury that the NPLA did not contain a "No-AG" clause but rather a mere "notice provision" that provided Par sufficient lead time to manufacture generic Exforge. Novartis also could have persuaded the jury that even if the NPLA did contain a reverse payment, it was not "large" or "unjustified" under Actavis. Novartis would have also pursued before the jury their aggressive argument that the NPLA did not actually cause any generic delay, nor Plaintiffs' injuries, because Par would not have launched generic Exforge without a license and no alternative license with an earlier entry date was possible. Moreover, assuming Plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment allegations survived summary judgment, Plaintiffs would have to convince the jury that Plaintiffs' evidence met the elements of fraudulent concealment, including lack of actual or constructive knowledge, in the face of Novartis's purportedly contrary evidence.

While Plaintiffs would have to satisfy every element and sub-element of an antitrust cause of action, including violation of the Sherman Act under the rule of reason, causation, and damages, Novartis would have to prevail on just one to defeat or substantially devalue Plaintiffs' claims. The risk from this imbalance is demonstrated by the recent defense verdict in the Opana ER litigation in the Northern District of Illinois, where the jury found an antitrust violation, but returned a verdict for the brand defendant Endo due to perceived procompetitive justifications. In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., 1:14-cv-10150 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 22, 2022), ECF No. 1067.

These risks would present themselves yet again during the inevitable appeal to the Second Circuit, and conceivably the Supreme Court. Viewed against these risks, the $126.85 million Settlement that, as the Court observed, is "exceedingly good" and equal to approximately 85% of Plaintiffs' conservative damages estimate, as described above. See also Gerstein Decl. ¶ 46. These risks "of establishing liability and proving damages [], further support the granting of the application for fees." Christine Asia Co., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179836, at *64.

4. The Quality of Representation

Class Counsel have decades of experience pursuing and trying delayed generic antitrust cases. See Gerstein Decl. ¶ 49. No group of firms has litigated more such cases. And each firm, or its members, specialize and focus on certain aspects of the case (e.g., antitrust liability, market power, pharmaceutical patents, regulatory approval and manufacturing processes, damages, etc.), while working collaboratively on overall case strategy to ensure the team efficiently litigates the case and utilizes its vast sophisticated litigation experience to benefit the Class and evaluate the appropriateness of settlement. The results speak for themselves: Class Counsel have recovered billions of dollars on behalf of substantially similar classes.

Here, Class Counsel vigorously litigated this unusually complicated case from initial investigation in early-2018 into trial preparation and settlement with both skill and faithful adherence to the Class's best interests at every stage. As the Court recognized, among Class Counsel are "the leading attorneys in this field representing plaintiffs, and you showed your competence in the way you handled this case." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 23:16-19. See also id. 19:7-14 (this was "a five-year litigation. It was hard fought. There were a lot of procedural issues that had to be surmounted. There were motions that had to be surmounted. There were discovery issues that had to be taken care of. And you saw it through all these in a very fine fashion and brought this case to the point where it was ready for trial.").

Class Counsel's skill and experience was demonstrated by the leading role they took overall. Specifically, while this case was coordinated between multiple plaintiff groups, Class Counsel handled most of the discovery, deposed most of the witnesses in this case, presented the coordinated plaintiffs' joint positions at hearings, drafted most of the briefing, and led trial preparations.

Perhaps most importantly, the extraordinary results achieved by Class Counsel in this case fully support the requested award. Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436 (1983) ("critical factor is the degree of success obtained"); Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55 ("the quality of representation is best measured by results"); In re Lloyd's Am. Tr. Fund Litig., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22663, at *82 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 26, 2002) ("The quality of work performed in a case that settles before trial is best measured by the benefit obtained.") (quoting Behrens v. Wometco Enters. Inc., 118 F.R.D. 534, 547-48 (S.D. Fla. 1988)). Here, as the Court recognized, "85 percent of damage is an exceedingly good settlement. No matter how strong your case, the vagaries of a trial and an appeal and the time factor and the expense factor make an 85 percent settlement exceedingly good." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 7:11-15. This percentage of monetary relief is far greater than in other class actions of comparable complexity. For example, in Fleisher v. Phx. Life Ins. Co., the Court held that a settlement with a cash award amount equal to 68.5% of COI overcharges was "one of the most remunerative settlements this court has ever been asked to approve." 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121574, at *37 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 9, 2015).

And Class Counsel achieved this result in an efficient manner, without overburdening the Court, which recognized that "given what's at stake with this case, the number of times that [Class Counsel] needed judicial intervention to resolve the dispute was very few. And I think it says something about the professionalism of both plaintiffs' and defendants' lawyers." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 23:20-24; id. 24:3-5 ("I noticed the high degree of professionalism in this case and both sides should be commended for that.").

Finally, "the quality of opposing counsel is also important in evaluating the quality of plaintiffs' counsels' work." In re Global Crossing Sec. & ERISA Litig., 225 F.R.D. 436, 467 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Novartis was represented by Cravath Swaine & Moore LLP. As the Court recognized, "taking on a litigation like this against one of the most powerful drug companies represented by one of the most outstanding law firms in the country is not an easy task." Jan. 6, 2023 Hearing Tr. 18:21-24. "That Plaintiffs' Counsel was able to obtain a substantial settlement from these Defendants confirms the quality of Plaintiffs' Counsel's representation in this matter, and is a factor in determining the reasonableness of the fee request." In re Veeco Instruments Sec. Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85554, at *23 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 7, 2007).

5. The Requested Fee in Relation to the Settlement

As discussed in the Introduction, a 33 ⅓% fee is both well within the range of fee awards within this Circuit and for delayed generic entry antitrust cases like this one. Velez, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125945, at *59 (collecting cases); N.J. Carpenters Health Fund, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39807, at *22 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 8, 2019) (quoting In re Hi-Crush Partners L.P. Sec. Litig., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 177175, at *31 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 19, 2014)); In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 671 F. Supp. 2d at 480 (awarding 33 ⅓% of $510 million settlement). See also In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99839, at *77 & n.5 (D. Kan. July 29, 2016) (33 ⅓% fee on $835 million settlement fund); In re Checking Account Overdraft Litig., 830 F. Supp. 2d 1330

(S.D. Fla. 2011) (30% of $410 million settlement); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25067, at *55 (D.D.C. July 16, 2001) (33.7% of $365 million settlement).

Thus, in In re Buspirone Patent Litigation, No. 01-MD-1410 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 17, 2003) (Ex. A), another delayed generic entry antitrust case on behalf of a class of direct purchasers, Judge Koeltl, applying the Goldberger factors, approved a requested fee of 33 ⅓% of a settlement fund of $220 million, reasoning that:

> The fee of one third falls within the range of rates that have been approved in other class actions. Determining then whether the percentage fee is a reasonable in this case applying the traditional standards it's clear . . . that this is a very large and complex litigation. There is always risk involved in the litigation. The fee that's being sought is a completely contingent fee. The case was taken . . . on a contingent basis and that is entitled to greater weight than simply an hourly rate because the lawyers could have walked away having done substantial work with no recovery.

Id. at 41-43. Judge Koeltl's reasoning is equally applicable in this case and supports the requested fee of 33 ⅓% of the net Settlement amount. Class Counsel's effective hourly rate for attorneys for this case was approximately $690. This is well within the range of reasonableness (the multiplier is discussed in Part III.C., infra.). For instance, a 2014 National Law Journal survey, which contained information for 159 of the largest law firms in the U.S., found a median rate for the highest partner billing rate category of $775 and a median hourly rate for the highest billing associates of $510. See Ex. B, hereto. Rates have increased dramatically in the decade since. See Ex. C, hereto.

Reductions to the percentage award should not be considered because to do so would disincentivize class action lawyers from holding out for incremental benefits on behalf of the class. See In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 197 F.R.D. 71, 80 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) ("[A]djusting downward the percentage of the recovery awarded to counsel as plaintiffs' recovery increases . . . may give rise to an attorney incentive problem by creating declining marginal returns to effort for counsel . . . Again, this method can create an incentive to settle quickly and cheaply, when the returns to effort are highest, rather than investing additional time and maximizing plaintiffs' recovery."). See also In re Syngenta AG MIR 162 Corn Litig., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 206840, at *101 (D. Kan. Dec. 7, 2018) (articulating same "incentive problem" observations and therefore awarding 33 ⅓% fee on a $1.5 billion settlement). As Judge Sofaer explained:

> It unquestionably is true that without able lawyers handling these matters not only do some of them go unprosecuted, but the big difference in my experience is in the amount obtained and you don't get the highest recovery and when you are paying at the low end of the scale of fee recovery in contingent actions, it seems to me that I as the protector of the class, can fairly say, and honestly say, that I believe it is in the class' best interests – of this class and of future classes yet unknown – to pay this kind of money for these kinds of benefits.

In re Pepsico Secs. Litig., Civ. A. No. 82-Civ-8403 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 26, 1985), Tr. of April 26, 1985 hearing at 17-18 (as quoted in In re M.D.C. Holdings Sec. Litig., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15488, at *30-31 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 1990) (awarding 30%)).

6. Public Policy Considerations

"Private suits are an important element of the Nation's antitrust enforcement effort." Am. Soc'y of Mech. Eng'rs v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 572 n.10 (1982). In service of that rationale, courts recognize that "it is important to encourage top-tier litigators to pursue challenging antitrust cases…[because] [o]ur antitrust laws address issues that go to the heart of our economy." In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54587, at *55 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 25, 2016). This case presents an excellent example of these principles. No government agency pursued the antitrust implications of Novartis's reverse payment even though the settlement was reported to the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice. ECF No. 552 ¶¶ 66-68. Perhaps no government agency even detected the reverse payment or the delay in generic competition it caused. But Class Counsel did, pursuing this case despite its many challenges, and recovering nearly all of the Class's overcharges.

Moreover, in recent years, the pharmaceutical industry has drawn a significant amount of attention (and criticism) due to the increasing prices of prescription drugs. This litigation, and the amount of money that Novartis will pay to the Class, send a clear message that purchasers of pharmaceutical products will not tolerate anticompetitive behavior that raises the prices of pharmaceutical products. It is hoped that the payment of $126.85 million will deter pharmaceutical companies from engaging in similar types of unlawful conduct in the future. The end result of this hoped-for deterrence is increased competition.

C. A Lodestar Cross-Check Confirms the Reasonableness of the Requested Fee

Class Counsel's fee request is reasonable under the lodestar method as well. As detailed in the Gerstein Decl., Class Counsel worked 43,348.60 hours on this case thus far, amounting to $27,929,118.25 in lodestar based on 2022 rates. Gerstein Decl. ¶ 61. Class Counsel expended these hours at reasonable rates. In determining whether the rates are reasonable, the Court should consider the attorneys' professional reputation, experience, and status. Here, Class Counsel are amongst the most accomplished antitrust practitioners in the pharmaceutical antitrust field, as the Court recognized. See supra § III.B.4. Moreover the average rate for attorneys (excluding staff and paralegals) of approximately $690 per hour is objectively reasonable compared to prevailing rates. Specifically, "[p]artners in New York, for example, billed about $958 per hour in 2019; $1,000 in 2020 and $1,034 [in 2021] . . . Associates in the Big Apple billed an average of $633 per hour in 2019; $678 in 2020 and $712 [in 2021]." Ex. C, Associate Billing Rates Are Growing Faster Than Partner Rates, ALM, February 3, 2022. Therefore, the hourly rates are reasonable here.[7] See In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Research Reports Sec. Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9450, at *73 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 31, 2007) (approving counsel's hourly rates).

A 33 ⅓% fee award equals a lodestar multiplier (net of expenses and service awards) of 1.48. "[C]ounsel may be entitled to a 'multiplier' of their lodestar rate to compensate them for the risk they assumed, the quality of their work and the result achieved for the class." In re Telik, Inc. Sec. Litig., 576 F. Supp. 2d at 590. See also Christine Asia Co., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 179836, at *62 ("No one expects a lawyer whose compensation is contingent upon his success to charge, when successful, as little as he would charge a client who in advance had agreed to pay for his services, regardless of success.") (quoting City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 470 (2d Cir. 1974)). Although lodestar multipliers naturally tend to increase in direct proportion to the size of a recovery, "when the fee is less than double the lodestar, even in a megafund settlement, a one-third-of-fund fee may be endorsed as reasonable." In re Loestrin 24 Fe Antitrust Litig., 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125745, at *43 (D.R.I. July 17, 2020).

Here, a lodestar "cross-check" shows that the fee requested in this case is commensurate with the fee awarded in comparable class action settlements. Such a multiplier falls within the range routinely awarded by courts in this Circuit and elsewhere. This is certainly true in Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases brought under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Judge Koeltl awarded class counsel a 33 ⅓% fee in the Buspirone case which translated into an 8.46 multiplier. Ex. A, at 42:12-45:18. See also Loestrin 24 Fe, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125745, at *45-47 (awarding 33 ⅓% equating to a 1.31 multiplier); In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162425, at *31-34 (N.D. Cal. Sep. 20, 2018) (awarding 33 ⅓% equating to a 1.37 multiplier); In re Flonase

[7] The Supreme Court and other courts have held that the use of current rates is proper since such rates compensate for inflation and the loss of use of funds. See Missouri v. Jenkins, 491 U.S. 274, 283-84 (1989).

Antitrust Litig., 951 F. Supp. 2d 739, 751 (E.D. Pa. 2013) (awarding 33 ⅓% equating to a 2.99 multiplier); In re Tricor Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 05-340 (SLR), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133251, at *16 (D. Del. Apr. 23, 2009) (awarding 33 ⅓% equating to a 3.93 multiplier); In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43082, at *21 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 19, 2005) (awarding 33 ⅓% equating to a 1.27 multiplier); In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 400 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (awarding 27.5% equating to a 2.5 multiplier). Given the risk Class Counsel assumed and the amount of time, labor, and expense dedicated to litigating this case through to preparation for trial, the requested fee is reasonable. See Newberg on Class Actions §15:87 (5th ed. 2015) (substantial multiplier is appropriate where case was risky, time-consuming, involved wrongdoing uncovered by counsel in the first instance, and delivered exceptional results).

The lodestar cross-check in this case supports the requested fee.

D. Class Counsel's Costs and Expenses Are Reasonable and Were Necessary to the Result

It is well-settled that counsel who have created a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to be reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses reasonably incurred in creating the fund. See In re Marsh ERISA Litig., 265 F.R.D. 128, 150 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). Here, Class Counsel's unreimbursed expenses were reasonably incurred and necessary to the representation of the Class. These expenses have been itemized by category for the Court's convenience. See Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 63-64. These expenses include costs for computerized legal research, the creation and maintenance of an electronic document database, experts, travel and lodging expenses, copying, court reporters, deposition transcripts, and mediation. Id. These are the typical kinds of expenses that are routinely deemed reasonable and necessary. Marsh, 265 F.R.D. at 150 (such expenses are "ordinary and necessary"). Accordingly, Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court approve reimbursement of Class Counsel's expenses in full.

E. Service Awards for the Class Representatives Are Appropriate and Reasonable

The purpose of service awards is to reimburse named plaintiffs, who "take on a variety of risks and tasks when they commence representative actions[.]" Id. Here, Class Counsel believes that awards of $100,000 each to class representatives Betances, RDC, FWK and KPH are appropriate, in recognition of the hours they spent participating in this litigation, filing suit, collecting discovery, sitting for depositions, and defending their adequacy in motions. See Gerstein Decl. ¶¶ 67-71. Moreover, courts have recognized the risks inherent in filing suit as a named plaintiff on behalf of a class against an entity with which all class members transact business. See Dial Corp. v. News Corp., 317 F.R.D. 426, 439 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) ("[T]he decision to fire the first shot on behalf of the Class was fraught with risks. Notably, the named Plaintiffs in this case assumed a substantial risk in antagonizing a longstanding, powerful business partner[.]").

The amount requested here is in line with awards made to named representatives in other Hatch-Waxman antitrust cases. E.g., In re Opana ER Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 2580, ECF No. 1085 at ¶ 16 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 3, 2022) ($150,000); In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., No. 3:14-md-02521-WHO, ECF No. 1054 at ¶ 15 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 20, 2018) ($100,000); In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., Civ. A. No. 01-1652, ECF No. 1057 at ¶ 12 (D.N.J. Oct. 5, 2017) ($100,000); In re Modafinil Antitrust Litig., Civ. A. No. 2:06-cv-01797 (MSG), ECF No. 870 at ¶ 30 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 15, 2015) ($100,000 to certain representatives); In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., Civ. A. No. 02-1830 (FSH), ECF No. 114 at ¶ 31 (D.N.J. Aug. 6, 2014) ($100,000).

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above and in the Gerstein Declaration, Class Counsel respectfully request that this Court enter an Order awarding Class Counsel fees in the amount of $41,325,497.58 million, i.e., 33 ⅓% of the Settlement (net of expenses and service awards) plus a pro rata share of the accrued interest, and reimbursement of incurred expenses in the amount of $2,473,507.26. Class Counsel also respectfully request that this Court approve service awards of $100,000 to each of the four class representatives for their efforts on behalf of the Class.

Attorneys for Plaintiff Drogueria Betances, LLC Lead Counsel for the Direct Purchaser Class

TAB 27A

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

IN RE: LITHIUM ION BATTERIES ANTITRUST LITIGATION	Case No. 13-md-02420-YGR MDL No. 2420
This Document Relates to: ALL DIRECT PURCHASER ACTIONS	ORDER GRANTING CO-LEAD COUNSEL FOR DIRECT PURCHASER PLAINTIFFS' NOTICE OF MOTION AND MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES, REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES AND SERVICE AWARDS

The Court, having reviewed Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Class Representative Service Awards (February 8, 2018) ("Motion," Dkt. No. 2171), the pleadings and other papers on file in this action, the objections filed, and the statements of counsel and the parties, hereby finds that:

1. The Motion requests an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $41,790,000.00 or 30% of the $139,300,000.00 Settlement Fund.[1] Further, Co-Lead Counsel request payment from the Settlement Fund of a total of $3,354,573.35 in expenses ("Total Expenses").

2. Of the Total Expenses, the amount of $2,501,352.52 is unreimbursed, out-of-pocket expenses, which includes Litigation Fund expenditures of $2,247,198.62 and Plaintiffs' Counsel's total out-of-pocket firm expenses of $445,068.46, less $190,914.56 in travel, meals and lodging expenses for which reimbursement is not requested.

3. Co-Lead Counsel request that the Court approve payment from the Settlement Fund for $212,030.00 in outstanding invoices for professional economists' services rendered.

4. In addition, Co-Lead Counsel request that the Court approve payment from the Settlement Fund for the charge of $641,190.83 for document hosting services rendered.

5. Lastly, Co-Lead Counsel request service awards for the nine Class Representatives as follows: Ritz Camera, Circuit City, and Univisions ($30,000 each); Automation Engineering, Stereo Shop and First Choice Marketing ($10,000 each); and Charles Carte, Terri Walner, and James O'Neil ($5,000 each) for a total of $135,000.

6. The Court finds that the requested fee award of $41,790,000.00, 30% of the Settlement Fund, is fair and reasonable under the percentage-of-the-recovery method based upon the following factors: (i) the results obtained by Plaintiffs' Counsel in this case; (ii) the risks and complex issues involved in this case, which were significant and required a high level of skill and high-quality work to overcome; (iii) that the attorneys' fees requested were reasonable and entirely contingent upon success—Plaintiffs' Counsel risked time and effort and advanced costs with no ultimate guarantee of compensation; (iv) that the range of awards made in similar cases justifies an award of 30% here; and (v) that Plaintiffs' Counsel's reasonable lodestar means the requested attorneys' fee results in a negative, 0.58 multiplier, which obviates concern about any windfall given the size of the settlement recovery. These factors justify an upward adjustment of the Ninth Circuit's usual 25% benchmark.

Despite the size of the settlement fund at issue here, the Court does not find that fees should be reduced based upon the settlement being a "megafund" or the fee percentage giving a "windfall" to counsel for plaintiffs. The megafund concern arises when a percentage of the recovery would result in excessive profits for class counsel in light of the hours actually spent. In re Bluetooth Headset Prod. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d 935, 942 (9th Cir. 2011). The lodestar cross-check is meant to "confirm that a percentage of [the] recovery amount does not award counsel an exorbitant hourly rate." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Here, lodestar cross-check results in an effective hourly rate far below the market rate for the hours devoted to the case by class counsel. Consequently, the Court finds that the requested fee award is reasonable and is justified by the circumstances of this case.

7. Only two objections to the attorneys' fee request were submitted. Of those two objections, Rinis Travel Service ("RTS") withdrew its objection prior to the hearing, with a pending an order to show cause re: sanctions against it for its failure to comply with an order for discovery regarding its objection. (Dkt. No. 2300.)[2] The other objection, by Mr. Kenneth M. McInelly, President of Agency Software, Inc. ("ASI"), was filed prior to the instant attorneys' fees motion. (Dkt. No. 2161, dated January 19, 2018, filed January 24, 2018.) The objection letter simply states a concern about the requested fees being 30% of the settlement fund, without the benefit of any information about the lodestar in this matter or the effective hourly rate given the great number of hours devoted to the case. The Court finds ASI's objection insubstantial and overrules it.

[2] RTS's objection (Dkt. No. 2196) raised the issue of the attorneys' fees being excessive because the settlement fund constituted a "megafund," an objection the Court rejects herein at paragraph 6.

8. The Court has confirmed the reasonableness of DPPs' fee request by conducting a lodestar cross-check. The Court finds that Class Counsel's reasonable lodestar was $72,489,066.75 based on 173,863.20 hours of work billed at historic hourly rates for the period from the appointment of lead counsel until August 31, 2017, which is an average rate of $417/hr. Co-Lead Counsel's requested fee award represents 58% of their reasonable lodestar, and an effective rate of $241.82/hr. This further supports the reasonableness of Class Counsel's fee request here.

9. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' Counsel incurred a total of $3,354,573.35 in total unreimbursed out-of-pocket litigation costs and other expenses in prosecuting this litigation. The Court finds that these costs and expenses were reasonably incurred in prosecuting this case and were necessary given the complex nature and nationwide scope of the case.

10. Pursuant to Radcliffe v. Experian Information Solutions, Inc., 715 F.3d 1157 (9th Cir. 2013), the Court has carefully considered the requested incentive awards. The Court deems the application for incentive awards to the nine Class Representatives reasonable and justified given: (i) their willingness to serve as private attorneys general; and (ii) their work performed and the active participation in the litigation on behalf of the DPP Class.

11. In sum, upon consideration of the Motion and accompanying Declarations, and based upon all matters of record including the pleadings and papers filed in this action, the Court hereby finds that the attorneys' fee requested is reasonable and proper; the costs and expenses incurred by Plaintiffs' Counsel were necessary, reasonable, and proper; and that incentive awards are appropriate given the time and effort expended by the Class Representatives in the prosecution of this case.

Based upon the foregoing, the Court ORDERS that:

1. Plaintiffs' Counsel are awarded attorneys' fees of $41,790,000.00 (30% of the $139,300,000.00 Settlement Fund), together with a proportional share of interest earned on the Settlement Fund for the same time period until dispersed to Class Counsel.

2. Plaintiffs' Counsel are awarded reimbursement of their litigation costs and expenses in the amount of $3,354,573.35. This amount does not include Plaintiffs' Counsel's travel, meals, and lodging expenses related to the litigation of this action.

3. Class Representatives Ritz Camera, Circuit City, and Univisions shall each receive an incentive award in the amount of $30,000.00 each.

4. Class Representatives Automation Engineering, Stereo Shop and First Choice Marketing shall each receive an incentive award in the amount of $10,000.00 each.

5. Charles Carte, Terri Walner, and James O'Neil shall each receive an incentive award in the amount of $5,000.00 each.

6. The attorneys' fees awarded, reimbursement of litigation costs and expenses, and incentive awards shall be paid from the Settlement Fund and the interest earned thereon.

7. Co-Lead Counsel will allocate the fees and expenses among Co-Lead Counsel and all Plaintiffs' Counsel in a fair and equitable manner that, in Co-Lead Counsel's good-faith judgment, reflects each firm's contribution to the institution, prosecution, and resolution of the litigation.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

NOTICE OF MOTION AND MOTION

TO ALL PARTIES AND THEIR COUNSEL OF RECORD:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that at 2:00 p.m. on May 8, 2018, DPPs and their counsel will, and hereby do move before the Honorable Yvonne Gonzalez Rogers, United States District Judge, at the United States Courthouse, 1301 Clay Street, Courtroom 1 – 4th Floor, Oakland, California, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h) and 54(d) for the following:

- an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $41,790,000 (30% of the $139,300,000 Settlement Fund) plus interest;
- reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $3,354,573.35, which includes (i) unreimbursed litigation expenses of $2,501,352.52 (including litigation fund expenditures in the amount of $2,247,198.62); (ii) outstanding unpaid invoices of retained experts in the amount of $212,030.00; and (iii) $641,190.83 for uncompensated document hosting services; and
- service awards for the nine Class Representatives in various amounts totaling $135,000 (0.09% of the Settlement Fund).

This motion is made on the grounds that (a) such fees are fair and reasonable in light of Plaintiffs' Counsel's efforts in creating the Settlement Fund; (b) the requested fees comport with the Ninth Circuit case law in common fund cases; (c) the expenses for which reimbursement is sought were reasonably and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this action; and (d) service awards to each Class Representative is warranted for bringing the case, assisting in extensive electronic document productions, responding to written discovery, and sitting for depositions regarding their LiB Product purchases and participation in this case.

This Motion is based upon this Memorandum of Points and Authorities, the Tabacco Declaration, the Saveri Declaration, the Simon Declaration, the Zahid Declaration, the declarations of Plaintiffs' Counsel, the proposed order submitted herewith, and all other records, pleadings, and papers filed in this action; and upon such argument and further pleadings as may be presented to the Court at the hearing on this Motion.

This Motion will be available today on the settlement website established for this case, www.batteriesdirectpurchaserantitrustsettlement.com for review by class members.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES TO BE DECIDED

Whether the Court should (1) award the requested attorneys' fees in the amount of $41,790,000, representing 30% of the Settlement Fund of $139,300,000; (2) order payment from the Settlement Fund for Plaintiffs' Counsels' expenses totaling $3,354,573.35; and (3) approve service awards to nine Class Representatives in varying amounts totaling $135,000.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Plaintiffs' Counsel brought this antirust class action nearly six years ago on a purely contingent-fee basis to recover overcharge damages from sophisticated foreign actors preying on United States victims. At its outset, the nature of the case promised that Plaintiffs' Counsel would have to carry millions of dollars in out-of-pocket costs at risk of total loss. Success meant overcoming difficult questions of proof at every stage leading up to trial, with no guarantee of any recovery for the DPP Class, much less one totaling $139.3 million, and no guarantee of any payment whatsoever for Plaintiffs' Counsel.

The requested attorneys' fee award is $41,790,000, representing 30% of the Settlement Fund. Based on Plaintiffs' Counsel's lodestar of $72.5 million, if awarded the requested fee will result in a negative multiplier of 0.58.

The result for the DPP Class is exceptional. The Settlement Fund of $139.3 million in cash represents a 39% recovery of the single damages the DPP Class could have hoped to obtain through total success on the merits at trial. Tabacco Decl. ¶66. This recovery was the result of Plaintiffs' Counsel's devotion of 173,863 hours of attorney and para-professional labor, matching the skill and tenacity of some of the finest defense counsel in the world at every stage of the five-plus year litigation. Id., ¶92 & Ex. 5. Plaintiffs' Counsel further committed $3,354,573.35 to fund the litigation expenses, making no resort to any third-party litigation funding to mitigate the risk of total loss. Zahid Decl. ¶2 & Ex. A.

The Settlements here are the only ones that will return money to the DPP Class, victims of the foreign cartel's alleged misconduct. The two guilty pleas secured by the U.S. Government from Sanyo Electric Co., Ltd. and LG Chem. Ltd., came well over a year into this action and resulted in $10.731 million and $1.056 million in criminal fines, respectively, based on narrow pleas for price-fixing only cylindrical lithium ion battery cells used in notebook computers from April 2007 until September 2008.[1] The pleas identified no additional conspirators aside from Sanyo's parent company, Panasonic, and the government sought no restitution for victims.

Far from piggy-backing off the government prosecution, Plaintiffs' Counsel developed evidence of a conspiracy far broader than the one targeted by the government, and indeed had to overcome the obstacle that the two narrow guilty pleas became in the hands of defense counsel. Plaintiffs' Counsel sought to prove a nine-year conspiracy from May 1, 2002 until May 31, 2011 against nine Japanese and Korean electronics manufacturers and their United States subsidiaries and affiliates. Plaintiffs' Counsel developed evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy on lithium ion battery cylindrical cells and prismatic cells and, combined with sophisticated work by industry and economic experts, developed proof of an overcharge not just on cells but on cylindrical and prismatic battery packs and finished products (notebook PCs, mobile phones, digital cameras, etc.) that contained the price-fixed cells. Only the skill and experience of Plaintiffs' Counsel, and in particular Co-Lead Counsel, made this possible. See generally Tabacco Decl. ¶¶4-81; Simon Decl. ¶¶9-42; Saveri Decl. ¶¶6-37.

The requested award is commensurate with Plaintiffs' Counsel's efforts, the risk they undertook, the results they achieved, and is consistent with the fees awarded by Judges Illston, Wilken, Seeborg, and Tigar in other foreign electronics cartel class actions over the past decade in this District. In light of these and other factors addressed herein, the requested fee award is reasonable.[2]

[2] The notice informed the DPP Class that Plaintiffs' Counsel would apply for an award of attorneys' fees of no more than 30% of the Settlement Fund and reimbursement of litigation expenses of no more than $3.9 million. Aspects of the notice, claims administration and the grounds

II. SUMMARY OF WORK BY PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL

Plaintiffs' Counsel invested substantial time and money in the prosecution of the DPP action. The work included pre- and post-complaint investigation into the industry, working with industry experts, drafting highly detailed complaints, defeating a multitude of motions to dismiss those complaints, propounding discovery, deploying a multi-lingual team to analyze defendants' documents in Japanese, Korean, Chinese, and English, extracting usable information from a recalcitrant ACPERA amnesty applicant, negotiating an ice-breaker settlement with defendant Sony for cash and valuable cooperation and then obtaining that cooperation to benefit the case, working with expert economists, collecting, reviewing and producing a massive set of documents from the larger Class Representatives, taking 34 party-opponent depositions of mostly foreign witnesses, defending 12 Class Representative depositions, moving for class certification and opposing Daubert motions, and negotiating the Settlements. See generally Tabacco Decl. ¶¶4-81. Measured by hours, the breakdown of the most significant labor is as follows:

TASK	% OF TOTAL HOURS
Document review	48%
Discovery (excluding doc review and depositions)	24%
Pleadings and briefing (including class certification)	12%
Depositions	8%
Misc. (including court appearances, settlement, strategy, case management)	8%

See Tabacco Decl. ¶69.

A. Pre-filing investigation

Co-Lead Counsel began investigating this case years before filing the first DPP complaint in late 2012. See, e.g., Tabacco Decl. ¶5; Saveri Decl. ¶6; Simon Decl. ¶¶10-11. The investigation entailed retaining consultants to perform an economic analysis of the relevant market and researching the nature of purchases by various potential direct purchasers.[3] See Simon Decl. ¶11.

for final approval of the three settlements not yet finally approved by the Court will be addressed in DPPs' forthcoming settlement final approval papers scheduled to be filed March 29, 2018.

[3] None of the attorney and professional time generated before the Court's appointment of Co-Lead Counsel in May 2013, which is not insubstantial, is included in the lodestar presented on this Motion.

B. Consolidated Amended Complaints, Two Rounds of Motions to Dismiss, Answers

On May 17, 2013, the Court appointed R. Alexander Saveri of the firm Saveri & Saveri, Inc., Bruce L. Simon of the firm Pearson, Simon & Warshaw LLP, and Joseph J. Tabacco, Jr. of the firm BT as Interim Lead Counsel for the DPP Class (referred to herein as "Co-Lead Counsel"). Tabacco Decl. ¶2; Simon Decl. ¶3; Saveri Decl. ¶10; ECF No. 194. Subsequently, the DPPs, over Defendants' objections and in conjunction with the IPPs, obtained certain documents produced to government investigators, nearly all of them in Korean and Japanese. Tabacco Decl. ¶10. In a compressed time period, Co-Lead Counsel organized a team of Korean and Japanese-speaking attorneys and translators to analyze the documents for potential use in the CAC. Led by Co-Lead Counsel, a team of Plaintiffs' Counsel synthesized the new evidence and strategized regarding the nature and scope of the conspiracy which would be alleged. Id.

In July 2013, DPPs filed their CAC alleging an over-arching horizontal conspiracy among the Defendants and their co-conspirators to fix prices, restrict production, and to allocate markets and customers for the sale of Lib Products in the United States during the Class Period. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶11-12; Simon Decl. ¶16; Saveri Decl. ¶26; ECF No. 234.

After submitting Court-ordered pre-motion letters, Defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss and five more individual motions to dismiss, arguing, inter alia, that the CAC did not allege a plausible conspiracy for the entire alleged conspiracy period, that the DPPs lacked standing for lack of a lithium ion battery cell purchaser. DPPs opposed. The Court granted the joint motion to dismiss with leave to amend, for lack of antitrust standing. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶13-14, 72; Simon Decl. ¶17; Saveri Decl. ¶26.

DPPs amended the complaint to add further facts support a finding of antitrust standing, and Defendants moved to dismiss again, with both a joint motion and seven individual motions. DPPs prevailed on all the motions, with the Court sustaining the SCAC. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶15-17, 73-74; Simon Decl. ¶¶18-23; Saveri Decl. ¶26.

To oppose the veritable mountain of defense briefing, Co-Lead Counsel assigned teams of Plaintiffs' Counsel to work on various issues and discrete topics presented in the motions. Id., ¶¶15-17, 73-74; Simon Decl. ¶¶20-23; Saveri Decl. ¶26.

Defendants moved to certify the Court's order denying the motions to dismiss for interlocutory appeal. DPPs opposed, and the Court denied the motion. Tabacco Decl. ¶16.

When Defendants each answered the operative complaint, Co-Lead Counsel led a small team of Plaintiffs' Counsel to analyze the dozens of affirmative defenses and draft a motion to strike most of them. Through laborious meeting-and-conferring with a team of defense counsel counterparts, Plaintiffs' Counsel succeeded in causing substantial amendment of the answers by the Defendants. Id., ¶18. Had this action not settled, this work would have translated into more streamlined summary judgment and trial phases.

C. Discovery Efforts

Discovery in this case was a massive undertaking. It required DPPs to obtain, from nine large, Defendant corporate families, comprehensive information about their battery business over a twelve-year period. Moreover, the lion's share of the critical documents, data and witnesses were located in Japan and Korea, and were written in or spoke a foreign language. Id., ¶¶23, 77.

1. Coordination with IPPs and Discovery Protocols

Co-Lead Counsel created teams of Plaintiffs' Counsel and assigned a team to each Defendant family for discovery purposes. Id., ¶23. The DPPs and IPPs coordinated closely on discovery, working together and with defense counsel to fashion various proposed orders and protocols for coordinated discovery, depositions, translation, and discovery of electronically-stored information (ESI). Id., ¶¶23-24, 26-30, 77. DPPs and IPPs obtained relief from the Court to mandate that Defendants create and maintain "watch lists" of extraterritorial current employees, so that in the event such an employee departed the defendant, DPPs and IPPs would have notice and an opportunity to depose the witness. Id., ¶29.

2. Document productions and review

The document production from Defendants was massive. To obtain it, Plaintiffs' Counsel negotiated search terms in three languages and negotiated with each defendant regarding custodians and other aspects of ESI searches. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶27, 29-30, 67.

Ultimately, Plaintiffs' Counsel analyzed 2.4 million documents, equaling 8.9 million printed pages. Id., ¶27. Of these, 73% were primarily in Japanese or Korean, and others were a mix of Japanese, Korean, and/or English. Id. To maximize the value of the review, Plaintiffs' Counsel created thousands of pages of work product, including memoranda, summaries, and spreadsheets organizing the evidence by element of the claim, and by witnesses. Deposition binders were later created based on this work product. Id., ¶28. In an effort to reduce the amount of "hands-on, eyes on" review by attorneys, paralegals, and translators, Co-Lead Counsel engaged a provider of Technology Assisted Review ("TAR"). However, owing largely to the foreign-languages present in most of the documents and the quality of the digitized document images, the TAR was only partially effective at reducing the need to rely on attorney and professional review. Id.

With regard to document production by the DPPs, the document searches, collection, review, and ultimate production from several of the larger Class Representatives was a significant undertaking, demanding substantial hours of labor.

For example, production of plaintiff Circuit City's paper documents presented a challenge because of the enormous quantity of paper documents in storage for the class period, the minimal indexing of those documents, and the near-complete absence of the bankrupt retailer's employees to assist in identification of responsive documents. Tabacco Decl. ¶38; Simon Decl. ¶55; Comp. Ex. AA (Decl. of Daniel D. Owen in Supp. of DPPs Mot. for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimb. of Expenses, and Incentive Awards ("Owen Fee Decl.")), ¶4(l). The Circuit City review yielded over 500 boxes that were produced for inspection by defendants. Id.

The production of plaintiff Ritz Camera's documents was similarly time-consuming, as the retailer was in liquidation and consequently manual searches through approximately 300,000 pages of paper files from the bankruptcy trustee's document warehouse was necessary. In addition, purchase data came from searches of over 3.8 million pages of scanned accounting files from offline legacy systems, and disaster backup tapes had to be resurrected and searched to capture responsive discovery material. Tabacco Decl. ¶39; Saveri Decl. ¶¶48-50; Comp. Ex. T (Decl. of Steven F. Benz in Supp. of DPPs Mot. for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimb. of Expenses, and Incentive Awards ("Benz Decl.")), ¶4.

Finally, Plaintiffs' Counsel expended substantial time obtaining Defendants' transaction data and other information needed to understand the data, without which the scope of the conspiracy and damages period, and the amount of damages, if any, could not be ascertained. Tabacco Decl. ¶25.

3. Written Discovery

Plaintiffs' Counsel, largely in coordination with IPPs, propounded ten sets of requests for production (RFPs), six sets of interrogatories, nine sets of requests for admission (RFAs) totaling 1,526 individual requests, as well as seven subpoenas to third parties. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶26, 31 & Table No. 1, cited therein.

For their part, Defendants propounded comprehensive document requests, interrogatories and requests for admission on the DPPs. See id., ¶¶36-37 & Table No. 2, cited therein.

4. Depositions

Plaintiffs' Counsel marshaled the evidence from the document review and written discovery to take depositions, where the videotaped deposition testimony was in all likelihood going to have to be the testimony presented at trial. Depositions of witnesses like the ones here, involving former employees living abroad who are likely not subject to trial subpoenas, have the added necessity of extracting useful, if not critical, trial testimony in the first go. Thorough preparation and sound examination techniques and experience are essential. Id., ¶¶32-34.

Coordinating with the IPPs, Plaintiffs' Counsel deposed 34 percipient defense witnesses. Id., ¶32. All but one of the depositions required translation, stretching the depositions to a total of 81 days. Id. That some Defendants settled with the DPP Class did not reduce the scope of deposition discovery. Id., ¶35. The DPP Class still needed to prove a conspiracy among all Defendants in order to tie any non-settling Defendant to the conspiracy. Id.

Plaintiffs' Counsel prepared and defended all 12 of the Class Representatives' depositions, conducted across the country. Tabacco Decl. ¶40. Including the 34 merits depositions, 50 total depositions were taken in the DPP case over 100 days of testimony. Id., ¶34.

5. Discovery disputes

Discovery was hard-fought. Defendants frequently opposed reasonable discovery requests, with the result that the DPPs and IPPs coordinated to bring 14 motions to compel on various disputes before Magistrate Ryu. The DPPs and IPPs succeeded in obtaining the relief sought in all 14 motions. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶41-44 & Table Nos. 3(a) & 3(b), cited therein. For example, motions to compel were necessary before Defendants produced worldwide, transaction-level sales and cost data for lithium ion battery cells and packs. Id., ¶¶43-44 & Table No. 3(b), cited therein. There were successful motions to compel deposition testimony, supplemental interrogatory responses, and identification of documents used to refresh a deponent's recollection. Id., Table No. 3(b), cited therein.

Plaintiffs' Counsel also successfully defeated Defendants' motions to compel, including a motion to compel DPP Class Representatives to produce downstream transaction data. Id., ¶¶45-46 & Table No. 4, cited therein.

D. Toshiba's Summary Judgment Motion

Toshiba moved for early summary judgment against the DPPs and IPPs in mid-2015 as all discovery was in full swing. Toshiba sought judgment on the grounds that it had withdrawn from the conspiracy by exiting the lithium ion battery business, and that the DPPs' claims were time-barred. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶19-20, 76. DPPs, in coordination with the IPPs, conducted targeted discovery of Toshiba on an expedited basis in order to oppose summary judgement. After full briefing and oral argument, the Court denied Toshiba's motion. Id., ¶¶21-22, 76.

E. Motion for Class Certification

DPPs moved for class certification in 2016, supported by DPPs' expert economist, Dr. Roger Noll of Stanford University, industry expert James L. Kaschmitter, and a declaration of counsel which offered 195 exhibits drawn from the developing evidentiary record. Id., ¶¶47-48, 78. Defendants opposed the motion, contesting nearly every part of DPPs' Rule 23 showing and offering the opinion of their own expert economist, who opined that it is impossible to prove impact and damages in this action with common evidence. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶47-49. Defendants also sought to exclude opinion testimony of both of DPPs' experts. Id., ¶¶47-48, 78-80.

The effort on class certification required Co-Lead Counsel to expend significant time and money on the legal briefing, testifying experts, and the consulting economists charged with working the transactional data into shape for use in the sophisticated econometric modeling performed by Dr. Noll, as well as assisting Co-Lead Counsel with examining the Defendants' expert economist at deposition and with defending the two depositions of Dr. Noll. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶48, 78,80. Additionally, Co-Lead Counsel also led efforts to identify, translate, and organize documents and Defendants' discovery responses to support DPPs' class certification motion. In addition to conspiracy evidence, Co-Lead Counsel drafted legal and factual analysis to support DPPs' class certification motion and worked with Class Representatives to collect information relevant to the class certification motion and prepare them for deposition. Id., ¶80.

F. Obtaining Cooperation From Amnesty Applicant Defendant

From the pleading stage, Co-Lead Counsel in conjunction with the IPPs engaged counsel for an ACPERA amnesty applicant defendant, Samsung SDI, to obtain the cooperation in the civil litigation that an amnesty applicant is obligated to give. The cooperation came out over the course of the case and was at all times limited to narrow attorney proffers regarding anticompetitive conduct related to cylindrical cells only from April 2007 to September 2008. Id., ¶¶10, 64, 77. The amnesty applicant fought every stage of the litigation and was one of the last defendants to settle with DPPs. Id., ¶64.

G. Settlements

Substantial effort, skill and experience of Co-Lead Counsel were required to negotiate the Settlements. Multiple mediation sessions before Judge Vaughn Walker (ret.) and attendant briefing and preparation were required before most of the Settlements could be reached. Id., ¶52.

DPPs first settled with Sony in an ice-breaker settlement after six months of negotiation for $19.5 million in cash and cooperation with the prosecution of the case against all the remaining defendants. Id., ¶54. The Sony cooperation proved highly useful with respect to class certification where Sony could confirm aspects of DPPs' expert economist's analysis and cost assumptions, as well as aspects of conspiracy proof. Tabacco Decl. ¶81.

Next, after filing their class certification motion, Plaintiffs' Counsel reached settlements with NEC Corp. ($1 million plus cooperation), Hitachi Maxell ($3.45 million plus cooperation), Panasonic/Sanyo ($42.5 million plus cooperation), Toshiba ($2.9 million plus cooperation), LG

Chem ($41 million plus cooperation), Samsung SDI ($24.5 million), and finally NEC Tokin ($4.95 million). Id., ¶¶50, 55-58, 60-63.

Co-Lead Counsel did the necessary work to effectuate each settlement, including negotiating and drafting the settlement agreements, negotiating and drafting the attendant escrow agreements and establishing escrow accounts, providing notice to class members, and preparing the motions for preliminary approval and final approval necessary to finalize the settlements. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶52, 59, 65; Saveri Decl. ¶¶33-37.

III. THE REQUESTED FEE AWARD IS REASONABLE

A. The Common Fund Doctrine Applies and the Percentage-of-the-Fund Method For Calculating Fees is Appropriate Here

Plaintiffs' Counsel have produced a benefit for the DPP Class in the form of a common fund and are entitled to payment of reasonable attorneys' fees from the common fund. The Supreme Court has explained that "a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 967 (9th Cir. 2003) (same). The purpose of this doctrine is that "those who benefit from the creation of the fund should share the wealth with the lawyers whose skill and effort helped create it." In re Wash. Pub. Power Supply Sys. Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1300 (9th Cir. 1994).

Here, the DPP Class will be eligible to receive distributions from the $139.3 million common fund generated by the labor of Plaintiffs' Counsel. The conduct could not practicably have been challenged without the commitment of time and money by Plaintiffs' Counsel.

Paying reasonable attorneys' fees from the common fund compensates Plaintiffs' Counsel for bringing and prosecuting the action, which is critical to the enforcement of the antitrust laws, a point repeatedly emphasized by the Supreme Court. See, e.g., Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983); Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 331 (1979); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 266 (1972).

In the Ninth Circuit, the court has discretion in a common fund case to choose either the "percentage-of-the-fund" or the "lodestar" method to determine fees. Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1047 (9th Cir. 2002); In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 949 (9th Cir. 2015). Most courts have exhibited a clear preference for the percentage-of-the-fund method, as it "directly aligns the interests of the class and its counsel and provides a powerful incentive for the efficient prosecution and early resolution of litigation. In contrast, the lodestar create[s] an unanticipated disincentive to early settlements, tempt[s] lawyers to run up their hours, and compel[s] district courts to engage in a gimlet-eyed review of line-item fee audits." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir. 2005) (alterations in original) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

The Ninth Circuit instructs that when the percentage-of-the-fund method is used to calculate fees, conducting a lodestar cross-check will "confirm that a percentage of [the] recovery amount does not award counsel an exorbitant hourly rate." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Here, Class Counsel's efforts have created a common fund of $139.3 million. Plaintiffs seek 30% of the common fund as an award of fees, which will make an award of $41,790,000, an amount representing just 58% of Plaintiffs' Counsel's lodestar of $72.5 million. Tabacco Decl. ¶94, Ex. 5. Consequently, under either a "percentage-of-the-fund" or "lodestar" method, Plaintiffs' Counsel's requested fee is deserved in light of the value of the extensive work performed, result achieved for the DPP Class, and the risk and expense of the contingent-fee representation.

B. An Upward Adjustment of the Benchmark Is Justified

"[I]n this circuit, the benchmark percentage is 25%," Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949, with the 25% fee a "starting point" for analysis, id at 955. A District Court must show why the percentage award is appropriate based on the circumstances of the case. Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1048. See also Torrisi v. Tucson Elec. Power Co., 8 F.3d 1370, 1376 (9th Cir. 1993) ("This benchmark percentage should be adjusted, or replaced by a lodestar calculation, when special circumstances indicate that the percentage recovery would be either too small or too large in light of the hours devoted to the case or other relevant factors." (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)).

When considering a percentage-of-the-fund request for attorneys' fees, the Ninth Circuit requires consideration of the following factors: (1) whether counsel "achieved exceptional results for the class"; (2) "whether the case was risky for class counsel"; (3) "whether counsel's performance 'generated benefits beyond the cash settlement fund'"; (4) "the market rate for the particular field of law"; (5) "the burdens class counsel experienced while litigating the case (e.g., cost, duration, foregoing other work)"; and (6) "whether the case was handled on a contingency basis." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 954-55.

1. Plaintiffs' Counsel achieved an exceptional result

The Settlement Fund of $139.3 million in cash represents a 39% recovery of the single damages the DPP Class could have achieved through total victory at a trial on the merits. Tabacco Decl. ¶66.

A recovery of 39% of single damages is double the average recovery in similar cases. See In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig. (CRT II), No. C-07-5944 JST, 2016 WL 3648478, at *7 n.19 (N.D. Cal. July 7, 2016) (describing survey of 71 settled cartel cases where weighted mean settlement recovery was 19% of single damages). The result here is one factor that justifies an increase over the 25% benchmark. In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig. (CRT III), No. C-07-5944 JST, 2016 WL 4126533, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 3, 2016) (finding settlement recovery of 20% of single damages supports "modest increase over the Ninth Circuit benchmark").

Net of opt-outs, the single damages for cylindrical cells and packs—the narrow price-fixing conduct targeted by the Government criminal investigation—amounted to only $35.5 million. Tabacco Decl. ¶66. This means that the Settlements recovered nearly four times (3.9x) the single damages that would have been achievable had this action against these Defendants matched the narrower contours of the Sanyo and LG Chem guilty pleas. Plaintiffs' Counsel's skill in developing the evidence on which to base an expanded case that includes prismatic batteries and finished products for both cylindrical and prismatic is what created the value in the $139.3 million common fund.

The Sanyo and LG Chem guilty pleas proved to be an obstacle in the hands of defense counsel, which built a defense, beginning with motions to dismiss, around the theme that the only unlawful conspiracy was the one that was described in the guilty pleas as a narrow 18-month conspiracy affecting only cylindrical cells. To succeed through trial, Plaintiffs' Counsel would have to prove a conspiracy among all the Defendants for a nine-year period for cylindrical and prismatic cells, causing an overcharge on cylindrical and prismatic battery packs and the finished products containing the price-fixed cells.

The $139.3 million common fund is an exceptional result that results in an immediate and substantial benefit to the DPP Class.[4]

2. Plaintiffs' Counsel undertook enormous risk on a contingent fee

The contingent nature of the representation meant that, from the outset of the case, the risk of nonpayment was high because the risk of non-recovery was high. Plaintiffs' Counsel represented the DPP Class on a purely contingent basis, investing considerable time and money in the prosecution of the action without any guarantee that the investments would ever be repaid. Tabacco Decl. ¶84.

Antitrust price-fixing conspiracy cases are notoriously complex and difficult to litigate. See, e.g., In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., No. CIV.A. 98-5055, 2004 WL 1221350, at *10 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) ("antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute").

"Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable." In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 475 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). "The 'best' case can be lost and the 'worst' case can be won, and juries may find liability but no damages. None of these risks should be underestimated." In re Superior Beverage/Glass Container Consol. Pretrial, 133 F.R.D. 119, 127 (N.D. Ill. 1990).

Here, there was risk of failing to prove liability at trial. The fundamental fact that documents and witness testimony were nearly all in Japanese and Korean made developing the evidentiary record difficult and time-consuming, and made the prospect of presenting a cogent case-in-chief daunting. Proving to a jury that there was a nine-year conspiracy in which all the Defendants participated would be a challenge. Had they not settled, Defendants would have likely argued that there was no over-arching conspiracy, but instead episodic, bi-lateral communications and information exchanges that involved some but not all Defendants, and the smaller Defendants would have argued they did not participate in any unlawful agreement. Defendants likely would have argued that the periods before and after the short guilty-plea period were not infected by price-fixing, and that impact on prices from episodic information-sharing could not be shown and would not be unlawful even if they could be shown. There is a risk that the Court or a jury would credit such defense arguments.

[4] The Settlements each provided for cooperation in the form of witnesses at trial and other assistance, a valuable form of non-cash benefit that the DPP Class already enjoyed. The first Sony settlement in particular resulted in valuable cooperation from Sony which was used to advance the case against the remaining defendants. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶54, 63, 81.

There was also a risk that a class would not be certified or would not remain certified through trial.[5] Indeed, class certification risk manifested itself in this case when the Court denied DPPs' motion for class certification with leave to renew the motion. Tabacco Decl. ¶51. Co-Lead Counsel believe the Court would have certified the proposed DPP class on a renewed motion, as the areas in need of buttressing that were identified by the Court were curable with further work, and the retained experts had performed that work. Id. Certification likely would have led to a 23(f) appeal with all the attendant risks therein.

However, even with the class certified before trial, either a successful Daubert challenge or an effective cross-examination at trial could have resulted in a defense judgment or a significantly reduced verdict. Defendants litigated their position that DPPs were entitled to no recovery for finished products—e.g., camcorders and notebook PCs—which account for the vast majority of DPPs' damages. DPPs' experts estimate that finished products constitute 75% of class members' purchases. Tabacco Decl. ¶49. Consequently, the risk of proving liability but not recovering most of the damages was real. "[T]he history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which antitrust plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages, or only negligible damages, at trial, or on appeal." NASDAQ Mkt-Makers, 187 F.R.D. at 476. Indeed, the risk of proving liability but having the jury not award most of the damages occurred in the LCD direct purchaser class action, which went to trial against Toshiba. There, the jury found Toshiba liable as a conspirator but awarded a level of damages that would ostensibly be set-off entirely by earlier settlement recoveries from other defendants. See Tabacco Decl. Ex. 13 (Special Verdict dated July 3, 2012).

When Judge Hochberg (ret.) described the risk of nonpayment in actions like this one, she remarked on "the sometimes undesirable characteristics" of contingent-fee antitrust class actions. In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. Civ. 03-0085 (FSH), 2005 WL 3008808, at *14 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2005). Those include "the uncertain nature of the fee, the wholly contingent outlay of large out-of-pocket sums by plaintiffs, and the fact that the risk of failure and nonpayment in an antitrust case are extremely high." Id.

3. Plaintiffs' Counsel undertook a financial burden to prosecute the action for the DPP Class

The litigation is now in its sixth year. Plaintiffs' Counsel have spent $3,354,573.35 out-of-pocket on necessary litigation costs, and Co-Lead Counsel have not requested any interim reimbursement from the settlements as they have presented those agreements to the Court for approval.

The advancement of all the litigation expenses has been at risk of total loss. No third-party litigation funding was sought or used, which might otherwise have mitigated the risk of loss. For all of the services for which Plaintiffs' Counsel seek payment now, they have waited years for payment.

The financial burden is made heavier by the fact that Plaintiffs' Counsel have necessarily foregone some other work during the six-year pendency of this action, as many team members have been almost exclusively assigned to this action for long periods. Tabacco Decl. ¶84.

4. Awards in similar complex antitrust cases confirm the request here is reasonable

The requested 30% fee award is consistent with the fee award in similar antitrust class actions in this District, especially as the requested fee here amounts to a negative, 0.58 multiplier of the lodestar. Moreover, a respected, recent study collecting empirical data on fee awards in class actions confirms that for an antitrust class action with this size common fund recovery, a 30% fee award is typical.

In other large electronics antitrust class actions in this District, the court has awarded a fee of 30% or near 30%. See, e.g., In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig. (CRT IV), No. 07-cv-05944-JST, slip op. at 3, 8, ECF No. 5169 (N.D. Cal. June 8, 2017) (30%) (attached as Ex. 10 to Tabacco Decl.); In re Optical Disk Drive Antitrust Litig., No. 10-md-2143 RS, slip op. at 2, ECF No. 1658 (N.D. Cal. July 23, 2015) (30%) (attached as Ex. 11 to Tabacco Decl.); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig. (LCD II), No. 07-MD-1827 SI, 2013 WL 149692, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2013) (30%); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., No. 4:07-MD-01819-CW, slip op. at 2, ECF No. 1370 (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2012) (30%) (attached as Ex. 12 to Tabacco Decl.); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig. (LCD I), No. 07-MD-1827 SI, 2011 WL 7575003, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 27, 2011) (30%); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig. (LCD III), No. 07-MD-1827 SI, 2013 WL 1365900, at *20 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 3, 2013) (28.6%); In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig. (DRAM), No. M-02-1486-PJH, 2007 WL 2416513, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2007) (25%).

When a fee award is less than 30%, unlike this case, it typically involves a positive multiplier—i.e., counsel receive a multiple of their hourly rate. See, e.g., In re High-Tech Emp. Antitrust Litig., No. 11-CV-02509-LHK, 2015 WL 5158730, at *10-11 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 2, 2015) (awarding multiplier of 2.5).

The award DPPs seek is consistent with recoveries awarded in other major class action cases. Indeed, a 30% fee award is the market rate for an antitrust class action like this one. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1050 ("market rates" are a question of "lawyers' reasonable expectations [for recovery of contingent fees], which are based on the circumstances of the case and the range of fee awards out of common funds of comparable size").

A recent study collecting empirical evidence of attorneys' fees in class action settlements likewise supports the requested fee.[6] The authors found that, of the 19 antitrust settlements between 2009 and 2013 with a mean recovery of $501.09 million and a median recovery of $37.3 million, the mean and median fee percentages were 27% and 30%. Eisenberg, Miller & Germano, Attorneys'

[6] This Court has previously consulted such studies, which can serve as an "unbiased and useful reference for comparing fee[] cases of similar magnitude." In re Colgate-Palmolive Co. ERISA Litig., 36 F. Supp. 3d 344, 349 (S.D.N.Y. 2014).

Fees in Class Actions: 2009-2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 952 (2017) (attached as Ex. 6 to the Tabacco Declaration). See also In re Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n Athletic Grant-in-Aid Cap Antitrust Litig. (NCAA), No. 14-cv-2758-CW, 2017 WL 6040065, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 6, 2017) (relying on same empirical finding), appeal docketed, No. 18-15054 (9th Cir. Jan. 11, 2018).

5. The negative lodestar multiplier means a 30% fee award cannot result in a "windfall'

Finally, a cross-check of the requested fee with Plaintiffs' Counsel's lodestar shows that the requested fee is reasonable.[7] A lodestar cross-check may be used to ensure that class counsel has done the work necessary to justify the fee sought. Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1050. See also In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 306-07 (3d Cir. 2005) ("[T]he lodestar cross-check calculation need entail neither mathematical precision nor bean-counting. The district courts may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records." (footnote omitted)).

The Ninth Circuit has acknowledged the existence of the so-called "megafund" approach to attorneys' fees which dictates that courts should consider awarding lower fee percentages in actions where the recovery is greater than $100 million—but simultaneously referenced the lodestar cross-check as indispensable. In re Bluetooth, 654 F.3d at 942. The bedrock principle is that a "windfall" exists only if a percentage award results in a high, positive multiplier of the lodestar. Indeed, the "windfall" that courts guard against is the situation "where awarding 25% of a 'megafund' would yield windfall profits for class counsel in light of the hours spent on the case." Id. (emphasis added). See also 5 W. Rubinstein, Newberg on Class Actions, § 15:81 (5th ed. Dec. 2017 update); CRT III, 2016 WL 4126533, at *6 ("[T]he best way to guard against a windfall is first to examine whether a given percentage represents too high a multiplier of counsel's lodestar.").

Here, while the recovery of $139.3 million could technically be viewed as a "megafund" raising the possibility of a windfall, the concept of the $100 million threshold to qualify as a [7] The lodestar method requires that the Court determine the number of hours reasonably spent by counsel on a matter, multiply it by counsel's reasonable hourly rates, and then adjust the lodestar up or down based on various factors similar to those relevant to the percentage method. In re Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d 935, 941-42 (9th Cir. 2011).

"megafund" is misplaced in this circumstance. See 5 Newberg on Class Actions, § 15:81 ("[T]he mega-fund approach is an odd idea in that it implies that everything is rational until $100 million, but irrational thereafter, creating a cliff-like effect rather than a gradually-reducing percentage along the lines of a hill [known as the 'sliding scale' approach].") In any case, as Judge Wilken recently explained, "[F]ederal district courts across the country have, in the class action settlement context, routinely awarded class counsel fees in excess of the 25% 'benchmark,' even in so-called 'mega-fund' cases." NCAA, 2017 WL 6040065, at *9.

Here, a lodestar cross-check "confirm[s] that a percentage of recovery amount does not award counsel an exorbitant hourly rate." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs' Counsel here have devoted 173,863 hours, resulting in a total lodestar of $72.5 million. Tabacco Decl. ¶92 & Ex. 5. This results in an average hourly rate of $417 per hour. The resulting multiplier, moreover, is negative at 0.58, so if the requested fee is awarded, the effective average hourly rate is $241.82 per hour. Id., ¶94.

There is no windfall.

The 173,863 hours that Plaintiffs' Counsel devoted to the litigation is the result of the complexity and labor-intensive nature of the legal work. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶67, 77, 92-93. Co-Lead Counsel maintained control over the work and carefully monitored the work Plaintiffs' Counsel performed to avoid duplication of effort. Id., ¶70. Co-Lead Counsel required every law firm representing the DPP Class to commit in writing to a time and expense protocol as a precondition to receiving any assignments. Id., ¶71 & Ex. 4. The protocol mandated billable hour caps for the various types of attorney and para-professional work,[8] reporting requirements of contemporaneously-kept time records, and strict rules on what is and what is not compensable time. Id. After the final settlement agreement was reached, Co-Lead Counsel halted all ongoing work by Plaintiffs' Counsel and performed an audit of all the detailed time records of every firm.[9] Id.

[8] For example, the protocol enforces caps of $350/hr for attorneys' document review, $400/hr for foreign language document review, $175/hr. for paralegals and investigators. Tabacco Decl. Ex. 4, at 2. With nearly half of all the billable hours dedicated to document review, these rate caps had a major effect.

[9] The lodestar includes zero time billed for the time and expense audit, nor, for that matter, the work to prepare this Motion. Moreover, Co-Lead Counsel will likely incur hundreds of Indeed, the total lodestar would be higher if Co-Lead Counsel had not capped billing rates but charged what large defense firms charge for hourly rates.

Accordingly, a lodestar cross-check confirms the requested 30% fee should be awarded.

C. Plaintiffs' Counsel's Expenses Are Reasonable and Necessarily Incurred

Plaintiffs' Counsel seek payment from the Settlement Fund of $3,354,573.35 in expenses necessarily incurred in the prosecution of this action, an amount representing 2.4% of the Settlement Fund. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶96-101 & Ex. 7.

Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to be reimbursed out-of-pocket expenses incurred in creating the fund so long as the submitted expenses are reasonable, necessary and directly related to the prosecution of the action. Vincent v. Hughes Air West, 557 F.2d 759, 769 (9th Cir. 1977); In re Omnivision Techs., Inc., 559 F. Supp. 2d 1036, 1048 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("Attorneys may recover their reasonable expenses that would typically be billed to paying clients in non-contingency matters.").

With this Motion, the Tabacco Declaration (regarding expenses generally) together with the Zahid Declaration (providing the Litigation Fund accounting) provide an accounting for expenses incurred by Plaintiffs' Counsel. Tabacco Decl. ¶¶96-101, Ex. 7; Zahid Decl. ¶¶2-16 & Exs. A-B. Of the $3,354,573.35 in expenses, $2,501,352.52 are out-of-pocket, i.e., already expended for the DPP Class' benefit.[10] See Tabacco Decl. Ex. 7. The remaining amount consists of an unpaid invoice for economic consulting work ($212,030) and unpaid charges for document hosting ($641,190.83). Id.

The primary out-of-pocket expense in this case was for economic expert fees, which at $1,623,777 (expenses for experts Noll and OSKR) account for 48% of all expenses. See Zahid Decl.

additional hours in connection with their continuing responsibilities of administering the settlements and any post-judgment proceedings and appeals, without prospect for further fees.

[10] Co-Lead Counsel have elected not to seek any reimbursement for money spent by any Plaintiffs' Counsel on travel, meals and lodging expenses, which totaled $190,914.56. See Tabacco Decl. Exs. 7 & 9. Restaurant receipts, hotel bills, and airfare charges are frequently targeted for scrutiny, both fair and unfair. District courts can be lured into a time-consuming review of such charges as part of a dutiful exercise to ensure class counsel enjoyed no frills at the class' expense. Here, there is nothing untoward about these expenses, but not seeking them spares the Court's time and resources.

Ex. B. Absent the investment in the economic expert fees, there would be no Settlement Fund at all. The expert economists sorted and scrubbed massive quantities of transaction data to arrive at an econometrically-sound impact and damages methodologies for trial. Without the expert economists working hand-in-glove with Co-Lead Counsel to arrive at workable impact and damage proof, the Defendants never would have been wrestled to the settlement table, let alone persuaded to part with $139.3 million.

The second-largest item is the charge of $641,190.83 from Polsinelli LLP which hosted millions of pages of documents on a Relativity-based platform to facilitate document review. The charge is for services rendered which have not been compensated. Information on the charge for the document hosting is found in the Tabacco Declaration at ¶99 as well as the Declaration of Daniel D. Owen Regarding Document Hosting Expenses ("Owen Document Hosting Decl."), Comp., Ex. BB. The document hosting was necessary to the prosecution of the case and consequently it is requested that payment be made from the Settlement Fund to satisfy it.

Other major categories of expenses—such as the out-of-pocket expenses for Technology-Assisted Review and related data analytics ($97,336.29), trial consultants ($50,203.79), and foreign language translators ($209,942.91)—were likewise reasonable and necessary, and should be reimbursed. See Zahid Decl. Ex. B.

As the Ninth Circuit recognizes, in contingency fee class actions "litigation expenses make the entire action possible." Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 953. Plaintiffs' Counsel advanced these expenses, interest free, with no assurance they would ever be recouped. The request for reimbursement is reasonable.

D. Payment of Service Awards to the Class Representatives is Appropriate

Plaintiffs' Counsel request that the Court approve service awards to the nine Class Representatives in the following amounts: Ritz Camera, Circuit City, and Univisions ($30,000 each); Automation Engineering, Stereo Shop and First Choice Marketing ($10,000 each); and Charles Carte, Terri Walner, and James O'Neil ($5,000 each). If awarded, the total is $135,000 to be deducted from the Settlement Fund, an amount equal to 0.09% of the Settlement Fund.

Service awards, a.k.a., "incentive awards," encourage victims of antitrust and other harms to undertake the responsibilities and risks of representing classes and to recognize the time and effort spent in the case. NCAA, 2017 WL 6040065, at *11. "Incentive awards are fairly typical in class action cases" as they are intended "to compensate class representatives for work done on behalf of the class, to make up for financial or reputational risk undertaken in bringing the action, and, sometimes, to recognize their willingness to act as a private attorney general." Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 563 F.3d 948, 958-59 (9th Cir. 2009). Service awards are evaluated in light of "the actions the plaintiff has taken to protect the interests of the class, the degree to which the class has benefitted from those actions … [and] the amount of time and effort the plaintiff expended in pursuing the litigation." Staton, 327 F.3d at 977 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Here, the Class Representatives spent significant time and effort litigating this case for over five years for the benefit of the DPP Class. See generally Simon Decl. ¶¶53-59; Saveri Decl. ¶¶38-51; Tabacco Decl. ¶¶102-07. Each reviewed draft versions of complaints and other pleadings. See, e.g., Saveri Decl. ¶42. Each spent time reviewing and responding to three sets of document requests containing a total of 74 separate requests, assisted and participated in the collection of responsive hard copy documents, and in the cases of Ritz Camera, Circuit City and Univisions, identified ESI sources likely to contain responsive transaction data and other relevant information. Simon Decl. ¶54; Saveri Decl. ¶43; Tabacco Decl. ¶¶37-39, 67, 104.

Each Class Representative reviewed and responded to three sets of interrogatories totaling 27 separate interrogatories, requiring sworn certifications on multiple occasions. Simon Decl. ¶56; Saveri Decl. ¶44; Tabacco Decl. ¶¶36-37, 67, 105. They each kept abreast of the major filings in the case. Simon Decl. ¶57; Saveri Decl. ¶45; Tabacco Decl. ¶¶104, 106. Finally, each Class Representative spent significant time preparing for deposition and then sitting for examination. Simon Decl. ¶58; Saveri Decl. ¶46; Tabacco Decl. ¶107.

The total requested amount for service awards, $135,000 (Tabacco Decl. ¶¶108-17) is only 0.09% of the Settlement Fund, a fact supporting the request. See CRT I, No. C-07-5944 JST, 2016 WL 153265, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 13, 2016) (service awards representing 0.196% of settlement is "very small percentage"). The requested awards to the three larger corporate Class Representatives of $30,000 each, to the three small businesses of $10,000 each, and the three individuals of $5,000 each are reasonable. See id (awarding $25,000 each to ten businesses for service as class representatives. For the individuals, $5,000 is presumptively reasonable. Id at *2.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' Counsel for the DPP Class respectfully submit that their requests for fees, expenses and service awards are reasonable and should be granted.

ORDER REGARDING END-PAYOR PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AND PAYMENT OF INCENTIVE AWARDS TO CLASS REPRESENTATIVES IN CONNECTION WITH THE ROUND 4 SETTLEMENTS

End-Payor Plaintiffs' ("EPPs") have filed their Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Payment of Incentive Awards to Class Representatives in Connection with the Round Four Settlements.

The Court has reviewed the memorandum submitted by EPPs in support of their motion and has also reviewed all of the declarations and submissions relating to the motion filed with the Court. Pursuant to notice given to the Settlement Classes in accordance with the Court's order, the Court held a hearing by video conference on September 17, 2020 to consider the motion.[1]

Based on the entire record of these proceedings and in consideration of all of the submissions and filings made with respect to EPPs' application, and good cause appearing therefor,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

1. The Court has granted final approval to the settlements referred to by the parties and the Court as the Round 4 Settlements in its Order Granting Final Approval of the Round 4 Settlements.[2] The Court has considered the submissions of the parties and the relevant case law and authority relating to the motion and concludes that awards of attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses to Co-Lead Counsel from the litigation fund, and incentive awards to be paid out of

[1] Defined terms not otherwise defined herein shall have the meanings ascribed to those terms as noted in End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Payment of Incentive Awards to Class Representatives in Connection with the Round Four Settlements and the papers associated with that motion. See, e.g., Exhaust Systems, Case No. 2:16-cv-03703, ECF No. 174.

[2] EPPs filed their motion for an award of attorneys' fees and for incentive awards to Class Representatives in the cases that are being settled as to the Settling Defendants that are parties to the Round 4 Settlements. This Order will accordingly be separately entered as an order in each specific case docket to which it applies. The litigation expenses that are the subject of EPPs' motion will be paid from the litigation expense fund previously approved by the Court. If, at the conclusion of this litigation, funds remain in that fund, they will be added to the Settlement Funds for distribution to authorized Class member claimants.

the proceeds of the Round 4 Settlements are appropriate under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(h) and 54(d)(2). Notice of the motion for fees and incentive awards was provided to the potential Settlement Class members pursuant to, and in compliance with, the order of the Court by direct and published notice and a settlement website that identified and made available for inspection the Court's long-form notice and filings in this litigation. The notice given regarding the motion fully satisfied the requirements of Rule 23 and constitutional Due Process.

2. The Court has considered the reaction of class members to the fee request. Out of the millions of potential class members who were given notice or who were made aware of the settlements and the fee request, the Court received no objections to EPPs' motion.

3. The Court engages in a two-part analysis when assessing the reasonableness of a petition seeking an award of attorneys' fees to be paid out of the proceeds of a class action settlement. In re Cardinal Health Inc. Sec. Litig., 528 F. Supp. 2d 752, 760 (S.D. Ohio 2007). The Court first determines the method of calculating the attorneys' fees: it applies either the percentage-of-the-fund approach or the lodestar/multiplier method. Id.; Van Horn v. Nationwide Prop. & Cas. Inc. Co., 436 F. App'x 496, 498 (6th Cir. 2011).

4. The Court has the discretion to select the appropriate method for calculating attorneys' fees "in light of the unique characteristics of class actions in general, and of the unique circumstances of the actual cases before them." Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Properties, Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 516 (6th Cir. 1993). In common fund cases, whichever method is used, the award of attorneys' fees need only "be reasonable under the circumstances." Id. The Court also analyzed and weighed the six factors described in Ramey v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc., 508 F.2d 1188, 1196 (6th Cir. 1974).

5. Consistent with prior attorneys' fees awards in this litigation, the Court will award fees to EPPs using the percentage-of-the-fund approach. This method of awarding attorneys' fees is preferred in this District because it conserves judicial resources and aligns the interests of class counsel and the class members. Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 515; In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., No. 08-md-01952, 2011 WL 6209188, at *16 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 13, 2011); In re Delphi Corp. Sec., Derivative & "ERISA" Litig., 248 F.R.D. 483, 502 (E.D. Mich. 2008); Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 762 (the Sixth Circuit has "explicitly approved the percentage approach in common fund cases"); In re Skelaxin (Metaxalone) Antitrust Litig., No. 12-md-2343, 2014 WL 2946459, *1 (E.D. Tenn. Jun. 30, 2014).

6. The Court hereby authorizes Co-Lead Counsel to pay the expenses of the settlement notice and claims administration from the Round 4 Settlements on a pro rata basis.

7. Co-Lead Counsel have requested a fee award equal to 22% of the Settlement Funds. The award requested is within the range of fee awards made by courts in this Circuit. In re Prandin Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 10-cv-12141, 2015 WL 1396473, *5 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 20, 2015) (awarding one-third of the common fund); In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 2011 WL 6209188, at *19; Skelaxin, 2014 WL 2946459, at *1; In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., No. 08-md-1000, 2013 WL 2155387, at *8 (E.D. Tenn. May 17, 2013); Thacker v. Chesapeake Appalachia, L.L.C., 695 F. Supp. 2d 521, 528 (E.D. Ky. 2010); Bessey v. Packerland Plainwell, Inc., No. 4:06-CV-95, 2007 WL 3173972, at *4 (W.D. Mich. 2007); Delphi, 248 F.R.D. at 502-03; In re National Century Financial Enterprises, Inc. Investment Litig., 2009 WL 1473975, *3 (S.D. Ohio, May 27, 2009); Kogan v. AIMCO Fox Chase, L.P., 193 F.R.D. 496, 503 (E.D. Mich. 2000).

8. As noted below, the Court has previously made interim fee awards equal to 20% of the principal amount of the Round 1 Settlements; 20% of the Round 2 Settlements, net of litigation expenses; and 25% of the Round 3 Settlements, net of litigation expenses.

9. The Court has considered the six Ramey factors in weighing a fee award to Co-Lead Counsel: (1) the value of the benefits rendered to the class; (2) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits in order to maintain an incentive to others; (3) whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis; (4) the value of the services on an hourly basis [i.e., the lodestar cross-check]; (5) the complexity of the litigation; and (6) the professional skill and standing of counsel on both sides. Ramey, 508 F.2d at 1196.

10. The Court has carefully analyzed the settlements and applied the Ramey factors to EPPs' motion and concludes that the factors are met and justify an interim fee award to Co-Lead Counsel. The Round 4 Settlements collectively total $183,958,000,[3] and provide substantial cash and non-monetary benefits, including, with few exceptions, extensive discovery cooperation from all Settling Defendants and injunctive relief prohibiting certain conduct at issue in the litigation from all but a few of the Settling Defendants who are parties to the Round 4 Settlements.[4]

[3] Pursuant to a settlement with the Reorganized TK Holdings Trust ("TKH") in bankruptcy proceeding, Co-Lead Counsel have secured a $53,200,000 authorized claim against TKH, but they expect to receive only a small fraction of this amount for distribution to the classes. Because the ultimate settlement amount in connection with the TKH settlement remains undetermined at this time, this figure was not included in Co-Lead Counsel's calculation of the Round 4 settlement proceeds. TKH is also the only Settling Defendant which is not required to provide cooperation under its settlement agreement.

[4] Cooperation obligations of certain defendants are in certain cases deemed mostly satisfied once final judgment as to all defendants in those cases has been entered and all appeals, if any, have been exhausted. However, even in these circumstances, the Settling Defendants are still required to provide cooperation in the form of providing vehicle lists and to produce to the EPPs documents that they produce to other parties.

11. Courts in the Sixth Circuit weigh "society's stake in rewarding attorneys who [obtain favorable outcomes for a class] in order to maintain an incentive to others," and counsel's success in complex antitrust litigation "counsels in favor of a generous fee." Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 534 (internal quotation marks omitted). The substantial recoveries obtained by EPPs to date serve the strong public policy of holding accountable those who violate the antitrust laws, thereby promoting fair competition and honest pricing.

12. EPP Class Counsel have worked on a contingent basis and the results of this litigation have never been certain.

13. The legal and factual issues in this litigation are complex and the parties have zealously asserted their claims and defenses. Co-Lead Counsel have asserted a number of claims under both federal and state antitrust laws, as well as state consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws. Likewise, issues attendant to serving and conducting discovery against numerous foreign defendants located around the world compound the complexity of this case.

14. The Court is satisfied that these settlements were the result of arm's-length negotiations conducted in good faith by informed and experienced counsel, and, in many cases, with the assistance of highly experienced mediators.

15. The Ramey factors and a cross-check of the lodestar incurred by EPP Class Counsel suggest that EPP Class Counsel are entitled to appropriate compensation to take into account the risks they assumed, the magnitude of work done, and the benefits achieved for the members of the Settlement Classes. Here, Co-Lead Counsel reviewed all EPPs' attorney time submissions received through September 30, 2019, and included detailed information about the resulting lodestar in EPPs' motion. EPP Class Counsels' lodestar in this litigation totals $154,782,333.18, from March 23, 2012 through September 30, 2019, calculated in accordance with EPP Class Counsels' current hourly rates.[5] These hours and rates are reasonable and justified given the length and complexity of this litigation and EPP Class Counsels' many years of experience in prosecuting complex antitrust class actions. Further, the defendants in these cases are represented by some of the most prominent antitrust defense lawyers in the world. EPP Class Counsels' hourly rates are also in-line with the market. In each of the EPP Class Counsel firm's declarations, only the most senior attorneys list hourly rates above $700. These rates are well in line with the market, with recent reports explaining that senior lawyers at top law firms routinely charge well over $1,000. See Sara Randazzo & Jacqueline Palank, Legal Fees Cross New Mark: $1,500 an Hour, WALL ST. J., Feb. 9, 2016, available at https://www.wsj.com/articles/legal-fees-reach-new-pinnacle-1-500-anhour-1454960708 ("Despite low inflation and weak demand for legal services, rates at large corporate law firms have risen by 3% to 4% a year since the economic downturn").

16. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS an award of attorneys' fees to Co-Lead Counsel equal to 22% of the Round 4 Settlements including a pro rata share of the interest earned thereon, excluding the yet to be determined TKH settlement amount. This award, taken together with the prior awards from the Round 1 Settlements, Round 2 Settlements, and Round 3 Settlements will result in a total award equal to 22.05% of the proceeds of the four rounds of settlements, excluding the TKH settlement. The Round 4 attorneys' fees, totaling $40,470,760.00, together with a pro rata share of the interest earned thereon, shall be paid on a pro rata basis from the net settlement funds provided by each of the Round 4 Settlements currently before the Court.

[5] The Court determines that the time included in connection with the Round 1, Round 2, and Round 3 Settlement fee requests should be included in the lodestar/multiplier cross-check for the Round 4 Settlements. In calculating the lodestar for purposes of the cross-check, it would be impractical to compartmentalize and isolate the work that EPP Class Counsel did in any particular case at any particular time because all of their work assisted in achieving all of the settlements and has provided and will continue to provide a significant benefit to all of the EPP classes. See Southeastern Milk, 2013 WL 2155387, at *7-8 (rejecting objection based on the proposition that the calculation of class counsel's lodestar should be limited to work performed after the period covered by a prior fee award); Lobatz v. U.S. West Cellular of California, Inc., 222 F.3d 1142 (9th Cir. 2000) (same).

17. Using the lodestar/multiplier cross-check methodology and reviewing the total fees awarded against the lodestar generated on these cases from March 23, 2012 to September 30, 2019, the 22% fee awarded results in an overall lodestar/multiplier of 1.74, excluding the TKH settlement. Such a multiplier is well within, if not substantially below, the range of reasonable multipliers awarded in similar contingent fee cases. See In re Prandin, 2015 WL 1396473, at *14 (awarding attorneys' fees in the amount of one-third of a $19 million settlement fund, which equaled a multiplier of 3.01); Bailey v. AK Steel Corp., No. 1:06-cv-468, 2008 WL 553764, at *3 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 28, 2008) (awarding attorneys' fees with a multiplier of approximately 3). This interim fee award is reasonable in light of the complexity of this litigation, the results achieved for the class members to date, the work and labor of EPP Class Counsel, and the risks assumed by EPP Class Counsel.

18. Co-Lead Counsel are hereby authorized to allocate the attorneys' fees awarded herein among EPP Class Counsel who performed work on behalf of EPPs in accordance with Co-Lead Counsel's assessment of each firm's contribution to the prosecution and settlement of these actions.

19. Co-Lead Counsel have also requested a total of $565,000 in incentive awards to be paid to fifty-nine named Class Representatives. Co-Lead Counsel have split those Class Representatives into two groups based on their contributions to the cases.

20. The first group ("Group 1") is comprised of the following five individuals: (1) Jane Butler; (2) Melissa Croom; (3) Theresia Dillard; (4) James Phelps; and (5) Bonnie Vander Meulen. Co-Lead Counsel have proposed that each of these individuals would receive a single $5,000 award per person.

21. The second group ("Group 2") is comprised of the following fifty-four individuals: (1) Ifeoma Adams; (2) Halley Ascher; (3) Gregory Asken; (4) Melissa Barron; (5) Kimberly Bennett; (6) David Bernstein; (7) Ron Blau; (8) Tenisha Burgos; (9) Kent Busek; (10) Jennifer Chase; (11) Rita Cornish; (12) Nathan Croom; (13) Lori Curtis; (14) Jessica DeCastro; (15) Alena Farrell; (16) Jane Fitzgerald; (17) Frances H. Gammell-Roach; (18) Carroll Gibbs; (19) Dori Gilels; (20) Jason Grala; (21) Ian Groves; (22) Curtis Gunnerson; (23) Paul Gustafson; (24) Tom Halverson; (25) Curtis Harr; (26) Andrew Hedlund; (27) Gary Arthur Herr; (28) John W. Hollingsworth; (29) Carol Ann Kashishian; (30) Elizabeth Kaufman; (31) Robert P. Klingler; (32) Kelly Klosterman; (33) James E. Marean; (34) Michelle McGinn; (35) Rebecca Lynn Morrow; (36) Edward T. Muscara; (37) Stacey R. Nickell; (38) Sophie O'Keefe-Zelman; (39) Roger D. Olson; (40) William Dale Picotte; (41) Whitney Porter; (42) Cindy Prince; (43) Janne Rice; (44) Robert M. Rice, Jr.; (45) Darrel Senior; (46) Meetesh Shah; (47) Darcy C. Sherman; (48) Erica J. Shoaf; (49) Arthur Stukey; (50) Kathleen A. Tawney; (51) Jane Taylor; (52) Keith Uehara; (53) Michael Wick; and (54) Phillip G. Young. Co-Lead Counsel have proposed that each of these individuals would receive a single $10,000 award per person.

22. This is the first time Co-Lead Counsel have requested incentive awards on behalf of the Class Representatives. Notice that EPPs would be requesting incentive awards for the Class Representatives was included in the published notice given to the Settlement Classes. And Co-Lead Counsel have only requested $565,000 in incentive awards, which is equal to approximately 0.3% of the Round 4 Settlement Funds, excluding the TKH settlement.

23. The Sixth Circuit has noted that incentive awards are typically awarded to class representatives for their extensive involvement with a lawsuit. Hadix v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 895, 897 (6th Cir. 2003). Awards encourage members of a class to become class representatives and reward their efforts taken on behalf of the class. Id. Payment of incentive awards to class representatives is a reasonable use of settlement funds. Moulton v. U.S. Steel Corp., 581 F.3d 344, 351 (6th Cir. 2009). Courts have approved incentive awards of up to $15,000 for individual plaintiff class representatives for providing information to class counsel, receiving and approving pleadings, assisting in discovery, and participating in settlement discussions. See In re CMS Energy ERISA Litig., No. 02-72834, 2006 WL 2109499, at *3 (E.D. Mich. June 27, 2006). Courts have also provided awards of $10,000 for class representatives who "searched their personal records multiple times to locate documents" in addition to "testif[ying] via depositions" and awards of $5,000 for class representatives who "participated in discovery by locating and producing documents." The Shane Group, Inc. v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan, Case No. 2:10-cv-14360-DPH-MKM, ECF No. 364 at pp. 27.

24. After reviewing the request for incentive awards, the Court finds that the awards requested are reasonable. Here, Class Representatives provided discovery and assistance in a litany of cases, sometimes in as many as forty-one cases.

25. As to the individual awards to Group 1, these Class Representatives provided important and indispensable service to the Settlement Class. They searched their personal records to locate documents responsive to discovery requests and provided information to Co-Lead Counsel. They also came forward to serve as named plaintiffs. The Court finds that the requested incentive awards for this set of Class Representatives are reasonable in light of their participation during the discovery phase of the litigation. Their participation in this litigation benefitted the Classes.

26. As to the individual awards to Group 2, the individuals in this group participated in discovery by locating and producing documents, came forward as Class Representatives in many, if not all, of the EPP cases, provided Co-Lead Counsel with information, in most cases provided verified responses to interrogatories and, most importantly, testified in a deposition. In light of these significant contributions, the Court finds that their services in the litigation supports the requested incentive awards.

27. These incentive awards, totaling $565,000, shall be paid on a pro rata basis from the net settlement funds provided by each of the Round 4 Settlements currently before the Court.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Sara Randazzo & Jacqueline Palank, Legal Fees Cross New Mark: $1,500 an Hour, The Wall Street Journal (Feb. 16, 2016) 21

INTRODUCTION

Pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("Rules") 23(h) and 54(d)(2), End-Payor Plaintiffs' ("EPPs'")[1] respectfully request an award of $40,470,760.00 in attorneys' fees plus a pro rata share of the interest earned thereon, which is equal to 22% of the settlement amounts paid by 17 Defendants in this litigation as part of the fourth round of settlements excluding the settlement with the Reorganized TK Holdings Trust pursuant to the company's bankruptcy proceeding ("Requested Award").[2]

EPPs make this application for attorneys' fees in connection with EPPs' Motion for Final Approval of Settlements ("Round 4 Settlements") with Brose, Corning, Delphi, Green Tokai, Keihin, KYB, Maruyasu, Meritor, Mikuni, Mitsubishi Heavy, Panasonic, Sanoh, Showa, the Reorganized TK Holdings Trust ("TKH"), Tokai Rika, Toyo Denso, and Toyoda Gosei ("Round 4 Settling Defendants").[3] See Joint Declaration of Hollis Salzman, Marc M. Seltzer, and Adam J. Zapala in Support of End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Payment of Incentive Awards to Class Representatives in Connection with the Round Four Settlements ("Joint Decl.") at ¶ 9.

These settlements with the Round 4 Settling Defendants, each of which was separately negotiated and therefore is separate and independent of the other, total $183,958,000[4] in cash

[1] In granting preliminary approval of these settlements, the Court appointed Robins Kaplan LLP, Cotchett, Pitre & McCarthy, LLP and Susman Godfrey L.L.P. as Settlement Class Counsel ("Class Counsel" or "Co-Lead Counsel"). See, e.g., Order Granting End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Approval of Proposed Settlement with Defendant Meritor and Provisional Certification of Settlement Class at ¶ 6, Exhaust Systems, No. 2:16-cv-03703, ECF. No. 120.

[2] Contemporaneously with this motion, EPPs have filed their Motion for Orders Granting Final Approval of the Round Four Settlements and Approving the Plan of Allocation and Memorandum in Support thereof.

[3] The Round 4 Settling Defendants and corresponding affiliated cases and settlement amounts are listed in Appendix A.

[4] Pursuant to a settlement with TKH reached in its bankruptcy proceeding, Class Counsel have secured a $53,200,000 authorized claim against TKH, but expect to receive only a small fraction ("Round 4 Settlement Amount") and also include, among other benefits, injunctive relief obtained from all but two of the Round 4 Settling Defendants and agreements by all but one of the Settling Defendants to cooperate in the EPPs' continued prosecution of their claims against the Defendants remaining in the Actions ("Non-Settling Defendants").[5] These Round 4 Settlements are only possible because of the dedication, effort, and skill of Co-Lead Class Counsel and the firms working at their direction ("EPP Class Counsel"), including their substantial multi-year investment of time and expenses. The request for 22% of each Round 4 settlement amount is in line with percentages that the Court approved in previous settlements in this case,[6] is supported by Sixth Circuit authority, and is consistent with the previously expressed preference of the Court. Transcript of August 1, 2018 Fairness Hearing at 36:11-15, 2:12-md-2311, ECF No. 1937 (stating that the Court would grant a 25% fee award in Round 3, bringing the total attorneys' fee award to "22 point-something" and noting: "I want you to stick with that for your round four. I'm telling of this amount for distribution to the class. Because the ultimate settlement amount in connection with the TKH settlement remains undetermined at this time, this figure was not included in Class Counsels' calculation of the total amount of the Round 4 settlement proceeds.

[5] At this time, the only remaining Non-Settling Defendants are members of the Bosal Defendant Group in the Exhaust Systems case, No. 2:16-cv-03703. The cooperation of one Settling Defendant, namely Tenneco, has to date been very valuable during the discovery phase of that matter.

[6] See, e.g., Order Granting in Part Award of Attorneys' Fees, Wire Harness, No. 2:12-cv-00103, ECF No. 498 (granting interim fee award of 10% of the Round 1 Settlements, defined below) ("Round 1 Fee Award"); Supplemental Order Granting End-Payor Plaintiffs Additional Attorneys' Fees, Wire Harness, No. 2:12-cv-00103, ECF No. 545 (granting additional interim fee award of 10% of Round 1 Settlements) ("Round 1 Supplemental Fee Award"); Order Regarding End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses, Wire Harness, No. 2:12-cv-00103, ECF No. 578 (granting fee award of 20%, net of certain expenses, of Round 2 Settlements, defined below) ("Round 2 Fee Award"); Order Regarding Auto Dealers' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses and Service Awards at 4 ¶ 11, Wire Harness, No. 2:12-cv-00102, ECF Nos. 401 (granting interim fee award of 33% of the settlement amount); Order Regarding End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses at 7 ¶ 17, Wire Harness, No. 2:12-cv-00102, ECF Nos. 626 (granting fee award of 25% of the Round 3 settlement amount, net of expenses and noting that this together with the Round 2 and Round 1 awards resulted in a total award equal to 22.06%) ("Round 3 Fee Award").

you that now. I think that that would be a fair resolution for an adequate and well deserved attorney fee"). Class Counsel and EPP Class Counsel have undertaken a significant risk, invested substantial amounts of their time and money on a contingent basis, and foregone other work opportunities to dedicate their professional efforts to this case. EPPs also seek incentive awards for named class representatives in the amount of $10,000 for those who appeared for a deposition in this matter and $5,000 for those who did not appear for a deposition, but who participated in significant discovery efforts, including providing EPP Class Counsel with documents and information regarding their purchases or leases of vehicles at issue in this litigation and, in some cases, providing formal discovery responses.

A. The Settlements Achieved

The Round 4 Settlements total $183,958,000 and resolve EPPs' claims against 17 Defendants and their affiliates ("Settling Defendants") in 20 automotive parts cases, as set forth in the chart included at Appendix A. The settlements provide the settlement classes with substantial cash benefits and valuable cooperation from the Settling Defendants. These settlements resolve only a portion of EPPs' claims in this MDL litigation, In re Automotive Parts Antitrust Litigation, MDL No. 2:12-md-02311 ("Auto Parts Action"), and represent approximately 15% of the total settlement recoveries obtained on behalf of EPPs across all rounds of settlements. These excellent results were only possible because of the dedication, effort, and skill of Co-Lead Class Counsel and the firms working at their direction, including their substantial multi-year investment of time and expenses.

B. EPP Class Counsel's Vigorous Prosecution on Behalf of the Round 4 Settlement Classes

Since 2012, attorneys for EPPs have diligently worked to advance the claims of members of the proposed Round 4 Settlement Classes. As the Court has repeatedly recognized, the EPP class actions are extraordinarily complex, involving over 160 Defendants in 41 separate, but coordinated, antitrust class actions alleging distinct violations of antitrust and consumer protection laws. See Order Regarding End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses at pp. 6-7 ¶ 16 ("Round 3 Fee Award") (noting that "EPPs are entitled to appropriate compensation to take into account the risks they assumed, the magnitude of work done, and the benefits achieved for eh members of the Settlement Classes"); Order Granting Final Approval to the Round 2 Settlements at p. 12, Wire Harness, No. 2:12-cv- 00103 (Jul. 10, 2017), ECF No. 576 ("Round 2 Final Approval Order") ("The Court agrees with EPPs' counsel's assessment that antitrust class actions of the magnitude and size of this very complicated litigation make this among the most difficult and complex actions to prosecute."); see also Transcript of May 11, 2016 Fairness Hearing at 72-73, 2:12-md-2311, ECF No. 1365 (noting the complexity of the EPP action and referring to the difficulty of the case as "extraordinary"); In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., No. 08-MDL-01952, 2011 WL 6209188, at *19 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 13, 2011) (stating that antitrust class actions are "arguably the most complex action[s] to prosecute" given the "legal and factual issues . . . [that are] numerous and uncertain in outcome."); In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 533 (E.D. Mich. 2003) ("Antitrust class actions are inherently complex . . . .").

The size and complexity of Auto Parts has required a huge undertaking by all involved, including EPP Class Counsel. EPP Class Counsel's activities have included:

- Performing extensive research into the worldwide automotive parts industry, as well as the federal antitrust laws and the antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws of at least 30 states and the District of Columbia;

- Researching and drafting scores of class action complaints, including more than 70 amended complaints, incorporating extensive new factual information obtained as a result of additional investigation, document review, and proffers and interviews of witnesses made available by certain settling and cooperating Defendant groups;

- Successfully opposing dozens of motions to dismiss filed by Defendant groups through extensive briefing and oral argument before the Court;

- Reviewing and analyzing millions of pages of English and foreign language documents (many of which Class Counsel and the attorneys working with them were required to translate) produced by Defendants;

- Drafting and coordinating discovery with all Plaintiff groups against over 100 Defendants, as well as preparing and arguing numerous contested discovery motions;

- Meeting with Defendants' counsel in connection with factual proffers obtained pursuant to the cooperation provisions of settlement agreements or the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement Reform Act, and interviewing key witnesses from various Defendant groups, including abroad and in federal prison in the United States;

- Coordinating the actions of EPPs, and sometimes of all Plaintiff groups, with the United States Department of Justice ("DOJ");

- Obtaining, analyzing and producing thousands of pages of documents and data from more than 50 EPP class representatives, and responding to multiple rounds of detailed Interrogatories propounded by more than 10 separate sets of Defendant groups;

- Spearheading the drafting and negotiation of written discovery, discovery plans, protocols, and stipulations with Defendant and different Plaintiff groups;

- Exchanging information and coordinating with counsel for Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Automobile Dealer Plaintiffs, Truck and Equipment Dealer Plaintiffs, and State Attorneys General regarding various case and settlement issues;

- Preparing for and defending more than 50 EPP class representative depositions;

- Preparing for and taking the depositions of more than 190 Defendant witnesses in the U.S. and abroad;

- Participating in or reviewing the results of more than 140 depositions of automotive dealer class representatives and third-parties;

- Meeting and coordinating with economic and industry experts to analyze facts learned through investigation and discovery;

- Working with experts to discuss and craft appropriate damages methodologies in preparation for class certification, motion practice, and computation of class-wide damages for purposes of trial;

- Spearheading a joint effort between EPPs, Automobile Dealer Plaintiffs, Truck and Equipment Dealer Plaintiffs, and Defendants to obtain Original Equipment Manufacturer ("OEM") discovery, including drafting, serving, and negotiating over 100 subpoenas directed to at least 17 OEM groups, taking numerous depositions, participating in mediations, drafting and successfully arguing two motions to compel discovery and subsequently drafting both general and OEM-specific orders governing production, and negotiating for months to obtain both upstream and downstream OEM discovery;

- Preparing for class certification motions by, among other things, analyzing tens of thousands of documents and other discovery, conducting numerous depositions and interviews, working closely with experts and economists, and coordinating with both Plaintiff and Defendant groups to obtain essential discovery from OEM families;

- Performing the numerous settlement-related tasks necessary to achieve more than 70 settlements totaling over $1.2 billion, the largest indirect purchaser recovery in U.S. history. These tasks included analyzing economic evidence and data and formulating settlement demands; engaging in extensive arm's-length negotiations with Defendant groups, dozens of in-person meetings, countless other communications, and in many instances, working with the assistance of outside neutral mediators; negotiating and preparing drafts of settlement agreements; preparing preliminary approval motions and escrow agreements for each settlement; briefing and arguing responses to settlement objections before this Court and on appeal;

- Crafting, in consultation with EPPs' class-notice expert, four extensive notice programs that were approved by the Court, including the most recent July 2019 class notice program;

- Responding to objections to the settlements and ensuring the settlements will be available to the classes years earlier than would be the case if litigation against Defendants continued through trial and appeal; and

- Creating an efficient and effective plan of allocation for the settlements, including a methodology for calculating the value of claims under the plan of allocation.

See Joint Decl. at ¶ 5.

EPP Class Counsel's efforts are particularly important because the DOJ in its criminal prosecutions did not seek or obtain restitution for the victims of Defendants' unlawful conduct. Indeed, the criminal fines negotiated by the DOJ were determined in light of the fact that the EPPs would be seeking restitution. The plea agreements each recite that "[i]n light of the availability of civil causes of action which potentially provide for a recovery of a multiple of actual damages, the recommended sentence does not include a restitution order for the offense charged in the Information." See, e.g., Plea Agreement, United States v. Corning International Kabushiki Kaisha, No. 2:16-cr-20357 (E.D. Mich. 2016), ECF No. 12. Thus, EPP Class Counsel have undertaken the responsibility of recovering monetary recoveries for the American purchasers and lessees of new vehicles, who are the ultimate victims in these cases.

I. AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES

A. Legal Standards and General Practice

1. Substantial Fee Awards are Common and Necessary

District courts may award reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses from the settlement of a class action under Rules 54(d)(2) and 23(h). The Supreme Court "has recognized consistently that a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980) (citation omitted); see also Mills v. Elec. Auto-Lite Co., 396 U.S. 375, 392-93 (1970). This doctrine recognizes that "those who benefit from the creation of the fund should share the wealth with the lawyers whose skill and effort helped create it." In re Washington Public Power Supply System Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1300 (9th Cir. 1994).

The Supreme Court has also consistently recognized that private antitrust litigation provides an important public benefit as a necessary and desirable tool to assure the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983); Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 344 (1979); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 266 (1972).

Substantial fee awards in successful cases, such as this one, encourage meritorious class actions, and thereby promote private enforcement of, and compliance with, antitrust laws. See Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 653-54 (1985); Alpine Pharmacy, Inc. v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 481 F.2d 1045, 1050 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1092 (1973).

2. The Reasonableness of a Proposed Fee Award is Judged by the Circumstances of the Case

The Sixth Circuit and district courts within this Circuit have repeatedly held that it is within the district court's discretion to determine the "appropriate method for calculating attorney's fees" based on the "the unique circumstances of the actual cases before [it]." In re Sulzer Ortho. Inc., 398 F.3d 778, 780 (6th Cir. 2005) (internal quotation omitted); see also In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., No. 08-md-1000, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70167, at *10 (E.D. Tenn. May 17, 2013). Accordingly, "[t]he district court's award of attorneys' fees in common fund cases need only be 'reasonable under the circumstances.'" Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 102 F.3d 777, 779 (6th Cir. 1996) (quoting Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Props., Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 516 (6th Cir. 1993)); see also In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., No. 10-md-2196, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49592, at *12-13 (N.D. Ohio Apr. 13, 2016) (stating that, in common fund cases, a district court's award of attorneys' fees "need only be reasonable under the circumstances") (internal citations omitted). This Court has explicitly agreed with this approach in granting EPPs' previous fee requests. Order Regarding End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses at 6-7 ¶ 16, Wire Harness, 2:12-cv-00103, ECF No. 626 ("Round 3 Fee Award") (noting that "[i]n common fund cases, whichever method is used, the award of attorneys' fees need only be reasonable under the circumstances") (internal quotations omitted); see also Order Regarding EPPs' Motion for an Award of Attorney' Fees and Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses at ¶ 4, Wire Harness, 2:12-cv-00103, ECF No. 578 ("Round 2 Fee Award") (same).

To assess the reasonableness of a fee application in a class action case, the court first determines the appropriate method of calculating the attorneys' fees by applying either the percentage-of-the-fund approach or the lodestar multiplier method. Van Horn v. Nationwide Prop. & Cas. Inc. Co., 436 F. App'x 496, 498 (6th Cir. 2011); In re Cardinal Health Inc. Sec. Litig., 528 Supp. 2d 752, 760 (S.D. Ohio 2007); see also Rawlings, 9 F.3d at 516 ("[I]t is necessary that district courts be permitted to select the more appropriate method for calculating attorney's fees in light of the unique characteristics of class actions in general, and of the unique circumstances of the actual cases before them."). Where the court selects the percentage-of-the-fund approach, to confirm the reasonableness of the fee award, courts analyze and weigh the six factors described in Ramey v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc., 508 F.2d 1188, 1196 (6th Cir. 1974). See Rankin v. Rots, No. 02-CV-71045, 2006 WL 1791377, at *1 (E.D. Mich. June 27, 2006).

3. Interim Fee Awards are Common in Cases such as Auto Parts

Interim fee awards are appropriate in large-scale litigation, such as this one, where the litigation will last many years, and in which settlements are reached periodically throughout the course of the ongoing litigation. See, e.g., In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., No. 06-MD-1775 JG VVP, 2015 WL 5918273, at *6-7 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015) (awarding fourth round of interim attorneys' fees); In re Diet Drugs Prod. Liab. Litig., No. 99-md-1203, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19396, at *34 (E.D. Pa., Oct. 3, 2002) (awarding attorneys' fees after four years of litigation and noting, "[t]o make them wait any longer for at least some fee award would be grossly unfair"). The Court has already acknowledged the propriety of interim fee awards in this case and has authorized such awards to Class Counsel, Auto Dealer Plaintiff Class Counsel, and Direct Purchaser Plaintiff Class Counsel on multiple occasions.[7] Like the examples cited above, this litigation has been ongoing for more than seven years, and there is still more work to be done in litigating the case against the single remaining Non-Settling Defendant, including discovery, briefing and arguing dispositive motions, engaging in settlement discussions and mediations, and preparing class certification motions. EPP Class Counsel may also be required to prepare for and potentially conduct a trial. It is well known that indirect purchaser cases such as this are notoriously complex, involving proof of pass-on, among other issues.

B. The Court Should Continue to Use the Percentage-of-the-Fund Approach

As noted above, the Court should first determine whether to apply the percentage-of-the-fund approach or the lodestar multiplier method. This Court has applied the percentage-of-the-fund approach in each of its fee awards to EPPs to date.[8] As stated in prior fee motions and incorporated herein, the Court's approach is consistent with that of other courts in this District, which almost always utilize the percentage-of-the-fund approach in common fund cases. End-Payor Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for An Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Certain Expenses in Connection with the Round Three Settlements, Exhaust Systems, No. 2:16-cv-03703-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 115 (June 14, 2018), at pp. 9-10 (marshaling sources in support).

C. The Fee Requested by EPPs is Appropriate

EPPs respectfully request an award of attorneys' fees for the Round 4 Settlements in the amount of $40,470,760.00 plus a pro rata share of the interest earned thereon, which represents [8] See supra note 6. This Court has also awarded interim fees to date for class counsel for the Direct Purchasers and Auto Dealers in this litigation using the percentage-of-the-fund approach. See, e.g., Order Granting Fees, Occupant Safety Systems, No. 2:12-cv-00601, ECF No. 128 (awarding attorneys' fees to Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' counsel based on a percentage of the settlement fund); Order Regarding Auto Dealers' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses, and Service Awards, Wire Harness, 2:12-cv-00103, ECF Nos. 401, 523 (same).

22% of the Round 4 Settlement Amount. This Court has previously recognized that EPPs' requests for similar fees are reasonable. See supra note 4. The Court has also stated that 22% would be reasonable in Round 4. See also Transcript of August 1, 2018 Fairness Hearing at 36:11-15, 2:12-md-2311.

Such an award is entirely appropriate. Courts in this District routinely approve attorneys' fees of 22% or more of the common fund created for the settlement class. Packaged Ice, 2011 WL 6209188, at *17 & 21; In re Prandin Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 10-cv- 12141, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5964 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 20, 2015) (awarding one-third of the common fund); In Re Caraco Pharm. Labs., No. 09-cv-12830, ECF No. 96 (E.D. Mich. June 26, 2013); In re Skelaxin (Metaxalone) Antitrust Litig., No. 12-md-2343, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91661, *5 (E.D. Tenn. Jun. 30, 2014). Indeed, as stated in prior requests for attorneys' fees and incorporated herein, awards of 30% or more of the settlement amount are common in antitrust class actions. See, e.g., End-Payor Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for An Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Certain Expenses in Connection with the Round Three Settlements, Exhaust Systems, No. 2:16-cv-03703-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 115 (June 14, 2018), at pp. 12-13.

Moreover, the requested fee percentage is in line with attorneys' fees in private, non-class litigation in which commentators and courts recognize that the standard contingency-fee percentage is approximately one-third—a percentage significantly greater than the percentage award EPPs request here. See id. Thus, EPPs' fee request is well within market rates for legal fees in similar complex and contingent cases. Id.

D. The Court Should Not Apply a Reduced Percentage to the EPP Fee Applications

Just as the market would not, neither should the Court reduce the percentage award to Class Counsel based on the size of the recovery. The Court has already considered and rejected this so-called "mega fund" theory. Round 2 Fee Award at 3, ¶ 8. As explained in its Motion for Fees in connection with Round 3, the Sixth Circuit has not endorsed the reduced percentage approach. EPPs incorporate those prior arguments here and believe the Court should reject that approach as it had done in the past.

E. Consideration of the Ramey Factors Supports the Request

After selecting a method for awarding attorneys' fees, courts consider the six Ramey factors: (1) the value of the benefits to the class; (2) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits to maintain an incentive to others; (3) whether the services were undertaken on a contingent fee basis; (4) the complexity of the litigation; (5) the professional skill and standing of counsel on both sides; and (6) the value of the services on an hourly basis. Ramey, 508 F.2d at 1194-97. These factors indicate that the fee requested here is fair and reasonable.

1. EPP Class Counsel have Secured Valuable Benefits for the Round 4 Settlement Classes

The principal consideration in awarding attorneys' fees is the result achieved for the class. In re Delphi Corp. Sec., Derivative & "ERISA" Litig., 248 F.R.D. 483, 503 (E.D. Mich. 2008). EPP Class Counsel have secured a settlement amount totaling nearly $184 million for the Round 4 Settlement Classes (and over $1.2 billion thus far in Auto Parts) which, after costs, expenses and fees, will be distributed to class members years earlier than it would be if litigation against the Settling Defendants continued and EPPs were successful through trial and appeal. Of course, this litigation was undertaken on a contingency fee basis with no assurances of any recovery, much less a recovery in the amount of the settlements. Further, as with the Round 1, Round 2, and Round 3 Settlements, Co-Lead Class Counsel negotiated for and obtained significant non-monetary benefits from the Settling Defendants, including injunctive relief, and carefully crafted discovery cooperation clauses for the benefit of the Round 4 Settlement Classes.

This recovery is especially important because, despite Defendants' myriad guilty pleas, the DOJ did not obtain any monetary restitution for the victims of Defendants' unlawful conduct. Yet, at the same time, the then United States Attorney General made clear that "as a result of these conspiracies, Americans paid more for their cars." Remarks as Prepared for Delivery by Attorney General Eric Holder at Auto Parts Press Conference, U.S. Department of Justice (Sept. 26, 2013), http://www.justice.gov/opa/speech/remarks-prepared-delivery-attorney-general-eric-holder-auto-parts-press-conference. These settlements will provide much needed restitution to American consumers and other class members.

In addition to all-cash settlements totaling to nearly $184 million, EPP Class Counsel have, as noted above, also secured non-monetary relief, including: (i) substantial cooperation by nearly all Settling Defendants, who have or will provide fact proffers, witness interviews, documents, depositions, and trial testimony; and (ii) an agreement by all but two of the Settling Defendants for a period of two years not to engage in certain specified conduct that would violate the antitrust laws involving the automotive parts that are at issue in these lawsuits.[9] This cooperation provides access to critical documents and witnesses without the delay and expense of contested discovery. See, e.g., In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., No. 08-MD-01952, 2010 WL 3070161, at *6 (E.D. Mich. Aug. 2, 2010) ("[T]here is the potential for a significant benefit to the class in the form of cooperation on the part of the settling Defendant."); see generally In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 292 F. Supp. 2d 631, 643 (E.D. Pa. 2003); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., No. 81-md-310, 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11004 (S.D. Tex. June 4, 1981). This cooperation has already assisted, and will continue to assist, EPPs in the prosecution of their claims against Non-Settling Defendants, providing substantial value to the Round 4 Settlement Classes.

[9] See, e.g., Long Form Notice attached as Exhibit A to EPPs' Motion for Authorization to Disseminate July 2019 Notice, Heater Control Panels, 2:12-cv-00403, ECF No. 291.

2. Society has a Significant Stake in Awarding Reasonable Attorneys' Fees in this Litigation

Attorneys' fees should be awarded so as "to encourage attorneys to bring class actions to vindicate public policy (e.g., the antitrust laws) as well as the specific rights of private individuals." In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 84 F.R.D. 245, 260 (N.D. Ill. 1979), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 744 F.2d 1252, 1253 (7th Cir. 1984). Courts in the Sixth Circuit weigh "society's stake in rewarding attorneys who [obtain favorable outcomes for a class] in order to maintain an incentive to others," and counsel's success in complex antitrust litigation "counsels in favor of a generous fee." Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 534 (internal quotes omitted); Delphi, 248 F.R.D. at 503.

Members of the Round 4 Settlement Classes will recover for their injury only through counsel pursuing this litigation entirely on a contingent fee basis. The substantial recoveries obtained to date serve the invaluable public policy of holding accountable those who violate U.S. antitrust laws, thereby promoting fair competition and honest pricing. Vendo Co. v. Lektro- Vend Corp., 433 U.S. 623, 635 (1977) ("Section 16 [of the Clayton Act] undoubtedly embodies congressional policy favoring private enforcement of the antitrust laws, and undoubtedly there exists a strong national interest in antitrust enforcement."); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 122 (2d Cir. 2005) ("[I]t is especially important to provide appropriate incentives to attorneys pursuing antitrust actions because public policy relies on private sector enforcement of the antitrust laws."); Linerboard, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, at *53 ("[T]he incentive for 'the private attorney general' is particularly important in the area of antitrust enforcement because public policy relies so heavily on such private action for enforcement of the antitrust laws.").

3. EPP Class Counsel are Working on a Contingent Fee Basis

The determination of a reasonable fee must include consideration of the contingent nature of any EPP Class Counsel's undertaking to devote their time and labor to this litigation, the equally contingent outlay of millions of dollars of out-of-pocket costs and expenses, and the fact that the risks of failure in a class action are notoriously high. A number of courts "consider the risk of non-recovery as the most important factor in fee determination." Kritzer v. Safelite Solutions, LLC, No. 10-cv-0729, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74994, at *30 (S.D. Ohio May 30, 2012) (quoting Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 766); Stanley v. United States Steel Co., No. 04-74654, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114065, at *8 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 8, 2009) ("Numerous cases recognize that the contingent fee risk is an important factor in determining the fee award . . . [a] contingency fee arrangement often justifies an increase in the award of attorneys' fees." (internal quotations omitted)).

The contingency fee factor "stands as a proxy for the risk that attorneys will not recover compensation for the work they put into a case." Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 766. Indeed, "within the set of colorable legal claims, a higher risk of loss does argue for a higher fee." In re Trans Union Corp. Privacy Litig., 629 F.3d 741, 746 (7th Cir. 2011); see also Ballatore v. Comm'r of Soc. Sec., No. 11-15335, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135402, at *14 (E.D. Mich. Aug. 5, 2015) ("[T]the contingent fee [] may be high because the risk of default (i.e., losing the case) is high."). Since 2012, EPP Class Counsel have undertaken significant financial risks in prosecuting these antitrust class cases, an inherently complex and risky form of litigation of unprecedented size and scope against scores of Defendants represented by the largest defense law firms in this country. EPP Class Counsel have devoted millions of dollars of their financial resources to this litigation, with no guarantee of success, and will continue to devote significant time to continue to prosecute the remaining Auto Parts case against the remaining Non-Settling Defendant family as well as administer the claims process for the settlements reached to date.[10] The requested fee award is reasonable in light of the substantial risks involved.

[10] Class Counsel reserve the right to seek additional fees and reimbursement of expenses at a later date for work performed in connection with the settlement claims administration process.

4. The Complexity of the Litigation Supports the Requested Fee

Antitrust class actions are "arguably the most complex action(s) to prosecute. The legal and factual issues involved are always numerous and uncertain in outcome." Packaged Ice, 2011 WL 6209188, at *19 (quoting In re Cardizem, 292 F. Supp. 2d at 639); see also Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 533 ("Antitrust class actions are inherently complex . . . ."). This litigation is manifestly more complex than typical antitrust class actions. The DOJ has described its investigation of Defendants' bid-rigging and price-fixing conspiracies at issue here as the largest criminal cartel it has ever uncovered. The misconduct at issue is unprecedented in breadth—involving at least 41 automotive component parts, many hundreds of affected vehicle models, and scores of foreign and domestic Defendants. Based on sheer volume alone—with 41 separately filed EPP class cases within this MDL—this antitrust litigation is massive.

EPPs have asserted a number of claims under both federal and state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws. As indirect purchasers, EPPs' claims for damages and restitution are based on the laws of approximately thirty states and the District of Columbia. This creates substantial additional risk, uncertainty, and complexity.[11] As one court noted in a similar indirect purchaser action involving allegations of price-fixing of component parts by defendants, "[a]ssessment of damages involved a difficult analysis, which required taking into account the impact of and relationship between federal and state rules concerning damage analysis . . . ." Flat Panel, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49885, at *70; In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1917, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137945, at *65 (N.D. Cal. June 20, 2013) (recommending class certification for indirect purchasers and noting that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs "still have the burden of demonstrating that there is a reasonable method for determining on a class-wide basis whether and to what extent that overcharge was passed on to each of the indirect purchasers at all levels of the distribution chain.") (internal quotes omitted); Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 533 (granting indirect purchaser plaintiffs' motion for final approval and for attorneys' fees noting that plaintiffs "also faced substantial additional difficulties as indirect purchasers.").

Issues attendant to serving and conducting discovery against numerous foreign Defendants located around the world compound the complexity of this litigation. Further, the vast majority of Defendants brought at least one motion to dismiss EPPs' claims challenging standing and the sufficiency of EPPs various state law claims, among other issues. See Joint Decl. at ¶¶ 5, 25. EPPs overwhelmingly prevailed on those motions. EPP Class Counsel also had to manage multiple and overlapping processes of pleading, discovery, and settlement with multiple Defendants. It is respectfully submitted that the unique and complex nature of this litigation has required extraordinary time and effort, and the expenditure of significant funds and other resources by EPP Class Counsel, which further justifies the requested fee and expense award.

5. The Skill and Experience of EPP Class Counsel Support the Requested Fee

Courts consider the skill and experience of counsel on both sides of the litigation in determining a reasonable fee award. In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., No. 10-md-2196, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23482, at *13 (N.D. Ohio Feb. 26, 2015); Packaged Ice, 2011 WL 6209188, at *9, 12. The Court has found EPP Class Counsel to have the requisite skill and experience in class action and antitrust litigation to effectively serve the interests of EPPs. See Round 3 Fee Award at ¶¶ 10-16. EPP Class Counsel's prosecution of this litigation, including the highly favorable settlements achieved to date and the denial, in substantial part, of Defendants' motions to dismiss, demonstrates EPP Class Counsel's skill. Defendants are also represented by highly skilled and experienced attorneys at some of the largest law firms in the world.

6. A Lodestar Crosscheck Confirms That The Requested Fee Is Reasonable

Finally, Ramey requires courts to consider the value of services rendered on an hourly basis. Ramey, 508 F.2d at 1196. As set forth above, EPP Class Counsel's requested fee is reasonable as a percentage of the Round 4 Settlement Amount. See supra § I.B-C. Some courts, however, apply a lodestar "cross-check" on the reasonableness of the requested fee calculated as a percentage of the fund. Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 764; Packaged Ice, 2011 WL 6209188, at *18. Because the lodestar is only used as a cross-check, the Court need not engage in a detailed scrutiny of time records. Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 767. Indeed, when this Court previously awarded attorneys' fees to Class Counsel, the Court relied on the same detailed declarations that Class Counsel submit in support of this motion setting forth, inter alia, hours worked, tasks performs, and hourly rates. See, e.g., Transcript of April 19, 2017 Final Approval Hearing at 49:6-17; 57:2-13, 2:12-md-2311, ECF No. 1748. The substantial time EPP Class Counsel has expended confirms that the fee requested is well "aligned with the amount of work the attorneys contributed" to the recovery, and does not, in any way, constitute an unearned "windfall." Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 764.

The Court has previously held that the relevant attorney hours for purposes of the lodestar cross-check is attorney time since the beginning of the case:

> The Court rejects the argument made by certain objectors that time included with the Round 1 Settlement fee request should not be included in the lodestar cross-check for the Round 2 Settlements. In calculating the lodestar for purposes of the cross-check, it would be impractical to compartmentalize and isolate the work that EPPs' counsel did in any particular case at any particular time because all of their work assisted in achieving all of the settlements and has provided and will continue to provide a significant benefit to all of the EPPs classes.

Round 2 Fee Award at 6 n.2 (citing Southeastern Milk, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70167, at *26-27 (rejecting objection based on the proposition that the calculation of class counsel's lodestar should be limited to work performed after the period covered by a prior fee award). The Court should continue to follow that approach here as it did in determining the Round 3 Fee Award.[12]

In other words, to perform this lodestar cross-check, the Court should once again add any previous awards of attorneys' fees to the fee requested in the pending interim fee application and then divide that total fee amount by the total lodestar from the time of the appointment of lead counsel to the date of the pending interim fee application. See, e.g., Southeastern Milk, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70167, at *26-27 (adopting this approach over objection). In calculating the attorneys' fee lodestar for the cross-check purposes, it would be impractical to compartmentalize and isolate the work that EPP Class Counsel did in any particular case, as most of their work has provided and will continue to provide a significant benefit to the EPP classes in all cases and had, and will continue to have, a material impact in strengthening the claims of the EPPs.

As discussed in further detail below, EPP Class Counsel have provided ongoing litigation efficiencies because the work and effort spent in an early-filed case benefited subsequently-filed cases. See infra, § I.F. EPP Class Counsel's briefing of EPPs' oppositions to Defendants' multiple motions to dismiss provides an example. As the Court is aware, Defendants' motions to dismiss filed in later cases advanced many of the same arguments rejected by the Court in earlier cases. As a result, EPP Class Counsel relied and built on previous work when drafting successful responses to Defendants' motions to dismiss in the later-filed cases. Joint Decl. at ¶ 15. Thus, the time and effort EPP Class Counsel devoted to one or more of the earlier-filed cases directly [12] Class Counsel require the plaintiff law firms working on behalf of EPPs to keep contemporaneous time and expense records. Class Counsel have monitored the work of the firms working for EPPs to ensure efficiency and avoid unauthorized and unnecessary work. Consequently, Class Counsel have been submitting detailed time and expense records that are, and will continue to be, reviewed and analyzed by Class Counsel prior to submission to the Court in conjunction with any attorneys' fee applications. Time not authorized by Class Counsel was struck from this submission.

benefited the EPP classes in later-filed cases, including those in which there will be subsequent settlements and recoveries.[13] Id.

EPP Class Counsel have vigorously prosecuted this litigation with a keen eye to efficiency and economy of time and resources. See Joint Decl. at ¶¶ 5, 11-12. Counsel representing EPPs and their professional staff have worked 380,975.60 hours from Co-Lead Class Counsel's appointment as Interim Co-Lead Class Counsel on March 23, 2012 through September 30, 2019.[14] Id. at ¶ 25. Applying the rates charged by counsel to the hours expended yields a "lodestar" of $154,782,333.18. The requested fee in this motion is $40,470,760.00, which represents 22% of the Round 4 Settlement Amount. Id. at ¶ 23. As previously noted by the Court, this award when added to the prior awards equals a total recovery from the Rounds 1, 2, 3, and 4 settlements of approximately 22.05%, which total $1,220,850,658, excluding the yet-to-be-determined TKH settlement amount. The resulting multiplier is approximately 1.74 of the total lodestar. Id. at ¶ 25.

The resulting multiplier is consistent with (and in fact below) awards made in numerous other class action cases as noted in the prior briefing provided to this Court that is incorporated herein. See, e.g., End-Payor Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for An Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Certain Expenses in Connection with the Round Three Settlements, Exhaust Systems, No. 2:16-cv-03703-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 115 (June 14, 2018), at pp. 26-27 (marshaling sources in support).

Where a single, long-running case has multiple interim fee awards, it is reasonable to expect,

[13] Class Counsel's efficiencies are described in further detail below in § I.F., infra.

[14] EPP Class Counsel performed work in the case at the direction of Co-Lead Class Counsel. As more fully explained in the Joint Declaration, Class Counsel imposed rules and guidelines on the work assigned to and billing practices of EPP Class Counsel. Joint Decl. at ¶ 22. All time submitted by EPP Class Counsel in support of this motion was reviewed by Class Counsel for compliance with these rules and guidelines. Id.

as in the present case, that the later interim fee awards will have a higher multiplier. Id. at p. 27 Indeed, it is entirely reasonable for Class Counsel to receive an award of attorneys' fees that reflects a notably increasing lodestar multiplier where EPP Class Counsel's substantial work and effort has continuously helped advance later cases and led to future recoveries.

As a basis for the lodestar cross-check, EPP Class Counsel's hourly rates are reasonable. As a starting point, EPP Class Counsel are mainly based in Los Angeles, the San Francisco Bay Area, and New York City, and have deep and specialized experience in bringing antitrust cases. "A reasonable hourly rate is determined according to the prevailing market rates in the relevant community. To ascertain that community, district courts 'are free to look to a national market, an area of specialization market, or any other market they believe appropriate to fairly compensate particular attorneys in individual cases.'" Ford v. Fed.-Mogul Corp., No. 2:09-cv-14448, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3399, at *2-3 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 7, 2015) (quoting McHugh v. Olympia Entm't, Inc., 37 F. App'x 730, 740 (6th Cir. 2002)). Even if counsel's "requested rates are high for this district . . . Class Counsel should be compensated at rates that reflect their skill and their success." Schumacher v. AK Steel Corp. Ret. Accum. Pen. Plan, 995 F. Supp. 2d 835, 847 (S.D. Ohio 2014).

On this basis, even the attorneys charging the highest hourly rates in this matter are well within the parameters of reasonableness. In national markets, "partners routinely charge between $1,200 and $1,300 an hour, with top rates at several large law firms exceeding $1,400."[15] In specialties such as "antitrust and high-stakes litigation and appeals . . . [f]or lawyers at the very top of those fields, hourly rates can hit $1,800 or even $1,950." Id. A handful of "difference makers" in the most complex fields, including antitrust litigation, even charge $2,000 an hour.[16]

Another indication that counsel's rates are reasonable for purposes of a lodestar cross-check in a contingency case is if, as in the present case, the attorneys charge similar rates in their per diem work. "The class counsel are entitled to the fee they would have received had they handled a similar suit on a contingent fee basis, with a similar outcome, for a paying client." Matter of Cont'l Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 572 (7th Cir. 1992), as amended on denial of reh'g (May 22, 1992). In any event, this Court has previously recognized that EPP Class Counsel's rates in this matter "are well in line with the market, with recent reports explaining that senior lawyers at top law firms routinely charge well over $1,000." See, e.g., Round 2 Fee Award at 7, ¶ 18 (quoting Randazzo & Palank, supra note 19); see also Round 3 Fee Award at 7 ¶ 16.

7. In Sum, the Requested Fee is Fair and Reasonable

The substantial amount of time over the last seven years EPP Class Counsel have devoted to representing EPPs confirms that the fee requested is well "aligned with the amount of work the attorneys contributed" to the recovery, and does not, in any way, constitute a "windfall." Cardinal, 528 F. Supp. 2d at 764. While the hours EPP Class Counsel have worked are substantial, they are reasonable and reflect the difficult and challenging nature of this extraordinarily large and complex international cartel litigation. See Eisenberg & Miller, 1 J. Empirical Legal Stud. at 64-66, 77 (noting that "complexity is correlated with higher fees" and that "fees as a percentage of recovery tend to be higher in high-risk cases"). Given the excellent results achieved to date, the legal and factual complexity of the claims and defenses, the risk of non-recovery, the formidable opposing counsel for Defendants, the experience and skill of EPP Class Counsel, and the fact that the resulting multiplier on the lodestar is 1.74, the requested fee is demonstrably fair and reasonable.

[16] See Natalie Rodriguez, Meet the $2,000 An Hour Attorney: What it Takes to Earn Top Dollar in the Rate-Crunch Era, Law360, June 11, 2016, https://www.law360.com/in- depth/articles/804421 ("[E]arlier this year, BTI Consulting Group found that a handful of in-house counsel had paid as much as $2,000 per hour, after discounts, to attorneys in the past year. Several other in-house counsel, meanwhile, had paid highs of $1,900 per hour or $1,800 per hour.").

F. The Proposed Fee Structure Rewards and Encourages Efficiencies

The time and expense devoted to prosecuting claims against Defendants related to one automotive part are intimately related to and overlap with the prosecution of EPPs' claims related to other automotive parts and against other Defendants. As the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation specifically contemplated, the centralization of numerous auto parts cases has reduced duplicative discovery and conserved the resources of the parties, their counsel, and the judiciary. In re Auto. Wire Harness Systems Antitrust Litig., 867 F. Supp. 2d 1349 (J.P.M.L. 2012).

EPP Class Counsel have worked to take advantage of the overlapping and interrelated nature of the cases in this litigation to maximize efficiencies. Two types of efficiencies have very much benefited the classes overall. The first is a collective efficiency, where the time and expense devoted by EPP Class Counsel have benefited multiple cases. The second is an ongoing efficiency, where work or expenses incurred in an early-filed case benefits subsequent cases. These efficiencies have allowed EPP Class Counsel to maximize their efforts where time dedicated to one case can and does benefit the classes in other cases.

Significant collective efficiencies occurred throughout the litigation. For example, EPP Class Counsel secured a collective efficiency in this litigation by arguing for and obtaining an Order ensuring that each EPP Class Representative would only be deposed once by Defendants across all cases. Joint Decl. at ¶ 14. This resulted in a substantial savings of time and attorneys' fees across all of the cases. Id. Any attempt to parcel out how much time devoted to each deposition benefited each of EPPs' claims against each Defendant in each Auto Parts case would be arbitrary.

A second example of a collective efficiency can be found in briefing motions to dismiss. In several rounds of briefing, EPPs proposed and entered into stipulations with Defendants to brief certain collective issues across multiple cases rather than on a case-by-case basis. Joint Decl. at ¶ 19. Like EPP depositions, this resulted in a substantial cost and time savings and reflects the overlapping nature of the issues to be litigated in all of the cases. Another example of a collective efficiency is EPP Class Counsel drafting, serving, and negotiating subpoenas directed to original equipment manufacturers, including discovery-related motion practice. Id. at ¶ 16. These subpoenas covered all of the parts in Auto Parts and ensured that the parties were not required to engage in the burdensome process of seeking this discovery 41 or more separate times, depending upon the ultimate number of cases in Auto Parts action. Id.

EPP Class Counsel also spearheaded EPPs' efforts to draft and negotiate discovery orders in all of the remaining cases. Id. at ¶ 20. Though negotiating scheduling orders, such as discovery plans, can be a lengthy process, EPPs drafted the orders to reflect discovery issues that arose across multiple cases. Id. Accordingly, only the most case-specific issues, such as class certification deadlines, had to be negotiated, allowing the parties to negotiate discovery orders in multiple cases simultaneously. Id. These templates were used recently in the remaining Exhaust Systems case. Id.

In addition, EPP Class Counsel helped to bring about substantial ongoing efficiencies, an example of which can be found in EPP Class Counsel's document review work. For instance, during the initial stages of the review of documents in Wire Harness—the first-filed case and first to proceed to discovery—each reviewing attorney was learning about the automotive parts industry as a whole, its methods of conducting business and its vocabulary. Id. at ¶ 17. This understanding naturally increased throughout the review process and enabled reviewing attorneys to review, process, and analyze documents in subsequent cases more effectively and efficiently. Id.

Reviewers also became increasingly familiar with Defendants' internal and industry acronyms, organizational structure, business practices, and conspiratorial behavior. The review process permitted EPPs to create a cast of characters of Defendants' employees, many of whom had responsibility for multiple parts during the alleged class period. But this efficiency is not just limited to Wire Harness; subsequent cases all benefited from the work done in Wire Harness. Indeed, since these cases are inextricably intertwined, the review and analysis of documents and proffers in one case has provided EPP Class Counsel with knowledge and information applicable to the other cases. Id. at ¶ 17.

Yet another example of ongoing efficiencies is reflected again in EPPs' briefing of their oppositions to Defendants' motions to dismiss, which were filed in more than 25 cases. Id. at ¶ 15. As the Court is aware, Defendants in subsequent cases filed motions to dismiss advancing many of the same arguments rejected by the Court in prior cases. The time EPP Class Counsel spent researching and drafting successful responses to Defendants' motions to dismiss in the earlier cases therefore benefited the EPP classes in subsequent cases, where in many instances, the Court adopted its prior rulings. Id. Similarly, stipulations and other protocols negotiated in the earlier-filed cases served as templates for similar stipulations and protocols in the other cases. Id. at ¶ 20.

Understanding the global benefits to class members from the inherent efficiencies in multi-district litigation, courts grant attorneys' fees from partial settlements based on all work done to-date. See, e.g., Air Cargo Shipping Services Antitrust Litig., 06-md-1775 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015), ECF No. 2362; In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., No. 08-md-2002, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160764, at *18 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 9, 2012); In re Automotive Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., No. 08-md-1426, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 569 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 3, 2008). Thus, it has been recognized that the time devoted to one or more cases directly benefited the classes in other cases.

EPPs request that the Court award fees totaling 22% of the Round 4 Settlement Amount or, in other words, 22% of each individual settlement fund. EPPs seek a pro rata award of fees from the Round 4 settlement funds similar to that approved by the Court in connection with the Round 3 Settlements, as well as in the Automobile Dealers cases. See Round 3 Fee Award at ¶ 17; Order at 5, Wire Harness, 2:12-cv-00102, ECF No. 401. The chart at Appendix B reflects the proposed allocation of the requested fees among the applicable cases.

II. CO-LEAD CLASS COUNSEL SHOULD BE AUTHORIZED TO DISTRIBUTE FEES AMONG EPP CLASS COUNSEL

EPPs also request the Court's authorization for Class Counsel to distribute the awarded attorneys' fees in a manner that, in the judgment of Class Counsel, fairly compensates each firm for its contribution to the prosecution of EPPs' claims. "Courts routinely permit counsel to divide common benefit fees among themselves." In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., No. 10-md-2196, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9609, at 51 (N.D. Ohio Jan. 27, 2016); see also* End-Payor Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for An Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Certain Expenses in Connection with the Round Three Settlements, Exhaust Systems, No. 2:16-cv-03703-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 115 (June 14, 2018), at pp. 34-35 (marshaling other cases in support of this proposition). Accordingly, EPPs respectfully request that the Court authorize Class Counsel to allocate the fees that are awarded among EPP Class Counsel.

III. AWARD OF EXPENSES AND COSTS PAID FROM THE LITIGATION FUND

For the last seven plus years of Auto Parts, EPP Class Counsel have funded and advanced the substantial expenses and costs required to prosecute the litigation. The Court has previously reimbursed expenses incurred by EPP Class Counsel in conjunction with the Round 1, Round 2, and Round 3 Settlements. See Round 1 Fee Award; Round 2 Fee Award at 3 n.6; Round 3 Fee Award at ¶ 6.

A. Expenditures Paid from the Litigation Fund

Class Counsel pay many of the expenses in this litigation from the previously established litigation fund ("Litigation Fund"). See Supplemental Declaration of Adam J. Zapala Regarding Litigation Fund in Support of End-Payor Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Payment of Incentive Awards to Class Representatives in Connection with the Round Four Settlements ("Zapala Decl.") at ¶ 3. Class Counsel established the Litigation Fund for expenses incurred in the ongoing litigation, and EPP Class Counsel contributed to the Litigation Fund. Id. Additionally, the Court awarded EPPs a fund for the payment of future litigation expenses in the amount of $11,250,000.00 on June 20, 2016. Id. Class Counsel have used a portion of this fund for costs including (1) economic and industry expert fees in connection class certification motions and discovery; (2) document review hosting; (3) translation of documents; and (4) mediation. Id. at Ex. A. EPP Class Counsel are not seeking any reimbursement of costs and expenses paid out of the Litigation Fund or to be paid out of the Litigation Fund to EPP Class Counsel for their individual firm expenses or an award of future litigation costs at this time. The expenses from the Litigation Fund incurred from May 1, 2018 through October 15, 2019, which total $1,116,351.67, are detailed in the Zapala Decl., filed in support of this motion. Id. at ¶ 4. After the deduction of those expenses, the Litigation Fund has a current balance of $7,575,712.44. Id. at ¶ 8.

B. Reimbursement of Costs Already Incurred

EPP Class Counsel also note that they have incurred individual firm costs and from April 1, 2018 through October 15, 2019 that have not yet been reimbursed. The amount of unreimbursed litigation costs and expenses incurred for the benefit of the Round 4 Settlement Class Members during this period totals $156,124.80. See Joint Decl. at ¶ 28. These costs include, among other items, fees for legal research, travel for court appearances, travel for witness interviews, and other reasonable litigation costs and expenses. See id. at ¶ 28; see generally id. at Compendium to Exhibit A, Declarations 1 through 26. EPP Class Counsel intend to use Litigation Fund monies to reimburse incurred individual firm costs and therefore, as noted above, do not seek any reimbursement of those costs and expenses. Id. at ¶ 28. Class Counsel plan to direct the balance of any unused Litigation Fund monies back to the class net settlement funds for disbursement to the Settlement Classes at the conclusion of the claims administration process.

IV. AWARD TO CLASS REPRESENTATIVES

EPPs finally request that each remaining named Plaintiff who participated in any of the End-Payor Plaintiff Auto Parts cases be awarded a single monetary award of $10,000 if that named Plaintiff appeared for a deposition in conjunction with these cases and $5,000 if such named Plaintiff did not appear for a deposition, but otherwise participated in discovery. "Incentive awards are typically awards to class representatives for their often extensive involvement with a lawsuit." Hadix v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 895, 897 (6th Cir. 2003). These awards may be "efficacious ways of encouraging members of a class to become class representatives and awarding individual efforts taken on behalf of the class." Id. Payment of incentive awards to class representatives is a reasonable use of settlement funds. Moulton v. U.S. Steel Corp., 581 F.3d 344, 351-52 (6th Cir. 2009) (approving a $10,000 award to each of the seven class representatives).

Several district courts in this jurisdiction have also recently approved incentive awards of up to $15,000 for individual. See, e.g., The Shane Group, Inc. v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan, Case No. 2:10-cv-14360-DPH-MKM, ECF No. 364 at pp. 25-27 (awarding a total of $165,000 in incentive awards, which amounted to 0.55% of the Settlement Fund, including awards to two individuals in the amount of $10,000 a person and two other individuals in the amount of $5,000 a person); In re CMS Energy ERISA Litig., No. 02-72834, 2006 WL 2109499, at *3 (E.D. Mich. June 27, 2006) (noting that "Class Counsel's request for Class Representative Compensation in the amount of $15,000 each is fair and reasonable in light of the Class Representatives' substantial contribution to the litigation on behalf of the Class"). And most recently, the Shane Court awarded very similar amounts to those requested here for the same expended effort.

For example, the Shane Court approved the $5,000 per person award for two individuals who "participated in discovery by locating and producing documents." Case No. 2:10-cv-14360-DPH-MKM, ECF No. 36 at p. 27. Similarly, the Shane Court approved $10,000 awards to two individuals who "searched their personal records multiple times to locate documents responsive to Blue Cross' discovery requests and obtained documents in the custody of third parties." Id. The Court also noted that "[b]oth testified via depositions, which required them to travel to Detroit from northern Michigan." Id. Similarly, in In re CMS Energy ERISA Litig., the Court specifically noted that a $15,000 award—higher than any individual award requested here—was appropriate. 2006 WL 2109499, at *3.

As stated in the Joint Declaration of Class Counsel, each Class Representative for whom an award is requested sustained a significant discovery burden. EPPs seek incentive awards for two distinct groups of Class Representatives. The first group comprises five Class Representatives who would receive an award of $5,000 each, for a total award of $25,000. EPPs believe these individuals are entitled to this award because they served as a named Class Representative in this historic litigation, provided Class Counsel with information, provided Class Counsel with documents, and, in at least one case, provided Class Counsel with several sets of verified interrogatory responses. See Joint Decl. at ¶ 31 & Figure 2A.

The second group comprises fifty-four Class Representatives who would receive an award of $10,000 each, for a total award of $540,000. EPPs believe these individuals are entitled to this award because, in addition to engaging in the activities of the first group, these individuals also appeared for a deposition in conjunction with these cases. See Joint Decl. at ¶ 31 & Figure 2B. A specific chart outlining the exact contribution of each Class Representative for whom an incentive awarded is requested is available at Appendix C. Class Representative will receive only one award for participation as a Class Representative on behalf of EPPs despite the fact that most participated and provided discovery in the dozens of separate cases that comprise this MDL. See Joint Decl. at ¶ 33. Plaintiffs who were dismissed from the case, all of whom were dismissed without prejudice, are not requested to receive any award. Id.

The requested awards are reasonable in light of the contribution of each Class Representative and are commensurate with the time and resources expended by each Class Representative to facilitate and further this historic litigation. The award amounts are also commensurate with awards previously approved in this jurisdiction, including in Shane and in In re CMS Energy ERISA Litig.

All Class Representatives selected as potential recipients of incentive awards provided important and indispensable services to the settlement class, including by searching their personal records to locate documents responsive to discovery requests and in many cases preparing and verifying sworn interrogatory responses. Moreover, with respect to the Class Representatives in the higher-award group, these individuals testified via depositions, which required them to give up substantial time from their lives (many depositions lasted in excess of four hours) and in some cases to travel. The $5,000 award for Class Representatives who participated in discovery but did not testify and the $10,000 award for Class Representatives who did testify are identical to the awards recently approved in Shane, which stratified the individual awards based on the same distinction. Case No. 2:10-cv-14360-DPH-MKM, ECF No. 364 at p. 27. Moreover, other plaintiff groups in the Auto Parts litigation have previously requested incentive awards for Class Representatives in higher amounts. Interim Co-Lead Counsel for the Auto Dealers' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Litigation Expenses, and Service Awards, Wire Harness Dealership Actions, 2:12-cv-00102-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 379 (requesting incentive awards of $50,000 each to dealership class representatives based on their discovery burden). And this Court has three times approved Auto Dealer Plaintiffs' requests to set aside a portion of the settlement funds for incentive awards. Order on Auto Dealers' Motion to Set Aside Funds for Future Requests for Class Representative Service Awards, No. 2:12-cv-00102-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 524 (Nov. 29, 2016) (granting approval for ADPs to deduct 1.5% in set aside for future potential payment of service awards); Order Regarding Auto Dealers' Motion to Set Aside Funds From Round Three Settlements For Future Requests For Class Representative Service Awards, No. 2:12-cv-00102-MOB-MKM, ECF No. 567 (Nov. 5, 2018) (granting approval for ADPs to deduct 1% ($1,121,814.00) in set aside for future potential payment of service awards).

The awards requested here are in line with if not less than the awards addressed in these prior cases. They also total only $565,000, and represent only 0.3% of the Round 4 Settlement Funds. Joint Decl. at ¶ 34. EPPs request this amount to be paid from each of the Round 4 Settlement Funds on a pro rata basis as noted in Appendix D. Id. at ¶ 36.

II. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above EPPs respectfully request that the Court grant their motion and award the requested attorneys' fees and reimbursement of certain litigation costs and expenses.

ORDER

Having reviewed Plaintiffs' Motion for Attorneys' Fees, Costs and Class Representative Service Awards (Doc. No. 504), which is not opposed, Plaintiffs' supporting memorandum of law and declarations as well as the entire record in this case, the Court finds as follows:

1. The resolution of this case has created a common benefit fund for the class, so it is appropriate to assess attorney's fess against the fund. Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980).

2. Class Counsel's requested fee award is fair and reasonable under the percentage-of-the-fund approach. This is the preferred method where, as here, "a substantial common fund has been established for the benefit of class members through the efforts of class counsel." In re Se. Milk Antitrust Litig., No. 07-208, 2013 WL 2155387, at *2 (E.D. Tenn. May 17, 2013). While the requested fee of one-third of the fund is very significant, it "is certainly within the range often awarded in common fund cases, both nationwide and in the Sixth Circuit," and is appropriate given the exceptional result Class Counsel achieved notwithstanding substantial risk. Id. at *3.

3. The requested fee meets all of the factors the Sixth Circuit articulated in Ramey v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc., 508 F.2d 1188, 1196 (6th Cir. 1974), specifically:

a. the non-reversionary recovery of $120 million, which represents half of Plaintiffs' estimated Class-wide damages, is an excellent outcome for the Class, especially relative to the norm in indirect purchaser pharmaceutical cases, see, e.g., In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 231 F.R.D. 52, 74 (D. Mass. 2005) ($75 million settlement was 26% of damages estimate); In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 212 F.R.D. 231, 258 (D. Del. 2002) ($44.5 million settlement was 33% of maximum damages);

b. society has a strong interest in compensating Class Counsel for the risks and complex issues posed by this case, thereby encouraging others to bring similar litigation in the future;

c. fees and reimbursement of costs in this case were entirely contingent upon success, creating a risk of under-compensation in the absence of settlement or victory at trial, see Lonardo v. Travelers Indem. Co., 706 F. Supp. 2d 766, 795 (N.D. Ohio 2010);

d. Class Counsel devoted tens of thousands of hours to this case and the time-value of their services was substantial;

e. this case involved highly complex drug distribution channels and novel theories of harm and liability, requiring Class Counsel to overcome "a multitude of difficult issues in the areas of antitrust law, patent law, and the laws governing pharmaceutical drugs[,]" In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 533 (E.D. Mich. 2003); and

f. Class Counsel, who are among the most experienced class action and antitrust practitioners, displayed superior skill and commitment throughout the litigation.

4. The Court has confirmed the reasonableness of Class Counsel's fee request by conducting a lodestar cross-check. This involves multiplying reasonable rates by reasonable hours. Gascho v. Global Fitness Holdings, LLC, 822 F.3d 269, 279 (6th Cir. 2016). The "sum may then be increased by a 'multiplier' to account for the costs and risks involved in the litigation, as well as the complexities of the case and the size of the recovery." In re Sulzer Hip Prosthesis & Knee Prosthesis Liab. Litig., 268 F. Supp. 2d 907, 922 (N.D. Ohio 2003). The Court finds that Class Counsel's reasonable lodestar was $12,838,694.00 based on Counsel's hourly billing rates for the period from the inception of the case until February 25, 2020, and that an award of $40 million yields a multiplier on a one-third fee of 3.12. This multiplier falls within an acceptable range. See, e.g., Cardizem, 218 F.R.D. at 533 (noting that direct purchaser class plaintiffs received a fee award that equated to a lodestar multiplier of 3.7); In re Cardinal Health Inc. Sec. Litigs., 528 F. Supp. 2d 752, 768 (S.D. Ohio 2007) (awarding a multiplier of 6.0 and noting that typical multipliers range from 1.3 to 4.5). The use of current (2020) rates is appropriate to "compensate for the delay in payment during the pendency of the litigation." In re UnumProvident Corp. Deriv. Litig., No. 02-386, 2010 WL 289179, at *9 (E.D. Tenn. Jan. 20, 2010).

5. Class Counsel reasonably incurred a total of $2,269,268.79 in litigation expenses for which Class Counsel seek reimbursement in this case. Class Counsel "is entitled to reimbursement of all reasonable out-of-pocket litigation expenses and costs in the prosecution of claims and settlement, including expenses incurred in connection with document production, consulting with experts and consultants, travel and other litigation-related expenses."

6. The requested service awards of $200,000.00 each for Class Representatives, the named Plaintiffs, are justified by the time and resources both invested into supervising and prosecuting this case. The service awards are also justified as an economic incentive to others to bring antitrust litigation even though their claims may not be sizable.

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' Motion for Attorney Fees, Costs and Class Representative Service Awards (Doc. No. 504) is GRANTED, and the Court concludes that:

1. Class Counsel are awarded attorneys' fees of $40,000,000 (one-third of the $120,000,000 Settlement Fund), together with a proportional share of interest earned on the Settlement Fund. Should Defendant Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc. fail to make the Second Payment contemplated by Paragraph D.11 of the Settlement Agreement, the fee award shall be reduced proportionally with the reduction in the Settlement Fund.

2. Class Counsel are awarded reimbursement of their litigation expenses in the amount of $2,269,268.79.

3. Class Representatives, the named Plaintiffs, are granted service awards of $200,000.00 each.

4. The attorneys' fees awarded, including any interest, reimbursement of litigation costs and expenses, and service awards shall be paid from the Settlement Fund.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

I. INTRODUCTION

Class Counsel and plaintiffs respectfully move the Court to award Class Counsel attorneys' fees of one-third of the common fund ($40 million), with any accrued interest thereon, and reimbursement expenses of $2,269,268.79; and to award Nashville General Hospital and DC 37 $200,000 each for representing the Class and investing hundreds of hours of their employees' time in prosecuting this action. These are significant numbers. They are justified by the result in this case—and the law.

First, the requested fee passes with flying colors all of the factors articulated by the Sixth Circuit in Ramey v. Cincinnati Enquirer, Inc.[1] It compensates an extraordinary result: the second largest class recovery ever in an indirect purchaser pharmaceutical case. Furthermore, society has a major interest in promoting cases of this sort, which seek to both redress and deter antitrust violations in the crucial market for prescription pharmaceuticals. Counsel invested tens of thousands of hours of time and millions of dollars of cash completely on contingency, with the risk of total loss. They drove the case past setback after setback to an ultimate victory for the Class. In antitrust class actions courts regularly award a one-third fee for less impressive results on less risky claims. While such a fee is at the high end of the spectrum, this case supports it.

Second, should the Court elect the optional lodestar cross-check, the effort in this case validates the requested fee. Counsel put in a total of 26,143.5 hours totaling $12,838,694 in attorney time. This implies a "multiplier" on a one-third fee of 3.12, which falls within the regularly accepted range (in the Sixth Circuit and elsewhere) of 1.01 to 4.0. The above-average multiplier simply reflects that Class Counsel litigated this case to the eve of trial with tremendous efficiency compared to other, similar cases.

Third, the requested expense reimbursement of $2,269,268.79 is entirely reasonable. The bulk of it—more than $1,650,000—consists of costs for retaining the six experts who supported class certification and who were poised to testify at trial when the case settled.

Fourth, the requested service awards to Nashville General and DC 37 ($200,000 each) are justified by the same factors as the proposed fee. Nashville General and DC 37 took up this fight not for service awards, but because the high cost of prescription drugs is an existential threat to both of them. That said, just as antitrust enforcement depends on counsel being willing to make enormous investments on a contingent basis, it also depends on encouraging victims to accept the burden of representing a much larger class, and compensating them when they do. And, both DC 37 and Nashville General invested significant time and resources in supervising and prosecuting this action—a service award to each of them is no mere "bounty."

As discussed in the motion to direct notice to the class, America, unlike other countries, has chosen to rely mainly on private enforcement to enforce the rules of the market, both to compensate victims and deter future misconduct. Private enforcers—private plaintiffs and their attorneys—do not depend on a budget competing with other priorities for taxpayer dollars; they do not care who gave how much to someone's political campaign; and, given the right incentives, they are willing and able to take on the biggest offenders and the most egregious violations of the law. Thus, while the Justice Department's Antitrust Division has recovered billions in civil penalties for the Treasury, the deterrent value of private enforcement dwarfs that work by more than a factor of four—and represents, almost always, the only compensation for victims.[2] Indeed, in the early 1980s several economists set out to show the effect of increased

DOJ enforcement on price-fixing in the bread industry: what they found instead was that that it was the development of the private antitrust class action lawsuit that deterred violations.[3]

If the antitrust laws depend on the engine of private class actions, the expectation that counsel will receive a percentage of what they recover for the class is the fuel powering that engine. The hope of sharing the reward motivates lawyers to bring the hardest cases and prosecute them to the last dollar available. Thus, under the correct circumstances courts nationwide do not hesitate to award fees of a third of the recovery generated. The result in this case and the effort and risk required to generate it justify such an amount here.

II. BACKGROUND

A. The Pleadings

In 2015, Nashville General solicited competitive bids to represent the hospital against alleged antitrust violators. As Nashville General's General Counsel explains, the safety-net hospital did so to fight back against the exploding costs for critical, life-saving drugs.[4] That process resulted in the retention of Lieff Cabraser. Lieff Cabraser agreed to work only on contingency and advance all costs associated with any litigation.

As the Court learned at the hearings, enoxaparin is a staple drug for hospitals, including Nashville General. Following revelations of anticompetitive conduct by the defendants, this case was filed in October 2015, with Nashville General as the sole plaintiff, asserting claims under the federal Sherman Act. The initial complaint overcame serious challenges on the pleadings, including arguments that Defendants' conduct was immune from suit under the Noerr-

Pennington doctrine and that the case did not belong in Nashville. However, Nashville General's damages claims were dismissed for lack of standing. Plaintiffs re-pled the case as an indirect purchaser action under the laws of 31 jurisdictions, adding DC 37 as a plaintiff. Defendants then challenged the Plaintiffs' ability to represent a class asserting claims under the various state laws, on both standing and personal jurisdiction grounds. They also moved to dismiss the injunctive relief claim. Class Counsel again largely overcame those challenges, losing only the injunctive relief and Alabama claims in December 2018. Dkt. 254. While the pleadings were resolved, Class Counsel also dedicated significant time and resources to class certification briefing, discovery and expert work. Dkts. 270 & 271.

B. Discovery

Beginning in January 2019, the parties launched into concentrated merits discovery on a compressed time schedule: Plaintiffs negotiated with Defendants for production of relevant documents from a total of 32 current and former employees, and served six third-party document subpoenas to the United States Pharmacopeia, distributors, and other enoxaparin manufacturers.[5] In total, Defendants and third parties produced over half a million documents (more than 2.6 million pages) to Plaintiffs. Class Counsel took a total of ten fact witness depositions of Defendants and third parties between May and October 2019. In addition to the documents, Class Counsel also analyzed more than 50 deposition transcripts from earlier related actions, and two weeks of testimony from the patent trial. At the same time, Class Counsel and Plaintiffs responded to voluminous discovery from Defendants addressing every aspect of their operations related to enoxaparin (and more), including a total of eleven depositions. Class Counsel also brought five discovery motions (and opposed several by Defendants), winning nearly every one.

[5] Glackin Decl. ¶ 45.

C. Class Certification

The Court heard Plaintiffs' first motion to certify the class on May 13 and 14, 2019. Defendants vigorously opposed class certification, asserting, inter alia, that the class was not ascertainable, Plaintiffs did not have standing to represent a single class of purchasers under the laws of 30 jurisdictions, Plaintiffs could not prove injury or pass-through, and the Class was riven with conflicts. At the outset of the second day of testimony, Plaintiffs proposed a change to the class definition in order to ameliorate Defendants' concerns about ascertainability; in response, the Court concluded the hearing and denied the motion to certify the class.

Plaintiffs moved to amend the class definition one week later, and, eleven days after that motion was granted, on June 18, 2019, Plaintiffs re-moved to certify the class (Dkt. 349). The motion again faced stiff opposition from Defendants, who repeated their arguments on standing, pass-through and injury, and conflicts. Defendants also submitted a brand-new 52-page supplemental expert report that raised new challenges with respect to injury; in particular, claiming that Nashville General was not injured by Defendants' conduct. Class Counsel and their expert, Dr. Lamb, responded to these new opinions, and Defendants' legal arguments based on them, in just 72 hours over July 4th.

One week later, on July 12, 2019, Class Counsel presented testimony from Dr. Lamb and Nashville General's billing manager in support of the class certification motion. On cross examination of Defendants' expert Dr. Cremieux, Class Counsel elicited a "fatal admission" undermining Dr. Cremieux's opinion that Nashville General had not been injured, which the Court observed precipitated "a significant negative change in Dr. Cremieux's demeanor."[6] This admission of "significant error" ultimately helped the Court to conclude that Dr. Cremieux was [6] Dkt. 426 at 29.

"not credible" and to "ascribe little, if any, weight" to his opinions.[7] Closing argument briefs followed. On September 20, 2019, the Court certified the Class.[8]

D. Summary Judgment

While the Court considered class certification, Class Counsel also exchanged 26 merits expert reports with Defendants between May and July, and took and defended a total of thirteen expert depositions.[9] On September 20, 2019, Plaintiffs also opposed Defendants' summary judgment motion. In total, between January 12, 2019 and when the Class was certified on September 20, 2019, Lieff Cabraser attorneys dedicated 10,812.8 hours to the case, over 8% of all of Lieff Cabraser's attorney time during that same time period.[10]

E. Rule 23(f) Petition and Trial Preparation

Even with the Class certified, Class Counsel faced additional challenges as they prepared for trial. In the midst of pre-trial preparation, Defendants filed a Rule 23(f) petition with the Sixth Circuit and moved the Court to stay the proceedings. When this Court denied Defendants' motion to stay, Defendants made an emergency motion to the Sixth Circuit. In total, Class Counsel filed three briefs to the Sixth Circuit totaling 63 pages in a 17-day span to ensure the Class's claims would go to trial on January 7, 2020.

F. Settlement

In the midst of pre-trial exchanges, the parties mediated the case with the Honorable Edward Infante (Ret.) of JAMS on November 13, 2019. That night, the parties reached a settlement to resolve the litigation for cash payments by Defendants totaling $120 million. The settlement agreements were signed December 10, 2019, after nearly a month of intense negotiation of specific terms.[11] The Court preliminarily approved the settlement and directed notice to the class on January 3, 2020 (Dkt. 388, as amended Dkt. 492).

G. Nashville General and DC 37's Role in the Case

Both Plaintiffs were actively involved in the litigation, and undertook significant burden to comply with their duties as Class Representatives.[12] During discovery, both Plaintiffs searched for and produced large volumes of documents and data, and representatives and lay witnesses were deposed eleven separate times. Nashville General responded to 54 requests for production of documents and 18 interrogatories. The hospital searched for and produced a total of 14,071 documents (89,248 pages) as well as purchase and payment data from 2010 through 2018. DC 37 responded to 42 requests for production and 11 interrogatories, as well as searched for and produced 2,601 documents (24,727 pages). DC 37 also produced complete reimbursement data reflecting purchases of enoxaparin and Lovenox for the period 2011 through 2016. Representatives from Plaintiffs attended multiple hearings, gave live testimony, and played a critical role in the mediation. Nashville General employees spent (conservatively) hundreds of hours, and DC 37 invested 224.50 hours supporting the case.

III. ARGUMENT

A. The Requested Fees Are Reasonable.

When "awarding attorney's fees in a class action, a court must make sure that counsel is fairly compensated for the amount of work done as well as for the results achieved."[13] The well-established common benefit doctrine embodies the principle "that persons who obtain the benefit of a lawsuit without contributing to its costs are unjustly enriched at the successful litigants' expense."[14] Jurisdiction "over the fund involved in the litigation allows a court to prevent this inequity by assessing attorney's fees against the entire fund, thus spreading fees proportionally among those benefitted by the suit."[15]

Courts in this Circuit consider the "Ramey factors" to determine fair compensation: (a) the value of the benefits to the class; (b) society's stake in rewarding attorneys who produce such benefits to maintain an incentive to others; (c) whether the attorneys worked on a contingent fee basis; (d) the value of the services on an hourly basis; (e) the complexity of the litigation; and (f) the professional skill and standing of counsel.[16] None of the Ramey factors is dispositive, and this Court "enjoys wide discretion in assessing the[ir] weight and applicability."[17]

An expert in class actions and fees, Professor Brian T. Fitzpatrick of Vanderbilt Law School submits a declaration in support of Class Counsel's fee request. In 2010, Professor Fitzpatrick authored a comprehensive empirical examination of federal class action settlements and attorneys' fees requests entitled An Empirical Study of Class Action Settlements and Their Fee Awards, 7 J. Empirical L. Stud. 811 (2010) ("Fitzpatrick Study"). Professor Fitzpatrick concludes the requested fee is reasonable in light of other awards nationwide and the need to foster proper incentives in class litigation.[18] Sixth Circuit case law confirms this conclusion.

1. Precedent Supports Fees of One-Third of the Fund.

Courts in the Sixth Circuit have discretion to choose between the lodestar or percentage-of-the-fund approach.[19] Where, as here, "a substantial common fund has been established for the benefit of class members," the "percentage-of-the-fund method is the more appropriate method."[20] The percentage is not only "easy to calculate,"[21] but also "directly aligns the interests of the class and its counsel[,] incentivizes lawyers to maximize the Class recovery, but in an efficient manner,"[22] and "is consistent with the private marketplace where contingent fee attorneys are routinely compensated on a percentage of recovery method."[23] Professor Fitzpatrick agrees.[24] The lodestar method, by contrast, "is difficult to apply, time-consuming to administer, inconsistent in result, and capable of manipulation, and creates inherent incentive[s] to prolong the litigation."[25] As a result, and under the influence of the conservative law-and-economics movement, it has largely been rejected in the modern era.[26] The Fitzpatrick Study revealed that the lodestar method is used only on a small percentage of cases, usually where the settlement calls for substantial non-monetary relief or fee-shifting (neither present here).[27]

The requested fee of one-third of the fund is appropriate in light of the excellent result achieved through perseverance in the face of great risk, and "one third of the settlement fund . . . is certainly within the range often awarded in common fund cases, both nationwide and in the Sixth Circuit."[28] A one-third fee has been awarded in countless antitrust cases, including:[29]

Indeed, the Fitzpatrick Study revealed that nearly two-thirds of awards nationwide fall between 25 and 35%.[30] And, forty percent of the awards in the Sixth Circuit landed between 30 and 35%[31]; the most populous segment.

Here, the risk, result, and effort present in this case more than justify a fee in the upper segment.

It is true that larger settlements tend on average to result in lower fee percentages; the Fitzpatrick Study found that the average fee percentage for settlements ranging from $100 million to $250 million was less than 20%.[32] Some courts—but not the Sixth Circuit—have even suggested that as recoveries go up fees should go down.[33] That thinking misses the mark. First, on average fee percentages go down as settlements go up because the larger the settlement the less likely it is that a high-percentage fee will pass the lodestar cross-check. Imagine the prototypical securities stock-drop case that resolves on the pleadings for a nine-figure amount; counsel's work at that stage simply will not support a high percentage fee. As discussed below, that is not the case here. Second, as Judge Greer recognized in Milk, reducing the fee percentage as the fund increases creates the wrong incentives, encouraging lawyers to settle early "when the returns to effort are highest" rather than "investing additional time and maximizing plaintiffs' recovery."[34] In other words, it perversely reduces the award for prosecuting the case to the brink of trial to maximize recovery, as Class Counsel did here. Finally, as Judge Greer also explained, "it is not the size of the request, although a very large number, that is necessarily relevant but the size of the award when compared to the size of the risk taken."[35] Here, the risk could not have been greater, and Class Counsel poured enormous time and resources into this case at a high risk of total loss, and to the exclusion of other matters and opportunities,[36] to achieve this outstanding result.

2. Every Ramey Factor Supports the Requested Fee.

The result. First, Class Counsel's efforts resulted in an all-cash, non-reversionary recovery of $120 million. This recovery is excellent by any measure, but it stands apart when compared to other pharmaceutical indirect purchaser cases, both in size and as a portion of total estimated damages. Research reveals that the $120 million recovered in this case represents the second largest settlement in a pharmaceutical indirect purchaser action ever. The biggest was Cipro—another case filed and led by Lieff Cabraser.[37] In fact, most settle for less than $100 million.[38] Further, the recovery represents half of Plaintiffs' estimated Class wide damages of $234 million (and 13 times Defendants' expert's damages figure of $9 million). In indirect purchaser pharmaceutical cases lesser recoveries are the norm.[39]

[33] For example, in one 2015 antitrust case, a district court awarded a fee of 20% in part on this reasoning. See In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., 135 F. Supp. 3d 679, 689-94 (N.D. Ohio 2015). But there, the counsel had already received "substantial fee awards from prior settlements" in the same litigation and the court had serious concerns that counsel's lodestar was inflated, "doubt[ing] that all of that time was reasonably necessary to advance this case." Id. at 689, 693.

Society's interest. Second, "the Court must ensure that Class Counsel is fairly compensated in order to facilitate the goal of class actions—i.e., to provide a vehicle for collective action to pursue redress for tortious conduct that is not feasible for an individual litigant to pursue."[40] This case embodies society's interest in creating the incentives for proper enforcement of the law: it required a single law firm to commit more than $12.8 million in time and more than $2.2 million in out-of-pocket costs pursuing complex claims against deep-pocketed corporations with no guarantee of any recovery at all. Class Counsel's efforts, investment, and risk-taking resulted in compensation for the Class, punishment for the Defendants, and the deterrence of other potential violators. "[F]ailing to fully compensate class counsel for the excellent work done and the various substantial risks taken would undermine society's interest in the private litigation of antitrust cases."[41]

Contingency. Third, Lieff Cabraser and Spragens Law took this case on contingency, litigating it for more than four years at the risk of total loss of the value of their time and investment in out-of-pocket costs.[42]

Investment. Fourth, in litigating this case over four-plus years, Class Counsel spent 26,143.5 hours and $12,838,694.00 in lodestar.[43] At times, Lieff Cabraser was devoting over 8% of its overall attorney resources to this case, just one of several hundred of the firm's active matters.[44] It is indisputable that the time-value of the services rendered was substantial.

Risk. Fifth, "[a]ntitrust class actions are inherently complex. The legal and factual issues are complicated and highly uncertain in outcome."[45] As with any indirect purchaser case, Plaintiffs and Class Counsel took on the "immensely difficult"[46] challenge of proving pass-through, and "this extraordinarily complex case raised a multitude of difficult issues in the areas of antitrust law, patent law, and the laws governing pharmaceutical drugs."[47]

This case in particular presented more complexity—and more risk—than even most pharmaceutical indirect purchaser cases. In Defendants' own words, "[t]his case is different from all other pharmaceutical cases" because while "[m]ost pharmaceutical cases deal with simple, oral-prescription drugs distributed by chain pharmacies in the 'retail' channel," "enoxaparin distribution is far more complex and includes distribution in multiple channels."[48] As Defendants put it: "this case is the first of its kind."[49] Additionally, Defendants again correctly pointed out that while "most delayed-entry cases concern delay of a first generic product, which makes some sense from an antitrust perspective because the brand manufacturer controls 100% of the molecule before generic entry," this case concerned "delay of a second—or more accurately, third—generic."[50] This theory of harm was, like the Class itself, unprecedented. And the proposed theory of liability—manipulation of a standard-setting organization to unlawfully exclude a competitor—is, at best, a highly unusual claim in the pharmaceutical context.[51] Further, the facts presented obvious questions concerning causation and damages, in particular given that Amphastar was excluded from the market for just 117 days, requiring plaintiffs to advance and support the proposition that this delay had long-term effects in the market (as it did).

In addition to these risks, the case presented complex issues at every turn—as the thirty-one Rule 26 expert disclosures illustrate.[52] In total, the parties marshalled 14 expert witnesses—six for Plaintiffs and eight for Defendants—to address issues such as hospital and insurer economics and damages, substitutability of other drugs, patent infringement, FDA and USP rules and procedures, and hospital billing practices. And these challenges to class certification and liability came only after years of litigation on the pleadings over issues such as the applicability of Noerr-Pennington immunity, statutes of limitation, and personal jurisdiction.[53]

The Quality of Counsel. Sixth, as this Court has already twice affirmed in appointing interim class counsel (Dkt. 90) and in certifying the Class (Dkt. 426), Class Counsel are among the most experienced, committed and successful practitioners in class actions and antitrust cases in the nation.[54] The firm, founded in 1972 with offices in San Francisco, New York, and Nashville, is known for taking on the most challenging cases on behalf of victims, regardless of the risks and ultimate rewards. The Glackin Declaration details several of Lieff Cabraser's most significant success stories in antitrust, including several that, like this case, the firm took to the verge of—and in some instances through—trial. In In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litigation[55], Lieff Cabraser served as co-lead counsel and recovered a total of $435 million on behalf of employees of several technology firms under a novel theory of antitrust liability in the employment context. In In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation[56], the firm obtained a total of $470 million in recovery for the class, including a plaintiff's jury verdict against one defendant. In the pharmaceutical space, Lieff Cabraser was co-lead counsel in In re Cipro,[57] which recovered $399 million for indirect generic drug purchasers, including consumers and payors. The firm's roots in Nashville also run deep: In the 1990s, Lieff Cabraser represented a certified class of over 800 pregnant women and their children who were who were intentionally fed radioactive iron isotopes without consent while receiving prenatal care at the Vanderbilt University hospital. Lieff Cabraser recovered $10.2 million for the victims along with a formal apology from Vanderbilt read to them in open court.[58] The Vanderbilt case, and others like it—such as Lieff Cabraser's pro bono work recovering $1.25 billion for Holocaust survivors and their families—reflect the firm's commitment to broadly serve victims everywhere.

3. A Lodestar Cross-Check Confirms the Requested Fees.

The Sixth Circuit has stated that when the Court calculates a fee using one of the two permissible options, a cross-check using the other method is "optional."[59] The lodestar calculation is simple: reasonable rates multiplied by reasonable hours.[60] The "sum may then be increased by a 'multiplier' to account for the costs and risks involved in the litigation, as well as the complexities of the case and the size of the recovery."[61] The purpose of a multiplier is "to account for the risk an attorney assumes in undertaking a case, the quality of the attorney's work product, and the public benefit achieved."[62] It is appropriate to use current (2020) rates to "compensate for the delay in payment during the pendency of the litigation."[63] Given counsel's lodestar of $12,838,694.00, the cross-check implies a multiplier of 3.12, which is within the routinely accepted range of 1.0 to 4.0 (higher multipliers are also sometimes approved).

a. Class Counsel's Hourly Rates Are Reasonable.

Counsel's attorney billing rates range from $415 to $1,100 and are set forth in the Glackin Declaration, along with descriptions of the primary timekeepers' qualifications and contributions.[64]

Typically, the lodestar calculation looks to "the prevailing market rate, defined as the rate that lawyers of comparable skill and experience can reasonably expect to command within the venue of the court of record."[65] Counsel's rates meet that criterion. Recent class actions in this District have awarded percentage-based fees where the lodestar cross-check reflected rates up to $1,050 an hour for non-local firms[66] and up to $770 per hour for Nashville-based firms.[67] Indeed, this Court recently approved a rate of $1,060 per hour for a non-local firm.[68] Here, Mr. Glackin and Ms. Benson, the partners in charge of the day-to-day efforts in this case from the very beginning, have billing rates of $800 and $585, respectively.[69] 99.6% of the attorney time in the matter was at $800 (Mr. Glackin's rate) or below.[70] As another metric, Class Counsel's blended rate is only $491, below the blended rates of $572 and $659 submitted on cross-check to support percentage-based fees in this District,[71] and substantially below the $686 blended rate this Court approved in Cassell.[72]

Counsel's lodestar can therefore be fully justified as reasonable in comparison to Nashville rates. That said, it would also be appropriate for the Court to look to rates charged for work of this nature nationally.[73] Pharmaceutical antitrust class actions are by definition national in scope and, wherever they are litigated, require the expertise of a relatively small group of specialized practitioners. No firm other than Lieff Cabraser was willing to take the risk of pursuing this matter, which featured both a "national scope" and "highly-specialized and talented opposing counsel," circumstances in which courts have found "national hourly rates" appropriate.[74] Defendants also engaged out-of-town antitrust specialists, further validating the use of national rates.[75] Nationally, Lieff Cabraser's rates have been approved in scores and scores of cases, including many antitrust cases, and by courts in this Circuit.[76]

b. Class Counsel Worked Efficiently.

When the lodestar is employed as the primary method of calculating fees, the proponent must provide documentation "of sufficient detail and probative value to enable to court to determine with a high degree of certainty that such hours were actually and reasonably expended in the prosecution of the litigation," though "counsel need not record in great detail each minute he or she spent on an item."[77] A lodestar cross-check is simpler: "Unlike the situation when the Court employs the lodestar method in full, the hours documented by counsel need not be exhaustively scrutinized[.]"[78]

The Glackin Declaration contains summary data by timekeeper printed from Lieff Cabraser's accounting system, as well as a summary of the time invested by Spragens Law.[79] After careful, line-by-line audit that removed any time that was even arguably unnecessary, Class Counsel submit 26,143.5 hours of time as the basis for a cross-check. That time was reasonable. As detailed above and in the Glackin Declaration, Class Counsel, working without any co-counsel assistance, brought this case through class certification and summary judgment and to the eve of trial. In total, 73 individuals from a single firm contributed over 26,000 hours through February 25, 2020 to an effort that resulted in $120 million for the Class. To validate the reasonableness and efficiency of this massive effort, the Court need look no further than similar cases with less remarkable results. For example, in In re Lidoderm,[80] 23 different law firms representing end-payors logged over 51,000 hours of work and over $25 million in lodestar for a $105 million cash fund. In In re Aggrenox, 25 law firms logged over 40,000 hours representing end-payors to reach a $54 million settlement.[81]

c. The Cross-Check Results in a Reasonable Multiplier of 3.12.

Here, the requested fee of $40 million and lodestar of $12,838,694.00 result in a multiplier of 3.12. Multipliers of 1.01-4.0 are routinely awarded in common fund cases, including in the Sixth Circuit.[82] As Judge Greer of the Eastern District of Tennessee recently explained in awarding a one-third fee on a $159 million settlement fund in an antitrust case, the resulting "lodestar multiplier of 1.90" was "clearly within, but in the bottom half of, the range of typical lodestar multipliers."[83] Similarly, Judge Collier in Skelaxin observed that "[m]ultipliers much higher than the one requested here [2.1-2.5] are also commonplace in complex pharmaceutical antitrust class actions."[84] Furthermore, as Professor Fitzpatrick explains, larger settlements tend to result in larger multipliers: his empirical study shows that settlements of $100-$250 million had an average multiplier of 3.47 with a median of 2.20.[85] The multiplier here is more than reasonable, especially in light of the risks associated with this case detailed above.

B. The Requested Expenses Are Supported and Reasonable.

It is well-established that "[e]xpense awards are customary when litigants have created common settlement fund for the benefits of a class."[86] Class Counsel "is entitled to reimbursement of all reasonable out-of-pocket litigation expenses and costs in the prosecution of claims and settlement, including expenses incurred in connection with document production, consulting with experts and consultants, travel and other litigation-related expenses."[87]

Here, Class Counsel request reimbursement for $2,269,268.79 of costs paid out-of-pocket for the benefit of the Class. These costs include (1) filing fees; (2) copying, mailing, and serving documents; (3) computer research; (4) travel; (5) notice to the certified the ligation class; and (6) (the largest component) expert fees.[88] These "categories of expenses . . . are the type routinely charged to . . . hourly fee-paying clients and thus should be reimbursed out of the settlement fund."[89] Class Counsel spent more than $1,650,000 retaining experts, one of whom, Dr. Lamb, prepared a total of five reports in the case and testified on the stand twice. And, at 1.89% of the Settlement Fund, the reimbursement request is significantly less than the average costs award,

C. The Court Should Allow Service Awards of $200,000 for Each Plaintiff.

Courts regularly award service awards "to compensate class representatives for their service to the class and simultaneously serve to incentivize them to perform this function."[92] Service awards help motivate class representatives to pursue relief on behalf of the class even though their own individual recoveries may be too small to justify the investment. Indeed, a core "function[] of the class action is to incentivize private parties to enforce certain laws such that the government is not required to undertake all law enforcement alone."[93] Thus, "courts have stressed that incentive awards are efficacious ways of encouraging members of a class to become class representatives"[94] and "recognize their willingness to act as a private attorney general."[95] And "because a named plaintiff is an essential ingredient of any class action, an incentive award is appropriate if it is necessary to induce an individual to participate in the suit."[96]

Here, but for the service of the Class Representatives, the misconduct would have gone unpunished (other than the smaller Amphastar settlement), future antitrust violations undeterred, and the Class uncompensated.[97] Furthermore, substantial service awards are entirely fair and appropriate, given that some absent class members (large insurers and hospital systems) have hundreds of millions of dollars in claims and stand to recoup millions from the fund at no cost or effort whatsoever. These recoveries will dwarf those of Nashville General and DC 37.[98]

The Sixth Circuit has neither approved nor disapproved service awards as a general matter,[99] but has recognized that "there may be circumstances where incentive awards are appropriate."[100] The court has also articulated a "sensibl[e] fear that incentive awards may lead named plaintiffs to expect a bounty for bringing suit or to compromise the interest of the class for personal gain,"[101] and therefore requires that representatives demonstrate that the service awards reflect a class representative's "extensive involvement in a class action litigation."[102] Thus, district courts in this Circuit regularly grant incentive awards upon a showing that the representative plaintiff actively committed "time and effort [] pursuing the litigation"[103] and conferred a benefit on the class.

Nashville General and DC 37's extensive contributions to the case are detailed in declarations from Marc Overlock, General Counsel at Nashville General Hospital ("Overlock Declaration") and Audrey Browne, former Associate Administrator at DC 37 ("Browne Declaration").[104] During discovery, Nashville General responded to 54 requests for production, 18 interrogatories, and 229 requests for admission; DC 37 responded to 42 requests for production, 11 interrogatories, and 76 requests for admission. Both Plaintiffs searched for and produced large volumes of documents and data, which required significant time. Representatives and lay witnesses endured eleven separate depositions. In total, seven current and former employees of Nashville General contributed significant time to the litigation effort. Plaintiffs also routinely attended hearings (including both class certification hearings), gave live testimony on crucial issues, and traveled to San Francisco for two days of mediation. Plaintiffs' contributions to the case were particularly critical at class certification, given the Plaintiffs themselves haled from both the retail channel (DC 37) and the non-retail channel (Nashville General).

The requested service awards of $200,000 each for NGH and DC 37 are more than justified by their extraordinary and crucial contributions to this case, and consistent with those awarded in other complex antitrust class actions.[105]

IV. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court award $40 million in attorneys' fees, together with a proportional share of interest earned on the Settlement Fund (subject to proportional reduction in the event Momenta fails to make the Second Payment), $2,269,268.79 in costs, and $200,000 in service awards to each of the two Class Representatives.

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL'S MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES

This matter came for a duly-noticed hearing on November 29, 2022 (the "Fairness Hearing"), upon Plaintiffs' Counsel's Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses ("Fee and Expense Application") in the above-captioned action (the "Action"). The Court has considered the Fee and Expense Application and all supporting and other related materials, including the matters presented at the Fairness Hearing. Due and adequate notice of the settlement agreements between Representative Plaintiffs'[1] and Settling Defendants[2] (the "Settlement Agreements") having been given to the Settlement Class Members, the Fairness Hearing having been held, and the Court having considered all papers filed and proceedings held herein, having found the settlement of the Action to be fair, reasonable and adequate, and otherwise being fully informed in the premises and good cause appearing therefor,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED THAT:

1. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Plaintiffs and Settling Defendants and all Settlement Class Members who have not timely and validly requested exclusion, and subject matter jurisdiction over the Action to approve the Settlement Agreements and all exhibits attached thereto.

2. Notice of the Fee and Expense Application was provided to potential Settlement Class Members in a reasonable manner, and such notice complies with Rule 23(h)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and due process requirements.

3. The Court hereby awards Plaintiffs' Counsel attorneys' fees of $38,864,500.00 (25% of the total Settlement Funds), and litigation expenses of $179,945.33, together with interest for the same time period and at the same rate as earned by the Settlement Funds until paid, which shall be paid out of the Settlement Funds.

4. Plaintiffs' Counsel is hereby authorized to allocate the attorneys' fees among Plaintiffs' Counsel and Goldstein & Russell, P.C., in a manner in which, in Plaintiffs' Counsel's judgment, reflects the contributions of such counsel to the institution, prosecution, appeal and settlement of the Action.

5. In making this award of attorneys' fees and payment of litigation expenses, the Court has considered and found that:

a. the Settlement Agreements with Settling Defendants have created a fund of $155,458,000 in cash that Settling Defendants have paid into escrow pursuant to the terms of the Settlement Agreements;

b. Class Members who or which submit valid Proofs of Claim and Release will benefit from the Settlements reached because of the efforts of Plaintiffs' Counsel;

c. Plaintiffs' Counsel has prosecuted the Action and achieved the settlement with skill, perseverance, and diligent advocacy;

d. The Action involves numerous complex factual and legal issues and was actively litigated and, in the absence of the Settlements, would have involved lengthy proceedings with uncertain resolution of the numerous complex factual and legal issues;

e. Had Plaintiffs' Counsel not achieved the Settlements with Settling Defendants, there would remain a significant risk that Plaintiffs and the Settlement Class may have recovered less or nothing from Settling Defendants;

f. The contingent nature, risks and complexity of the Action favor the fee awarded above;

g. Public policy considerations support the requested fee, as only a small number of firms have the requisite expertise and resources to successfully prosecute cases such as the Action;

h. Notice was disseminated stating that Plaintiffs' Counsel would be moving for attorneys' fees of not more than $51,819,333.33 (which is one-third of the Settlement Funds) and payment of litigation expenses and costs not to exceed $750,000, plus interest; and

i. The amount of attorneys' fees awarded and expenses to be paid from the Settlement Funds are fair and reasonable in view of the applicable legal principles and the particular facts and circumstances of the Action.

6. Without affecting the finality of this Order in any way, this Court hereby retains continuing jurisdiction over the Parties and the Class Members for all matters relating to this Action, including the administration, interpretation, effectuation, or enforcement of this Order.

7. In the event the Settlement Agreements are terminated, or the Effective Date does not occur in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreements, this Order shall be null and void, of no further force or effect, and without prejudice to any of the Parties, and may not be introduced as evidence or used in any actions or proceedings by any Person against the Parties.

8. Pursuant to the Settlement Agreements, the attorneys' fees and expense awards are independent of the Court's consideration of the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of the Settlements and are also independent of the Court's consideration of the Distribution Plan.

9. The attorneys' fees and payment of expenses awarded herein shall be paid to Plaintiffs' Counsel from the Settlement Funds as follows, subject to the terms, conditions, and obligations of the Settlement Agreements which terms, conditions, and obligations are incorporated herein:

a. The award for payment of expenses shall be paid on December 30, 2022;

b. One-third (1/3) of the attorneys' fee award shall be paid on January 20, 2023;

c. One-third (1/3) of the attorneys' fee award shall be paid on July 14, 2023; and

d. One-third (1/3) of the attorneys' fee award shall be paid upon the first distribution of the Settlement Funds to Authorized Claimants, which will occur no later than September 29, 2023.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009-2013,
92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937 (2017)..... 28

Pursuant to the orders preliminarily approving the class action settlements (the "Settlements") in this action (ECF Nos. 509-15)[1] and in accordance with Rule 23(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Plaintiffs' Counsel[2] respectfully submits this memorandum of law in support of its motion for an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $38,864,500, reimbursement of expenses in the amount of $179,945.33, and incentive awards to the three Plaintiffs in the amount of $375,000 from the $155,458,000 common fund created by Plaintiffs' seven settlements with Defendants.[3]

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs' Counsel took six paragraphs from a 2013 press release from the Monetary Authority of Singapore ("MAS") and turned them into $155,458,000 in settlement value for investors who would otherwise have recovered nothing. This feat took six years, required in excess of eighteen thousand hours of attorney time valued at millions of dollars, and could have failed entirely at any time. Indeed, it did fail, in 2019 when the Court dismissed the entire action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction following Defendants' third motion to dismiss. Even Plaintiffs' preexisting settlements with Citi and JPMorgan were lost, as the Court found that it had no jurisdiction to approve them. Plaintiffs' Counsel was left with absolutely nothing to show for its three years of investment in this litigation. But instead of cutting its losses and walking away, Plaintiffs' Counsel took on yet more risk with a highly complex appeal—and won. After defending that victory all the way up to the Supreme Court and making its way back to this Court on remand, Plaintiffs' Counsel was immediately faced with a fourth motion to dismiss from Defendants. That motion to dismiss, like its predecessors, asserted a multitude of defenses, from failure to state a claim on the merits to lack of personal jurisdiction to lack of subject matter jurisdiction (again). Once more Plaintiffs' Counsel was poised to potentially lose all of the investment it had poured into this case, which by now was considerably larger than it had been in 2019. That Plaintiffs' Counsel was able to negotiate such large settlements from a position of such risk is extraordinary.

For its uncompensated and at-risk efforts over the past six years, Plaintiffs' Counsel requests that the Court award them $38,864,500 million in attorney's fees. Plaintiffs' Counsel's request constitutes a lodestar risk multiplier of 2.57 based on its cumulative lodestar, or a fee award equivalent to 25% of the Settlement Fund. By either measure, Plaintiffs' Counsel's fee request falls comfortably within the norm of what other courts in this District and Circuit routinely award in financial services antitrust class actions. To take just one example, in June 2020, Judge Rakoff granted Plaintiffs' Counsel's full requested fee award in In re GSE Bonds Antitrust Litig. ("GSE"), No. 19-CV-1704 (JSR), 2020 WL 3250593, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. June 16, 2020), following a complete review of Plaintiffs' Counsel's detailed time records. The awarded fee of $77.3 million constituted a lodestar multiplier of 4.09. Id. at *5. Yet in many ways, GSE was a less risky case than this one, with an early-settling ACPERA applicant providing valuable cooperation enabling plaintiffs to cure pleading deficiencies, and with Lowey assisted in the prosecution of the case by a deep bench of well-qualified firms. See GSE, 414 F. Supp. 3d 686, 697 (S.D.N.Y. 2019); GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *4. This Court can feel entirely comfortable that the fees sought here are objectively reasonable and are a fair compensation to Plaintiffs' Counsel.

As this Court itself observed during the May 19, 2022 preliminary approval hearing, "Clearly there is risk and complexity in this case; clearly the costs of continuing litigation are enormous; clearly there's interest in quieting this issue, given the number of banks and their importance in the international banking business; and clearly there's importance in putting behind us this embarrassment of fixing interbank interest rates." May 19, 2022 Hearing Tr. (ECF No. 518) at 35:16-22. While the Court made this comment in the context of considering whether to preliminarily approve the settlements, it tracks the Goldberger factors closely, and is equally applicable to the question of whether to approve Plaintiffs' Counsel's fee request. This was a complex and risky case that required enormous resources to litigate. Compensating Plaintiffs' Counsel adequately for its efforts serves the public policy of incentivizing attorneys to prosecute similar misconduct, and ultimately to deter it. For all these reasons, Plaintiffs' Counsel's fee and expense request, and request for the payment of incentive awards, should be granted.

ARGUMENT

In evaluating whether a fee request is reasonable, the Court should consider "(1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation ...; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations." Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 50 (2d Cir. 2000). Each of these factors here weighs unequivocally in favor of granting the full fee requested.

To orient the Court in navigating this brief: Plaintiffs' Counsel first detail the risks and challenges it faced at each stage of this six-year-long litigation, as well as those it would have faced had the litigation continued (Goldberger factors 2 and 3). It then addresses the quality of representation (factor 4) and public policy considerations (factor 6). The next section of the brief analyzes Plaintiffs Counsel's fee request under both the lodestar method (effectively addressing Goldberger factor 1) and the percentage of the fund method (Goldberger factor 5). Finally, Plaintiffs' Counsel sets forth its requests for reimbursement of expenses and Plaintiffs' request for incentive awards.

PART I: THE GOLDBERGER FACTORS

A. This Complex, Challenging Action Presented Plaintiffs' Counsel with Sky-High Risks.

Risk is at the heart of the Goldberger analysis. See, e.g., Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54 ("We have historically labeled the risk of success as 'perhaps the foremost' factor to be considered in determining whether to award an enhancement."); In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., 991 F. Supp. 2d 437, 440 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) ("Payment Card") ("The most important Goldberger factor is often the case's risk"); In re Bristol–Myers Squibb Sec. Litig., 361 F. Supp. 2d 229, 233 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (the risk of the litigation is the "first, and most important, Goldberger factor"). Working on a contingent fee basis, Plaintiffs' Counsel faced a substantial risk that it would not be compensated for its work or have the litigation expenses it advanced reimbursed. Declaration of Vincent Briganti in Support of (A) Representative Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of Class Action Settlements; and (B) Plaintiffs' Counsel's Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses ("Briganti Decl.") ¶¶ 35-36. That risk stemmed from a number of sources, including the myriad of complex legal issues at play, the difficulty in ascertaining the relevant facts, challenges in modeling for class certification and then ultimately proving at trial class-wide impact and damages, and overcoming the vigorous defenses mounted by Defendants. Id. ¶ 36.

Plaintiffs' Counsel drew on a rich base of relevant experience in investigating and prosecuting this action. It is lead or co-lead counsel in seven different benchmark interest rate manipulation class actions for currencies across the world, and is fast approaching a billion dollars' worth of settlements for plaintiffs and absent class members in these cases.[4] Developing the law in this field, Plaintiffs' Counsel was the first firm to assert claims on behalf of investors in FX forward rate agreements and futures contracts for interbank offered rate ("IBOR") manipulation, materially expanding the scope of investors who may seek compensation for alleged rate manipulation. The expertise that Plaintiffs' Counsel gained litigating these cases (and many other large and complex antitrust cases throughout its fifty-year history) made it possible for Plaintiffs' Counsel to develop this case despite the scant regulatory and public record. But even with all of that knowledge at its disposal, Plaintiffs' Counsel still faced unique challenges at every stage of this six-year-long litigation, from initial investigation through final settlements. Each hurdle cleared was followed by a long line of increasingly higher ones. And as the litigation progressed and required ever more resources, Plaintiffs' Counsel's risk of non-recovery (high from the beginning) only continued to grow. We submit that these risks eminently support Plaintiffs' Counsel's fee request.

i. Case Inception

As this Court has previously recognized, the difficulty and risk involved in piecing together a complaint with little or no regulatory guidance "should be reflected in [counsel's] fee award."

[4] See Laydon v. Mizuho Bank, Ltd., No. 12-cv-3419 (GBD) (S.D.N.Y), and Sonterra Capital Master Fund, Ltd. v. UBS AG, No. 15-cv-5844 (GBD) (S.D.N.Y.) (involving the London Interbank Offered Rate ("LIBOR") for Japanese Yen ("Yen-LIBOR) and the Tokyo Interbank Offered Rate ("Euroyen TIBOR")); Sullivan v. Barclays plc, No. 13-cv-2811 (PKC) (S.D.N.Y.) (involving the Euro Interbank Offered Rate ("Euribor")); Dennis et al. v. JPMorgan Chase & Co. et al., No. 16-cv-06496 (LAK) (S.D.N.Y.) (involving the Australian Bank Bill Swap Rate ("BBSW")); Sonterra Capital Master Fund Ltd., et al. v. Credit Suisse Group AG, et al., No.: 1:15-cv-00871 (SHS) (S.D.N.Y.) (involving Swiss Franc LIBOR); Sonterra Capital Master Fund Ltd., et al. v. Barclays Bank PLC, et al., No. 15-cv-03538 (VSB) (S.D.N.Y.) (involving Sterling LIBOR).

Levy v. Gen. Elec. Cap. Corp., No. 99-cv-10560 (AKH), 2002 WL 1225542, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Jun. 4, 2002). This case was born out of a 17-paragraph[5] press release by the Monetary Authority of Singapore ("MAS") stating that 133 unnamed traders at 20 different financial institutions engaged in "several attempts to inappropriately influence" three financial benchmarks (SIBOR, SOR, and FX) over a four-year period. See Briganti Decl. ¶ 30, Ex. 1. As detailed below, the press release omitted many material facts supporting an alleged four-year conspiracy among the world's largest financial institutions to manipulate three Singapore interbank offered rates. In particular, the release failed to disclose, inter alia:

- Which financial institutions engaged in "attempts to inappropriately influence" which of the three interbank rates, as well as the date(s), frequency and duration of any such attempts. The MAS release left open the possibility that a financial institution may have only attempted to manipulate one rate to the exclusion of the other two.
- Whether the attempts to influence the rates succeeded in warping any of the three rates to non-competitive levels, and if so in what direction and amount. Instead, the MAS release affirmatively states that there was "no conclusive finding that SIBOR, SOR and FX Benchmarks were successfully manipulated," only that traders violated "professional ethics" in attempting to do so.
- Whether any financial institution's attempts to inappropriately influence any of the rates were orchestrated in coordination with another financial institution, and if so the details of any such coordination. MAS imposed interest-free deposits on each financial institution subject to its investigation based on a number of factors, > including "the number of traders within the bank who attempted to inappropriately influence benchmarks, whether traders from other banks were involved, and the number of times these events occurred." The inclusion of the second factor calls into question the existence and scope of any coordination amongst all of the financial institutions subject to MAS's investigation over a four-year period.

In sum, what the MAS press release tells us is that unspecified traders at various banks attempted to manipulate one, two, or all three benchmarks in an unspecified way at an unspecified time over a four-year period; may or may not have succeeded; and may or may not have worked with other unspecified banks in their manipulation attempts.

Beyond the MAS press release, the CFTC listed SIBOR and SOR among the multiple benchmark interest rates that Deutsche Bank, RBS and UBS allegedly manipulated, stating only that the banks engaged in "similar misconduct" for SIBOR and SOR as for the other rates. Briganti Decl. ¶ 32. The U.K.'s Financial Services Authority confirmed that RBS derivatives traders made "at least 34 written requests" to manipulate SIBOR and SOR—again, providing no additional color. Id. Even taken together, these vague findings, in the hands of less experienced counsel, would not appear to be much of a foundation on which to build a major antitrust class action against 19 domestic and multinational banks.

Plaintiffs' Counsel, however, was able to leverage its experience to construct the complaint piece by piece, researching the SIBOR and SOR rate-setting process, the panel membership, the market for SIBOR- and/or SOR-Based Derivatives, and each bank's participation in that market in the United States. Id. ¶¶ 33-34. The SIBOR- and/or SOR-Based Derivatives market in the U.S. bears little resemblance to the well-known (and much larger) market for U.S. Dollar LIBOR (USD LIBOR) and other widely traded U.S.-based financial markets. The difficulty of building a case based on such a thin regulatory record, combined with the relatively small market size (and correspondingly reduced potential damages), meant that no other firm filed a case on behalf of SIBOR- and SOR-based investors.

This fact distinguishes this case from the norm in virtually all other class actions, including GSE, where multiple teams of firms file similar cases and fight an extended battle for leadership. Compare In re GSE Bonds Antitrust Litig., No. 1:19-cv-01704 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (court received four co-lead counsel proposals from 6 different firms); see also, e.g., In re T-Mobile Customer Data Security Breach Litig., No. 4:21-md-03019 (W.D. Mo. 2021) (court received 35 leadership applications comprising 38 firms); In re Foreign Exchange Benchmark Rates Antitrust Litig.; Case No. 13-cv-7789 (S.D.N.Y.) ("FX") (court received three lead counsel applications comprising 7 firms); In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Rsch. Reps. Sec. Litig., No. 02 MDL 1484(JFK), 2007 WL 4526593, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2007) (the filing of "some 140 class-action complaints" following a highly publicized investigation showed that "the prospect of recovery was promising from the outset"). The fact that no other firm filed a complaint here, and that Lowey had no co-counsel (except for Goldstein & Russell who assisted with the appeal to the Second Circuit) with whom to share costs, risks, resources or strategy, weighs heavily in favor of Plaintiffs' Counsel's fee request.

ii. Motions to Dismiss

After the complaint was prepared and filed, Plaintiffs' Counsel's task did not become any easier. This case represented the pinnacle of complexity among antitrust cases, which are generally recognized to be "notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought." GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *4 (quoting Meredith Corp. v. SESAC LLC, 87 F. Supp. 3d 650, 669 (S.D.N.Y. 2015)). At the time Plaintiffs reached a settlement with the final group of Defendants, the parties had been through four full rounds of motion to dismiss briefing, as well as oral arguments on the first three motions, and were about to present oral argument on the fourth motion. Briganti Decl. ¶¶ 38-59. The motions to dismiss alone generated over 4,000 pages spread across 29 briefs, 38 declarations, and 19 supplemental law letters. In between the third and fourth motions, following the Court's dismissal in full of the action, Plaintiffs' Counsel prosecuted—and prevailed on—an appeal to the Second Circuit, and defended that victory all the way through Defendants' petition for a writ of certiorari to the United States Supreme Court.[6]

a. Risks of Alleging a Plausible Conspiracy

Plaintiffs' Counsel had to defend the plausibility of a four-year-long conspiracy among 19 different banks located across the world to manipulate three different rates (USD SIBOR, SGD SIBOR, and SOR) that impacted the prices of different types of over-the-counter[7] SIBOR- and/or SOR-Based Derivatives. See, e.g., GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *4 (citing In re Citigroup Inc. Bond Litig., 988 F. Supp. 2d 371, 379 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (finding that a "class period [being] relatively lengthy and encompass[ing] a significant number of securities issuances" indicated complexity). The alleged manipulation scheme was particularly complex in that it involved manipulations of the rates in different directions at different times to benefit different banks' derivatives positions, as opposed to a simple raising or lowering of rates across the board. Though Plaintiffs' Counsel ultimately succeeded in convincing the Court that the alleged conspiracy was plausible, several other courts in this district had rejected complaints alleging similar multidirectional conspiracies. See, e.g., In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 MD 2262 (NRB), 2016 WL 7378980, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2016); Sonterra Capital Master Fund Ltd. v. Credit Suisse Grp. AG, 277 F. Supp. 3d 521, 55 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) As described above, Plaintiffs also had very little to work with in the way of publicly available facts about which banks did what in furtherance of which conspiracy to manipulate which rate, beyond the few regulatory findings specific to RBS, UBS and Deutsche Bank and the identities of the SIBOR and SOR panel members. This deficiency alone could easily have been fatal to Plaintiffs' complaint. See, e.g., GSE, 396 F. Supp. 3d 354, 363-65 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (dismissing claims against all banks for which the complaint did not detail specific acts of involvement. Plaintiffs were only able to amend their complaint to add facts for each bank thanks to detailed cooperation they received from an ACPERA applicant.).

[6] The appellate briefing, including briefing on Defendants' petition for rehearing and for a writ of certiorari, spanned 1,308 pages.

[7] The over-the-counter market is opaque, without the publicly available information about each trade that exchanges provide.

b. Risk of Pleading Antitrust Standing

Plaintiffs' Counsel had to litigate difficult questions of antitrust standing, including whether direct transactions between a plaintiff and a defendant were required (before that question was resolved by the Second Circuit), and whether Plaintiffs had sufficiently pled the link between SIBOR/SOR and the prices of the derivatives in question. To address the Court's rulings on these issues in the first and second motions to dismiss, Plaintiffs' Counsel had to amend the complaint to provide more detail about the price link between SIBOR/SOR and FX forwards, and to add new plaintiffs (the Moon Plaintiffs) who had transacted directly with Defendant UBS. Briganti Decl. ¶ 48.

c. Risk of Asserting Personal Jurisdiction Over the Foreign Banks

Personal jurisdiction was also hotly contested, given that all but two of the Defendants are headquartered overseas and the relevant rates are set in Singapore. On the first, second, and fourth motions to dismiss, Defendants filed a separate set of briefing devoted just to this issue. ECF Nos. 145, 239, 448. On top of that separate briefing, several of the banks located in Asia filed motions for reconsideration when this Court found it had personal jurisdiction over them following the second motion to dismiss, and renewed those motions yet again along with the fourth motion to dismiss. ECF Nos. 303-306. In GSE, by contrast, Judge Rakoff considered the action sufficiently complex and risky to justify a full fee award (at a multiplier much larger than that sought here), even though there were no disputes over personal jurisdiction. See GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *4.

d. Risk of Establishing Subject Matter Jurisdiction

The most challenging question of all in this litigation was subject matter jurisdiction. The fundamental question was whether this Court had subject matter jurisdiction over this action in light of the fact that it was initially filed in the names of two entities that had assigned their claims to current plaintiff Fund Liquidation Holdings LLC ("FLH"), and then dissolved. But that question embraces a whole host of difficult sub-questions concerning the interplay between Article III and the Federal Rules, Cayman Island law, the historical development of the real party in interest doctrine from the early common law days through the current rules, the distinctions between capacity and standing and how each is affected by a corporate dissolution, contract principles relating to assignments of claims (including a champerty defense), and issues relating to equitable tolling in the class action context. The parties and the Court wrestled with these issues over the course of both the second and third motions to dismiss, with the Court first permitting Plaintiffs to substitute FLH under Rule 17, and then concluding that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction altogether and dismissing the case entirely following the third motion to dismiss. Briganti Decl. ¶¶ 44, 52. In its order dismissing the case, the Court also denied Plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend their complaint to join the Moon Plaintiffs, and their motions to preliminarily approve the settlements they had reached with Citi and JPMorgan. Id. ¶ 52.

At this point, Plaintiffs' Counsel had invested more than half their total lodestar to date into the case. The Court's denial of preliminary approval of the Citi and JPMorgan settlements put Plaintiffs' Counsel under particular pressure. Not only were they unable to recoup even a portion of their financial investment to offset their risk, but they were also unable to avail themselves of any of the cooperation from Citi and JPMorgan to which Plaintiffs were entitled under the settlement agreements. Early cooperation from settling defendants is enormously valuable in financial antitrust cases, especially where the case (like this) alleges a multi-year conspiracy among numerous bank defendants located here and abroad. In GSE, for example, immediately after the court appointed lead counsel, defendant Deutsche Bank stepped forward to offer cooperation in accordance with the terms of its criminal settlement with the Department of Justice and to settle with plaintiffs. The cooperation Deutsche Bank provided was invaluable in helping plaintiffs amend their complaint with specific allegations of each defendant's actions in furtherance of the conspiracy, and served as a catalyst for multiple other settlements. GSE, 414 F. Supp. 3d at 697. Here, Plaintiffs had none of those benefits. No money, no inside information with which to continue the prosecution, no leverage whatsoever to convince other Defendants to settle. Plaintiffs' Counsel was faced with the Hobson's choice of either walking away with a total loss on its investment or sinking yet more resources into a challenging appeal that was far from guaranteed to succeed. Indeed, the Second Circuit's reversal rate for civil litigations as of June 2021 was just 5.7%.[8]

Plaintiffs' Counsel elected to continue and engaged the highest quality appellate co-counsel, Goldstein & Russell, to maximize its chances in a high-risk appeal that implicated a multitude of novel legal issues. Briganti Decl. ¶ 53. Plaintiffs' Counsel and Goldstein & Russell dedicated more than 1,900 hours combined to the appellate briefing and oral argument preparation. That work yielded a 52-page opinion from the Second Circuit that found this Court does have subject matter jurisdiction and instructed this Court on remand to revisit the settlement approval motion and the motion for leave to amend to add the Moon Plaintiffs that this Court had previously denied. Id. ¶ 53-55.

Even then, the challenges facing Plaintiffs' Counsel were far from over. Defendants challenged the Second Circuit's ruling both before the Second Circuit itself, in a petition for panel rehearing and rehearing en banc, and before the Supreme Court, in a petition for certiorari. Id. ¶ 56. Not only did both Plaintiffs' Counsel and Goldstein & Russell expend yet more resources in defeating both petitions, but until the Supreme Court denied certiorari, Plaintiffs still could not enforce the Citi and JPMorgan settlement agreements and receive the cooperation to which they were entitled. And when the case finally returned to this Court on remand, Defendants moved to dismiss for a fourth time, not only on the merits and on personal jurisdiction, but also on subject matter jurisdiction—seeking to undo all the progress that Plaintiffs' Counsel had painstakingly made since the Court's order dismissing the action in 2018. Id. ¶ 58. Had Defendants succeeded in persuading the Court for a second time that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction, Plaintiffs' Counsel would once again have found itself staring down the unappealing choice between a total loss on its (now considerably larger) investment and another costly and risky appeal. At the time the parties reached their final settlement, the stakes for Plaintiffs could not have been higher.

iii. Risks Facing Plaintiffs Had Litigation Progressed Past Defendants' Fourth Motion to Dismiss

a. Discovery Risks

If Plaintiffs had prevailed on Defendants' fourth motion to dismiss, Plaintiffs' Counsel would have faced a whole new set of challenges. Discovery would have been hotly contested and extremely costly. In addition to the ordinary yet substantial difficulties of litigating discovery against highly skilled counsel with well-resourced clients, Defendants are almost all located abroad, a factor that courts often consider in evaluating litigation risk for purposes of awarding fees. See, e.g., In re Graña y Montero S.A.A. Sec. Litig., No. 17-cv-01105 (LD)(HST), 2021 WL 4173684, at *17 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 13, 2021), report and recommendation adopted, No. 17-cv-1105 (LDH)(ST), 2021 WL 4173170 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 2021) (finding risk of litigation, especially the difficulties of obtaining discovery from foreign defendants and third-parties, as a factor in favor of awarding the uncontested amount of fees in the settlement); Berlinsky v. Alcatel Alsthom Compagnie Générale D'Electricité, 970 F. Supp. 348, 352 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (finding increased risk contingency due to defendant's foreign status as a factor in deciding attorney's fees). Here, many Defendants are in jurisdictions such as Singapore with strong bank secrecy and data privacy laws and would likely use those laws to great effect to shield themselves from discovery.[9] Furthermore, given that the Class Period is from 2007-2011, Plaintiffs' Counsel could potentially find relevant witnesses unavailable, memories faded, and relevant documents inaccessible, lost, or destroyed.

b. Class Certification Risks

Using data obtained from discovery, Plaintiffs' Counsel would then have to engage experts to construct a sophisticated class-wide impact and damages model that accounted for different types of derivatives, positions both on the buyer's and seller's side, manipulation of SIBOR and SOR in different directions at different times, and the duration of the effects of changes in SIBOR and SOR. This complex work would of course be costly and would be the subject of vigorous attack by Defendants. A battle of experts heightens the risk as "it is virtually impossible to predict with any certainty which testimony would be credited, and ultimately, which damages would be found to have been caused by actionable, rather than the myriad nonactionable factors." In re Warner Commc'ns Sec. Litig., 618 F. Supp. 735, 744-45 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), aff'd, 798 F.2d 35 (2d [9] Singapore has been compared to Switzerland for the strictness of its bank secrecy laws. See Neil Gough, "Singapore, a Rising Home for Quiet Money, Comes Under Pressure," N.Y. Times, May 12, 2017.

Cir. 1986); see also In re Facebook, Inc., IPO Sec. & Derivative Litig., 343 F. Supp. 3d 394, 410 (S.D.N.Y. 2018), aff'd, 822 F. App'x 40 (2d Cir. 2020) (experts "tend[] to increase both the cost and duration of litigation").

The Court expressed concerns about proving damages during both the May 19, 2022 (ECF No. 518 at 29:23-25; 36:22-37:4) and June 9, 2022 hearings, stating "It's not at all sure that if this were a different case that there would be a class or a coherent class or a methodology for providing damages that would be satisfactory to the law." June 9, 2022 Hearing Tr. at 21, Briganti Decl. Ex. 2. Defendants would likely use the complexity of the financial products in the market, the sophistication of their alleged misconduct, the temporal breadth of the alleged conspiracy, and the alleged market movement on various days to argue that a litigation class cannot be certified on these claims. In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., 327 F.R.D. 483, 494 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (stating that "the certainty of maintaining a class action is by no means guaranteed" and noting that maintaining the action as a class requires proving the 16-bank conspiracy that was alleged). Defendants of course would have strenuously opposed Plaintiffs' class certification motion. See GSE, 414 F. Supp. 3d at 694 (the risk of maintaining a class through trial "weighs in favor of settlement where it is likely that defendants would oppose class certification if the case were to be litigated"); In re AOL Time Warner, Inc. Sec. and "ERISA" Litig., No. 02-cv-5575 (SWK), 2006 WL 903236, at *12 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 6, 2006) ("[T]he process of class certification would have subjected Plaintiffs to considerably more risk than the unopposed certification that was ordered for the sole purpose of the Settlement."). Even if a litigation class were to be certified, that certification could be challenged on appeal, or at another stage in the litigation. See, e.g., In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 192 F.R.D. 68, 89 (E.D.N.Y. 2000), aff'd, 280 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2001) ("If factual or legal underpinnings of the plaintiffs' successful class certification motion are undermined once they are tested . . . , a modification of the order, or perhaps decertification, might then be appropriate."); Frank v. Eastman Kodak Co., 228 F.R.D. 174, 186 (W.D.N.Y. 2005) ("While plaintiffs might indeed prevail [on a motion for class certification], the risk that the case might be not certified is not illusory and weighs in favor of the Class Settlement."). Plaintiffs' Counsel would continue to bear the risk of maintaining the class through trial and appeal.

c. Trial Risks

Further, Plaintiffs' Counsel's ability to prove liability at trial would have been uncertain. See In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., 327 F.R.D. at 494 ("[A]s to liability, establishing the existence and extent of a conspiracy will necessarily be a complex task, and many of the hurdles that plaintiffs have overcome at the pleading stage will raise substantially more difficult issues at the proof stage."); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 474 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("NASDAQ III") (discussing the difficulties of proving antitrust liability where plaintiffs had to prove, among other things, a complex conspiracy involving a larger number of defendants, a common motive, actions against defendants' financial interest and/or evidence of coercion). If Plaintiffs' Counsel had established liability at trial, it would still face the challenge of proving class damages to a jury. There is a substantial risk that a jury might accept one or more of Defendants' damages arguments and award far less than the funds secured by the Settlements, or even nothing at all. "[T]he history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which antitrust plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages, or only negligible damages, at trial, or on appeal." Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., et al., 396 F.3d 96, 118 (2d Cir. 2005); accord In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 189 F.R.D. 274, 283 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) ("These [ ] settlements are outstanding in light of the substantial risk that a jury might award only a modest judgment or find no damages at all.").

iv. Post-Settlement Risk

Finally, even after Plaintiffs agreed to a global settlement with all Defendants, Plaintiffs' Counsel's risks were still not over. At the first preliminary approval hearing, the Court expressed concerns over its ability to certify a settlement class, and Plaintiffs' Counsel's ability to prepare a fair plan of distribution, in a multidirectional manipulation case. May 19, 2022 Hearing Tr. (ECF No. 518) at 13:9-16:15, 31:7-33:17. Plaintiffs' Counsel had to address those concerns in supplemental briefing and at a second in-person hearing. While the Court did ultimately issue an order preliminarily approving the settlements, the complexity and difficulty of the analysis perfectly typified this litigation. At every stage, Plaintiffs' Counsel risked a total loss on its investment, nothing was taken for granted, and any victories had to be defended. Even now, Plaintiffs' Counsel could still be faced with objections from absent class members, who are sophisticated institutional investors accustomed to evaluating the fairness of settlements. (To date, however, no objections have been made either to the settlements or to Plaintiffs' Counsel's fee and expense request.)

B. The Quality of the Representation Supports the Requested Fee

"[T]he quality of representation is best measured by results," Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55, which are evaluated in light of "the recovery obtained and the backgrounds of the lawyers involved in the lawsuit." In re Merrill Lynch Tyco Research Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 124, 141 (S.D.N.Y. 2008).

Results Obtained. The seven Settlements provide for a $155,458,000 benefit to the Class. As further detailed in Plaintiffs' motions for preliminary and final approval, this is an extraordinary result. It constitutes the only relief for investors damaged by manipulation of SIBOR and SOR, unlike in cases where governmental bodies provide relief to damaged investors through a victim compensation fund. Further, in relation to the market size, it massively exceeds the size of the settlements in other benchmark rate manipulation cases. See ECF No. 499 (Declaration of Vincent Briganti dated May 27, 2022) ¶¶ 25-26.

Background of Counsel. Plaintiffs' Counsel has decades of experience prosecuting class action cases, including some of the largest class action recoveries under the commodities and antitrust laws. See ECF No. 473-12 (firm resume). This includes specific expertise in benchmark manipulation as demonstrated by Plaintiffs' Counsel's tenure as lead or co-lead counsel in cases alleging anticompetitive and manipulative conduct. Id.

Another consideration for assessing the quality of the representation is "[t]he quality of the opposing counsel" in the case. Maley v. Del Global Techs. Corp., 186 F. Supp. 2d 358, 373 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). The fact that Plaintiffs' Counsel successfully prosecuted this action for six years against 19 different Defendants all represented by well-respected and high-caliber law firms and obtained a substantial recovery for the Class reflects the quality of representation provided.

C. Public Policy Supports Awarding the Requested Fee

The Supreme Court has recognized the benefits of private civil suits as a means of enforcing federal antitrust laws. Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983) ("This Court has emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes, including the federal antitrust laws."); see also GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *5 ("Congress has encouraged enforcement of the antitrust laws through private civil suits to deter infringing conduct in the future."); In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig. ("CDS"), No. 13-md-2476 (DLC), 2016 WL 2731524, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 26, 2016) ("Our antitrust laws address issues that go to the heart of our economy. Our economic health, and indeed our stability as a nation, depend upon adherence to the rule of law and our citizenry's trust in the fairness and transparency of our marketplace."). If Plaintiffs' Counsel had not taken on the risks of this lawsuit in 2016, the Class would have been left entirely without recompense. Not only that, but the damage to the integrity of the markets caused by Defendants' manipulation of SIBOR and SOR would have gone virtually unpunished, with the only sanction being the year-long interest-free deposits imposed by MAS. Private antitrust actions like this one serve a key function in compensating damaged class members and deterring future misconduct, goals which are not always fully achieved by government enforcement alone.

Awarding reasonable fees from the common fund ensures that skilled attorneys remain able and willing to pursue antitrust violations at their own expense even when recovery is uncertain. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 51 ("There is . . . commendable sentiment in favor of providing lawyers with sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases that serve the public interest."); In re Colgate-Palmolive Co. ERISA Litig., 36 F. Supp. 3d 344, 352 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) ("While court awarded fees must be reasonable, setting fees too low or randomly will create poor incentives to bringing large class action cases." Accordingly, "providing lawyers with sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases . . . serve[s] the public interest") (citations omitted); see also Espinal v. Victor's Café 52nd St., Inc., No. 16-CV-8057 (VEC), 2019 WL 5425475, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2019) ("The Second Circuit and courts in this District have taken into account the 'social and economic value of class actions, and the need to encourage experienced and able counsel to undertake such litigation' as a basis for increasing the percentage of the fund awarded to [Plaintiffs'] Counsel."). Here, awarding the full fee requested will serve the public policy of incentivizing attorneys to take on the substantial risks of prosecuting similar actions in the future.

PART II: COUNSEL'S FEE REQUEST IS FAIR AND REASONABLE UNDER MULTIPLE DIFFERENT METRICS

"[A] litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); see also Victor v. Argent Classic Convertible Arbitrage Fund L.P., 623 F.3d 82, 86 (2d Cir. 2010). Courts "may award attorneys' fees in common fund cases under either the 'lodestar' method or the 'percentage of the fund' method" although "the trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method." McDaniel v. Cnty. of Schenectady, 595 F.3d 411, 417 (2d Cir. 2010) (citing Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 121). Here, counsel's requested fee is eminently reasonable under either analysis.

A. The Requested Fee Is Well Within the Range of Risk Multipliers Approved in This Circuit

Under the lodestar method, the Court first ascertains the number of hours reasonably billed to the Class and then multiplies that figure by an appropriate hourly rate. City of Westland Police and Fire Ret. Sys., No. 12-CV-0256 (LAK), 2021 WL 2453972, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 15, 2021). Courts compare the requested award to the time and labor expended to confirm that the fee award is reasonable. Grice v. Pepsi Bev. Co., 363 F. Supp. 3d 401, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 2019); In re "Agent Orange" Prod. Liab. Litig., 818 F.2d 226, 232 (2d Cir. 1987) (adoption of the lodestar method intended to "provide counsel with [fair and just] compensation and, at the same time, temper these awards to prevent windfalls").

Counsel's Limitations and Audits of Time. Plaintiffs' Counsel self-imposed certain limits on its lodestar. Plaintiffs' Counsel's timekeepers with less than 10 hours billed in the Action have been excluded from the lodestar. Plaintiffs' Counsel audited its time and the time of Goldstein & Russell to review the appropriateness of the hours billed, and (if necessary) adjusted the lodestar in the exercise of billing judgment. All lodestar by Goldstein & Russell was incurred on projects specifically approved by Plaintiffs' Counsel.

Number of Hours Billed. As reflected in the accompanying attorney declarations, Counsel invested a total of 18,108.45 hours working on this case: 17,230.05 hours for Plaintiffs' Counsel and 878.25 for appellate counsel Goldstein & Russell. While this represents a substantial investment of resources on the part of the two firms, it is also a very modest number in light of the amount of work done during the six-year pendency of this action. As detailed above and in the declarations, in those 18,108.45 hours, counsel investigated and developed the initial complaint effectively from scratch; litigated four motions to dismiss raising a vast array of arguments; amended their complaint four times to respond to the Court's rulings on the motions to dismiss; achieved a total victory in a major appeal and defended that appeal all the way to the Supreme Court; negotiated settlements with 19 Defendants; and developed a robust plan of distribution.

By way of comparison, in GSE, Plaintiffs' Counsel shared the lead counsel position with another firm (Scott+Scott), and the two firms together billed just over 30,000 hours. While those 30,000 hours did encompass discovery, there was no appeal to contend with in GSE Bonds, and only two motions to dismiss rather than four. Judge Rakoff nonetheless considered counsel's time to be "efficiently spent," and awarded counsel's full requested fee of $77 million, even though he observed that the number of hours was "not particularly high in light of the dollar amount of the requested fees." 2020 WL 3250593, at *4. Here, Plaintiffs' counsel bore the substantial risk of this case alone, but their requested fees are about half those awarded in GSE, and its hours billed are in the same proportion.

The Declarations of Vincent Briganti and Eric F. Citron describe in detail the specific contributions of their respective firms. Plaintiffs' Counsel staffed the case strategically for maximum efficiency—allowing associates and younger partners to take responsibility wherever possible for briefing and arguments, but with senior partners maintaining constant supervision and involvement due to the complexity and risk involved in the case. Of the eight highest-billing timekeepers in this matter, four are attorneys who were also heavily involved in the GSE litigation where their detailed time records were vetted by Judge Rakoff: Mr. Briganti, Mr. Levis, Ms. MacLean, and Mr. St. Louis.

Hourly Rates. The billing rates used to develop the lodestar are also reasonable. The hourly billing rates for attorneys working on this case ranged from $400 to $1,980.[10] Declaration of Vincent Briganti in Support of Plaintiffs' Counsel's Motion for Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses ("Briganti Fee Decl.") ¶ 7 (schedule listing attorney rates from $325-$1,295); Declaration of Eric F. Citron on Behalf of Goldstein & Russell, P.C., in Support of Plaintiffs' Counsel's Motion for Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses ("Citron Decl.") (schedule listing attorney rates from $400-$1,980). These are the current billing rates that both firms charge their clients in non-contingent fee cases. Briganti Fee Decl. ¶ 8; Citron Decl. ¶ 10. They are consistent with rates charged by other firms in this market, and with rates routinely approved by courts in this District in cases of comparable size and complexity. See, e.g., Transcript of Proceedings at 11, Leonard v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co. of New York, No. 18-cv-4994 (AKH) (S.D.N.Y. May 17, 2022), ECF No. 226 (finding lodestar reasonable where attorney rates ranged from $375 to $1,200, see Declaration of Seth Ard, ECF No. 208 (Mar. 11, 2022); City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972, at *1 (finding counsel's hourly rates between $170 to $1,058 were reasonable); GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *1 (granting fee award using partner rates of $675 to $1,150 and associate rates of $365 to $820), see also Decls. in Support of Award for Attorney's Lodestar. Lodestar is calculated by "multipl[ying] the reasonable hours billed by a reasonable hourly rate." Colgate-Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 347. The total lodestar here is $15,100,428.00, comprising $14,028,053.00 for Plaintiffs' Counsel and $1,072,375.00 for Goldstein & Russell.

*Risk Multiplier. Once the lodestar figure is determined, courts typically enhance it by a risk multiplier. This multiplier is not a bonus or a windfall to counsel. Rather, it is necessary to compensate counsel for the major risk they undertake in working on a contingent fee basis. See, e.g., Guevoura Fund Ltd. v. Sillerman, No. 1:15-CV-07192-CM, 2019 WL 6889901, at *19–20 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 18, 2019) ("[I]n numerous cases, [Plaintiffs'] Counsel working on a contingent basis, such as this, have expended thousands of hours only to receive no compensation. There have been many hard-fought lawsuits where…excellent professional efforts of members of the plaintiffs' bar produced no fee for counsel. Losses such as these are exceedingly expensive. [T]his factor counsels strongly in favor of the fee request."); In re Cont'l Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 569 (7th Cir. 1992), as amended on denial of reh'g (May 22, 1992) (failure to award risk multiplier "was error in a case in which the lawyers had no sure source of compensation for their services"); see also In re Synthroid Mktg. Litig., 264 F.3d 712, 721 (7th Cir. 2001) ("The market rate for legal fees depends in part on the risk of nonpayment a firm agrees to bear, in part on the quality of its performance, in part on the amount of work necessary to resolve the litigation, and in part on the stakes of the case."). When a firm bills a client hourly, it can set the rates at a level that accounts for its overhead expenses and builds in a reasonable profit margin, knowing that it will be paid for its work on an ongoing basis. But here, Plaintiffs' Counsel had no way of knowing whether it would ever be paid at all over the six-year period that it gave its best efforts to the prosecution of this case. Judge Posner in the Seventh Circuit explains well that the lodestar multiplier is intended to address this uncertainty and aid counsel in achieving market compensation:

> Suppose a lawyer can get all the work he wants at $200 an hour regardless of the outcome of the case, and he is asked to handle on a contingent basis a case that he estimates he has only a 50 percent chance of winning. Then if (as under the lodestar method) he is still to be paid on an hourly basis, he will charge (if risk neutral) $400 an hour for his work on the case in order that his expected fee will be $200, his normal billing rate. If the fee award is to simulate market compensation, therefore, the lawyer in this example is entitled to a risk multiplier of 2 (2 × $200 = $400). The need for such an adjustment is particularly acute in class action suits. The lawyers for the class receive no fee if the suit fails, so their entitlement to fees is inescapably contingent.
> The example is oversimplified, because the risk of loss varies over the life of a case. . . . We are not trying to put him into a straitjacket but are merely emphasizing that the failure to make any provision for risk of loss may result in systematic undercompensation of plaintiffs' counsel in a class action case, where as we have said the only fee that counsel can obtain is, in the nature of the case, a contingent one.

In re Cont'l Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d at 569. This is not a case where the risks would have decreased over time. As described in detail above, the risk of total non-recovery was (and would have continued to be) very high throughout the entire litigation, yet at every stage Plaintiffs' Counsel chose to press forward on behalf of the Class rather than to contain its losses. Awarding an appropriate risk multiplier compensates Plaintiffs' Counsel for taking on this risk and accounts for the opportunity costs the firm experienced in choosing to handle a contingent matter.

The fee request here represents a lodestar multiplier of 2.57. This multiplier is comfortably within the range of multipliers that courts regularly apply in complex antitrust class actions. Indeed, in view of this case's unique risks and challenges, it is on the lower end. In GSE, for example, Judge Rakoff awarded a multiplier of 4.09, even where counsel enjoyed many advantages that Plaintiffs' Counsel did not have here: ability to share risk with co-counsel, a treasure trove of early cooperation from a DOJ leniency applicant, early settlements to offset risk, no personal jurisdiction issues, and no appeal. GSE, 2020 WL 3250593, at *5. Similarly, this Court recently awarded a multiplier of 3.01 in a case where the defendant did not even move to dismiss, but simply filed its answer and moved straight to discovery. See Leonard v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co. of N.Y., No. 18-cv-4994 (AKH) (S.D.N.Y.), ECF Nos. 223 (May 20, 2022), 17 (Aug. 22, 2018). Other examples abound. To list a few:

- Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 123 (upholding a multiplier of 3.5 as reasonable and observing that "multipliers of between 3 and 4.5 have become common");
- Carlson v. Xerox Corp., 355 F. App'x 523, 526 (2d Cir. 2009) ("the resulting multiplier would be 3.59, still below the 3.6 average and in line with the 3.1 median for similar cases");
- CDS, 2016 WL 2731524, at *17 (approving a lodestar multiplier of "just over 6" in a complex antitrust class action);
- Beckman v. KeyBank N.A., 293 F.R.D. 467, 481 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (approving a multiplier of 6.3 in class action, explaining that "[c]ourts regularly award lodestar multipliers of up to eight times the lodestar, and in some cases, even higher multipliers.");

- Maley, 186 F. Supp. 2d at 371 (holding that a 4.65 lodestar multiplier is modest, fair, and reasonable);
- NECA-IBEW Health & Welfare Fund v. Goldman, Sachs & Co., No. 1:08-CV-10783, 2016 WL 3369534, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. May 2, 2016) (approving attorneys' fees that represented a lodestar multiplier of 3.9.).

B. The Requested Fee Is Within the Range of the Fees Approved in This Circuit for Similarly Sized Settlements

The reasonableness of the requested fee is confirmed when compared to cases applying the "percentage method" to calculate fees, the method favored in this Circuit. Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 121 ("The trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method"); In re Beacon Assoc. Litig., No. 09 Civ. 777(CM), 2013 WL 2450960, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. May 9, 2013) (explaining that "percentage of recovery" is "the preferred method of calculating the award for Plaintiffs' Counsel in common fund cases"). Courts that are skeptical of the percentage method fault it for allowing counsel "to collect a large fee after investing relatively little time in the case, rather than continuing the litigation in order to maximize plaintiffs' recovery but receiving a lower marginal rate of return on his or her work." In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 197 F.R.D. 71, 77 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). Here, of course, the opposite has happened: Plaintiffs' Counsel pushed this litigation forward for six years to turn around a total loss into a major recovery for the class.

In this case, even if used simply as a point of comparison to the lodestar method, a fee of 25% is amply reasonable. The percentage is comparable to fees awarded in other less complex actions with settlements between $100 and $300 million, such as:

- Bd. of Trustees of AFTRA Ret. Fund v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., No. 09 CIV. 686 SAS, 2012 WL 2064907, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 7, 2012) (approving attorneys' fees that equaled 25% of $150 million settlement and that represented a lodestar multiplier of 2.86);
- In re Comverse Tech., Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 06-CV-1825 (NGG)(RER), 2010 WL 2653354, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. June 24, 2010) (awarding attorneys' fees that equaled 25% of $225 million settlement and that represented a lodestar multiplier of 2.78.);
- In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 399 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (Pollack, J.) (approving attorneys' fees that equaled 27.5% of $116.6 million settlement);
- Laydon v. Mizuho Bank Ltd., No. 12-cv-3419 (GBD) (S.D.N.Y.) ECF Nos. 723 (Nov. 10, 2016) (granting 25% fee on first set of settlements totaling $58 million).

See also Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. 14-cv-7126 (JMF), 2018 WL 6250657, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 29, 2018) (awarding 26% of the net settlement fund from a $504.5 million settlement involving the manipulation of ISDAfix).

Recent studies of antitrust class actions further confirm the reasonableness of the requested 25% fee. See Center for Litigation and Courts and The Huntington National Bank, 2021 Antitrust Annual Report: Class Actions in Federal Court (April 2022) at 27-28 (median fee awards of 30% in antitrust settlements ranging from $100 million to $249 million between 2009 and 2021)[11]; Theodore Eisenberg et. al., Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009-2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 951 (2017) (the average fee award in nineteen different antitrust class actions studied during 2009-2013 was 27%); WILLIAM B. RUBENSTEIN, 5 NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 15:78 (5th ed. Supp.

Dec. 2016) (mean percentage for fees in Second Circuit class action cases from 2006 to 2011 was 26.9%).

PART III: PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL'S EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND WERE NECESSARILY INCURRED TO ACHIEVE THE SETTLEMENTS AND SHOULD BE REIMBURSED

Plaintiffs' Counsel also request reimbursement in the amount of $179,945.33 for out-of-pocket expenses reasonable and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this Action from inception through to the present. See Briganti Decl. ¶¶ 125-26. Expert costs comprise the bulk of Plaintiffs' Counsel's expenses, totaling $116,402.52 for work with experts engaged to assist with issues of foreign law, analysis of relevant data and trends, and the development of the Distribution Plan, among other issues. Over the course of the litigation, Plaintiffs' Counsel paid $24,653.05 in costs relating to legal and factual research expenses, $17,705.50 on in house copying (at $0.20 per page) and $9,793.32 in connection with document hosting related to the cooperation materials provided by Settling Defendants. Briganti Fee Decl. ¶¶ 10-11. The remaining $11,390.94 in expenses incurred by Plaintiffs' Counsel and Goldstein & Russell include, inter alia, filing fees, court transcripts, postage, shipping, and telephone charges, outside copying and appellate printer charges, and travel expenses. Id. ¶¶ 10-11; Citron Decl. ¶ 12. This amount is well below the $750,000 Plaintiffs' Counsel advised in the Court-approved notice sent to Settlement Class Members. See ECF No. 499-2 at 29.

The attorneys whose work leads to the creation of "a common settlement fund for a class are entitled to reimbursement of [reasonable] expenses that they advance to a class." Meredith Corp., 87 F. Supp. 3dat 671; see also In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 MD 2262 (NRB), 2018 WL 3863445, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2018) (citation omitted) ("Courts in the Second Circuit normally grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course."). Plaintiffs' Counsel's costs and expenses here were "incidental and necessary to the representation of the [C]lass," and should be reimbursed. See Beckman, 293 F.R.D. at 482. Indeed, "[t]he fact that [Plaintiffs'] Counsel [were] willing to [incur these expenses], where reimbursement was entirely contingent on the success of this litigation, is perhaps the best indicator that expenditures were reasonable and necessary." Fleisher v. Phoenix Life Ins. Co., No. 11-CV-8405 (CM), 2015 WL 10847814, at *23 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 9, 2015).

PART IV: THE COURT SHOULD GRANT PLAINTIFFS' INCENTIVE AWARDS REQUEST

Plaintiffs seek incentive awards totaling $375,000, with $125,000 each awarded to class representatives Fund Liquidation Holdings LLC, Moon Capital Partners Master Fund Ltd., and Moon Capital Master Fund Ltd. Awards to class representatives, whether termed as "service" or "incentive" awards, are granted at the discretion of the Court to "compensate class representatives for their services to the class and simultaneously serve to incentivize them to perform this function." WILLIAM B. RUBENSTEIN, 5 NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 17:1 (5th ed. 2011). In deciding whether to grant such awards, a court considers "'the personal risk (if any) incurred by the plaintiff-applicant in becoming and continuing as a litigant, the time and effort expended by that plaintiff in assisting in the prosecution of the litigation or in bringing to bear added value (e.g., factual expertise), any other burdens sustained by that plaintiff . . . and, of course, the ultimate recovery.'" Dial Corp. v. News Corp., 317 F.R.D. 426, 439 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (quoting Roberts v. Texaco, 979 F. Supp. 185, 200 (S.D.N.Y. 1997)); see also Anwar v. Fairfield Greenwich Ltd., No. 09-cv-118 (VM), 2012 WL 1981505, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2012) ("Courts consistently approve awards in class action lawsuits to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provide and burdens they endure during litigation."); Beckman, 293 F.R.D. at 483 ("It is important to compensate plaintiffs for the time they spend and the risks they take."); Varljen v. H.J. Meyers & Co., No. 97-CV-6742 (DLC), 2000 WL 1683656, at *5 n.2 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 8, 2000)

(reimbursement of such expenses should be allowed because it "encourages participation of plaintiffs in the active supervision of their counsel").

Plaintiffs took a significant risk in serving as class representatives and suing Defendants. Prosecuting financial institutions, including some of the most significant banks in the financial markets, carries with it the inherent risk of adversely impacting existing or future business opportunities or relationships with those same institutions. See Dial Corp., 317 F.R.D. at 439 ("[N]amed Plaintiffs in this case assumed a substantial risk in antagonizing a longstanding, powerful business partner and suffering sweeping consequences in the marketplace as a result of filing this action"). That Plaintiffs served as class representatives despite the risk of potentially being locked out of other business opportunities supports granting Plaintiffs' request for incentive awards.

Further, Plaintiffs were vigilant in pursing their responsibilities as class representatives and devoted significant time to prosecuting this Action that would have been otherwise spent running their businesses. FLH (from the outset of the case) and the Moon Plaintiffs (since 2018) provided valuable assistance to Plaintiffs' Counsel by, among other things, providing relevant information, transaction data, and other documents critical to developing the allegations made in the complaints; providing feedback concerning Plaintiffs' Counsel's litigation strategy; reviewing pleadings and motions; reviewing appellate briefs; playing instrumental roles during the settlement negotiations with Defendants, and keeping apprised of key developments in the case and communicating with Plaintiffs' Counsel.

The risks and efforts undertaken by Plaintiffs merit incentive awards, and Plaintiffs' requested award amounts are consistent with those awards in other complex class actions. See, e.g., Alaska Elec. Pension Fund, 2018 WL 6250657, at *4 (awarding six $50,000 service awards and two $100,000 awards for named plaintiffs, recognizing that "in aggregate they amount to a minuscule portion of the settlement fund"); In re Petrobras Sec. Litig., 317 F. Supp. 3d 858, 873 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (Rakoff, J.) (awarding three class representatives a total of $400,000 as compensation for, among other things, responding to discovery, "providing oversight of the mediation and settlement process," and reviewing and authorizing settlement); In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., No. 06-MD-1738 (BMC)(JO), 2012 WL 5289514, at *11 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2012) (approving $50,000 incentive award for each of two class representatives); Bd. of Tr. of AFTRA Ret. Fund, 2012 WL 2064907, at *3 ($50,000 incentive awards to three class representatives); Bellifemine v. Sanofi-Aventis U.S. LLC, No. 07 Civ. 2207 (JGK) ,2010 WL 3119374, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 6, 2010) ($75,000 awards to five named plaintiffs and $25,000 to $60,000 awards to four class member witnesses); Kifafi v. Hilton Hotels Ret. Plan., 999 F. Supp. 2d 88, 105 (D.D.C. 2013) ($50,000 incentive award to lead plaintiff).

As a percentage, the total requested incentive awards represent just 0.24% of the total value of the Settlements. This percentage is also comparable to the incentive or service awards granted in other similarly complex class actions. See GSE, 19-cv-1704 (JSR) (S.D.N.Y.) (awarding $400,000 in incentive awards, representing 0.103% of the settlement fund); Laydon v. Mizuho Bank, Ltd., No. 12-cv-3419 (GBD), ECF No. 724 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 10, 2016) (awarding $580,000 in incentive awards, representing 1% of the settlement fund); Dial Corp., 317 F.R.D. at 438-39 (awarding 0.12% of the $244 million settlement fund ($300,000) to six class representatives); In re Air Cargo Shipping Services Antitrust Litig., No. 06-MD-1775 (JG)(VVP), 2015 WL 5918273, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 2015) (granting $540,000 in incentive awards, representing 0.06% of the total $900 million in settlements, to six class representatives).

The Settlement Notice to Class Members stated that, in the event Plaintiffs sought incentive awards for their roles in this Action, such amount would not exceed $500,000 in the aggregate. To date, there have been no objections by Class Members to the incentive awards. In light of their active roles and the risks involved with representing the Class, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court issue incentive awards of $125,000 to FLH; $125,000 to Moon Capital Partners Master Fund Ltd., and $125,000 to Moon Capital Master Fund Ltd.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' Counsel respectfully requests that the Court approve their motion for attorneys' fees and payment of litigation costs, and Plaintiffs' request for Incentive Awards, in the amounts set forth above.

A. Notice Satisfies Due Process

5. The notice of settlement (in the form attached as Exhibit A to the Declaration of Tina Chiango Regarding Notice of Settlement to the Direct Purchaser Class) ("Notice"), mailed and emailed directly to the members of the Class, constituted the best notice practicable under the circumstances. In making this determination, the Court finds that the Notice provided for individual notice to all Class members who were identified through reasonable efforts. Copies of the Notice were disseminated via First-Class U.S. mail on or around April 6, 2020 to Class members identified from the sales data produced by Defendants and third-party generic manufacturers.[6] Between April 10, 2020 and April 13, 2020, the Notice was sent to an email address for every class member.[7] Only one Class member was unreachable by email, but that Class member was sent the Notice via First-Class U.S. mail.[8] The Notice was also posted on the settlement website, www.loestrin24antitrustlitigation.com. Pursuant to, and in accordance with, Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court hereby finds that the Notice provided Class members with due and adequate notice of the Settlement Agreement, these proceedings, and the rights of Class members to object to the Settlement. Due and adequate notice of the proceedings having been given, and a full opportunity having been offered to the Class to participate in the fairness hearing, it is hereby determined that all Class members are bound by this Order and Final Judgment.

B. Final Approval of Direct Purchaser Settlement

6. The Court has held a hearing to consider the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of the proposed Settlement and has been advised that there have been no objections to the Settlement from any members of the Class.

7. Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this Court hereby approves the Settlement, as set forth in the Settlement Agreement, and finds that the Settlement is, in all respects, fair, reasonable, and adequate to Class members. Specifically, the Settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate in light of the factors set forth in City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 463 (2d Cir. 1974),[9] as follows and for the reasons set forth in the Memorandum of Law in Support of Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Unopposed Motion for Final Approval of Settlement, Approval of Proposed Plan of Allocation, Adoption of Report and Recommendation of Magistrate Judge, and Order of Dismissal with Prejudice:

a. This case was highly complex, expensive, and time consuming, and would have continued to be so if the case had not settled;

b. There were no objections to the Settlement by Class members, all of whom were sent notice by U.S. First Class mail and/or email;

[9] Courts in this district have used the Grinnell factors to assess the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of settlements. See, e.g., Sesto v. Prospect Chartercare, LLC, No. 18-cv-328, 2019 WL 5067200, at *3 (D.R.I. Oct. 9, 2019); Medoff v. CVS Caremark Corp., No. 09-cv-554, 2016 WL 632238, at *5-7, 8 (D.R.I. Feb. 17, 2016); Trombley v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. 08-cv-456, 2013 WL 5153503, at *5 (D.R.I. Sept. 12, 2013); Baptista v. Mut. of Omaha Ins. Co., 859 F. Supp. 2d 236, 642 (D.R.I. 2012).

c. Because the case settled after the parties had completed discovery, the Court had ruled on class certification, the Court had held hearings on and the parties had fully briefed summary judgment motions, Daubert motions, and motions in limine, and the case was on the verge of trial, Class Counsel had a full appreciation of the strengths and weaknesses of their case in negotiating the Settlement;

d. Class Counsel and the Class would have faced risks in establishing liability, causation, and damages if they had decided to continue to litigate rather than settle; and

e. The amount of the Settlement is well within the range of reasonableness in light of the best possible recovery and the risks the parties would have faced if the case had continued to verdicts as to both liability and damages.

8. The Court finds that Co-Lead Counsel, listed below, along with other Class Counsel, have fairly and adequately represented the interests of the Class and satisfied the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(g):

9. All of the Class's claims against Warner Chilcott and Watson are hereby dismissed with prejudice and without costs as provided in the Settlement Agreement.

10. Upon the Settlement becoming final upon the Effective Date as defined in Paragraph 5 of the Settlement Agreement, Ahold and all Class Members, whether or not they object to the Settlement and whether or not they make a claim upon or participate in the Settlement Fund, on behalf of themselves and their respective past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, officers, directors, employees, insurers, general or limited partners, divisions, agents, attorneys, servants, trustees, joint ventures, heirs, executors, administrators, representatives (and the parents', subsidiaries', and affiliates' past and present officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and their predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and representatives (collectively, the "Direct Purchaser Class Releasors"), release and forever discharge, and covenant not to sue, Defendants and their past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, joint ventures, stockholders, officers, directors, management, supervisory boards, insurers, general or limited partners, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, representatives (and the parents', subsidiaries', and affiliates' past, present, and future officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and the predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators and representatives of each of the foregoing (collectively, the "Defendant Releasees") from all manner of claims, debts, obligations, demands, actions, suits, causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including costs, expenses, penalties and attorneys' fees, under federal or state laws, whether known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, contingent or non-contingent, in law or equity, that arise out of or relate, in whole or in part in any manner, to:

> (i) the subject matter of or acts, omissions, or other conduct alleged in the Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Third Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint and Jury Demand (ECF No. 380), dated March 28, 2018, in the Direct Purchaser Class Action, > or any prior complaints or subsequent amended complaints filed in the Direct Purchaser Class Action (collectively "Complaints"); (ii) the subject matter of pre-trial proceedings in the Direct Purchaser Class Action; and/or (iii) all claims concerning alleged delay or impairment in the marketing, sale, manufacture, pricing, or purchase of, or the enforcement of intellectual property related to, Loestrin 24, Minastrin 24, Lo Loestrin 24, or their generic equivalents that could reasonably have been asserted in the Direct Purchaser Class Action, including but not limited to claims of reverse payments, product hops, fraudulent procurement of U.S. Patent No. 5,552,394, sham patent listings, and sham patent litigations prior to the date hereof (collectively, this entire paragraph the "Released Claims").

11. Upon the occurrence of the Effective Date as defined in Paragraph 5 of the Settlement Agreement, Defendants, on behalf of themselves and their respective past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, officers, directors, employees, insurers, general or limited partners, divisions, agents, attorneys, servants, trustees, joint ventures, heirs, executors, administrators, representatives (and the parents', subsidiaries', and affiliates' past and present officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and their predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators, and representatives (collectively, the "Defendant Releasors"), release and forever discharge, and covenant not to sue, Direct Purchaser Class Members and their past, present, and future parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, joint ventures, stockholders, officers, directors, management, supervisory boards, insurers, general or limited partners, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, representatives (and the parents', subsidiaries', and affiliates' past, present, and future officers, directors, employees, agents, attorneys, servants, and representatives), and the predecessors, successors, heirs, executors, administrators and representatives of each of the foregoing (collectively, the "Direct Purchaser Class Releasees") from all claims, debts, obligations, demands, actions, suits, causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including costs, expenses, penalties and attorneys' fees, under federal or state laws, whether known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, contingent or non-contingent, in law or equity, asserted in connection with the Action or that should have been asserted in the Action as compulsory counterclaims arising out of the alleged conduct that is the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement.

12. In addition, upon the occurrence of the Effective Date as defined in Paragraph 5 of the Settlement Agreement, each Direct Purchaser Class Releasor and Defendant Releasor (collectively "Releasors") waives and releases, upon the Settlement Agreement becoming final, any and all provisions, rights, and/or benefits conferred by § 1542 of the California Civil Code, which reads:

> Section 1542. General Release; extent. A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor;

or by any law of any state or territory of the United States, or principle of common law, which is similar, comparable, or equivalent to § 1542 of the California Civil Code. Each Releasor may hereafter discover facts other than or different from those which he, she, or it knows or believes to be true with respect to the claims that are the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement. Nonetheless, upon the Effective Date each Releasor hereby expressly waives and fully, finally, and forever settles and releases any known or unknown, foreseen or unforeseen, suspected or unsuspected, asserted or unasserted, contingent or non-contingent claim that is the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement, whether or not concealed or hidden, without regard to the subsequent discovery or existence of such different or additional facts. Each Direct Purchaser Class Releasor also hereby expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles, releases and discharges any and all claims that are the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement that it may have against any Defendant Releasees under § 17200, et seq., of the California Business and Professions Code or any similar comparable or equivalent provision of the law of any other state or territory of the United States or other jurisdiction. Each Defendant Releasor also hereby expressly waives and fully, finally and forever settles, releases and discharges any and all claims that are the subject matter of Paragraph 11 of the Settlement Agreement that it may have against any Direct Purchaser Class Releasees under § 17200, et seq., of the California Business and Professions Code or any similar comparable or equivalent provision of the law of any other state or territory of the United States or other jurisdiction.

13. The releases set forth in Paragraphs 10, 11, and 12 of this Order and Final Judgment effect a complete and total resolution of this Action to the extent of the claims of the Direct Purchaser Class that were or could have been asserted relating to the allegations in this Action, as well as any compulsory counterclaims of Defendants relating to the allegations in this Action that were or should have been asserted, but the releases set forth in Paragraphs 10, 11 and 12 of this Order and Final Judgment do not release any claims (1) arising in the ordinary course of business between any Direct Purchaser Class member and any Defendant arising under Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code (pertaining to sales), the laws of negligence or product liability or implied warranty, breach of contract, breach of express warranty, or personal injury; (2) other claims unrelated to Loestrin 24 Fe, Minastrin 24 Fe, Lo Loestrin Fe, or their generic equivalents; or (3) arising out of or in any way relating to the alleged horizontal price-fixing agreements between Defendants and other manufacturers of generic pharmaceutical products that are alleged in In re Generic Pharmaceuticals Pricing Antitrust Litigation, MDL No. 2724, 16-md-2724 (E.D. Pa.).

14. The Court retains exclusive jurisdiction over the Settlement and the Settlement Agreement as described therein, including the administration and consummation of the Settlement, and over this Order and Final Judgment.

C. Approval of Plan of Allocation for Direct Purchaser Class

15. The Court approves Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Proposed Plan of Allocation for the Direct Purchaser Class, filed on January 22, 2020 as Exhibit 8 to the Declaration of Thomas M. Sobol in Support of Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Approval of Settlement, Approval of the Form and Manner of Notice to the Class, Appointment of Claims Administrator and Escrow Agent, and Setting the Final Settlement Schedule and Date for a Fairness Hearing[10] and available on the official settlement website (www.loestrin24antitrustlitigation.com), which addresses the allocation of funds from the Settlement Agreement, plus interest and net of the Court-approved expense reimbursement, award of attorneys' fees, and service award to the class representative.

16. The Court retains, for all time, exclusive jurisdiction over the Settlement and the Settlement Agreement as described therein, including the administration and consummation of the Settlement, and over this Order.

17. Co-Lead Counsel and RG/2 Claims Administration LLC, the Court-appointed claims administrator, are authorized to begin administration and distribution of claim forms and the net proceeds of the Settlement in accordance with the Plan of Allocation within five (5) business days of entry of this Order.

D. Adoption of Report and Recommendation Regarding Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Motion for Attorneys' Fees, Expenses, and a Service Award

18. On June 16, 2020, this Court referred Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Unopposed Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Service Award for the Class Representative ("Fee Motion")[11] to United States Magistrate Judge Patricia A. Sullivan, who has reviewed the reasonableness of Class Counsel's time and expenses on a quarterly basis since the outset of the litigation, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B), Rule 72(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and Local Rule Cv 72 to submit to the undersigned district judge proposed findings of fact and recommendations for disposition of the Fee Motion.[12]

19. Judge Sullivan filed a Report and Recommendation Regarding the Direct Purchaser Class Motion for Approval of Attorneys' Fees, Expenses, and a Service Award ("Fee and Expense R&R") on July 17, 2020,[13] which acknowledged the quality of work performed by Class Counsel and recommended that the Court grant the Fee Motion and approve payments of (i) $3,965,558 in reimbursement for costs and expenses, (ii) $38,678,147 in attorneys' fees, and (ii) a $100,000 service award for class representative Ahold USA, Inc. out of the settlement fund.[14]

20. The Fee and Expense R&R advised that any party could serve and file specific objections to the proposed findings and recommendations as provided by Rule 72(b)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Local Rule Cv 72(d) within fourteen days of its issuance and stated that failure to timely file such objections constituted waiver of the right to review by the district judge and to appeal any judgment or ruling from the Court based on the findings and recommendations of the Fee and Expense R&R.[15] No party filed objections to the Fee and Expense R&R, and the deadline for doing so has passed.

21. The Court has reviewed the Magistrate Judge's thorough and well-reasoned Fee and Expense R&R and hereby ADOPTS and APPROVES IN FULL the findings and recommendations set forth therein. Accordingly, the Court hereby ORDERS that Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs' Unopposed Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Service Award for the Class Representative is GRANTED and approves the following payments for distribution from the settlement fund:

a. Direct Purchaser Class Counsel's request for reimbursement of their reasonable litigation expenses, totaling $3,965,558[16];

b. A fee award of 33⅓% of the net settlement amount (one-third of $120 million settlement minus the requested litigation expenses), totaling $38,678,147, plus any interest on that amount that may accrue prior to distribution; and

c. A $100,000 service award to Ahold in recognition of its participation in the case and the time and effort it expended on behalf of the Class.

E. Final Judgment

22. The Court finds that this Order and Final Judgment adjudicates all of the claims, rights, and liabilities of the parties to the Settlement Agreement (including the members of the Class), and is final.

[15] Id.

[16] As detailed by Class Counsel, there are still outstanding expenses related to the administration of the settlement that were accounted for in the total expense reimbursement request. Any changes to the final expenses should be reported in the forthcoming distribution request.

23. Neither this Order and Final Judgment, nor the Settlement Agreement nor any other Settlement-related document shall constitute any evidence or admission of liability by Defendants or any other released party, nor shall either the Settlement Agreement, this Order, or any other Settlement-related document be offered in evidence or used for any other purpose in this or any other matter or proceeding except as may be necessary to consummate or enforce the Settlement Agreement of the terms of this Order or if offered by any released party in responding to any action purporting to assert Released Claims.

SO ORDERED this 1st day of September, 2020.

MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF DIRECT PURCHASER CLASS PLAINTIFFS' UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR AN AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES, REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES, AND SERVICE AWARD FOR THE CLASS REPRESENTATIVE

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION 1

II. BACKGROUND 3

A. The direct purchasers allege that the defendants violated federal antitrust law and imposed overcharges on the class. 3

B. The parties engage in extensive discovery. 5

C. The Court certifies the direct purchaser class. 7

D. The parties move for summary judgment and prepare for trial. 8

E. The direct purchasers and the defendants settle the case for $120 million. 11

F. The Court denies all summary judgment motions. 12

G. The First Circuit denies the defendants' appeal of class certification. 12

III. ARGUMENT 13

A. The request for approval of the direct purchasers' litigation expenses is reasonable and appropriate. 13

B. The request for approval of a percentage-of-fund fee of one-third of the settlement fund (net of expenses) is reasonable and appropriate. 14

1. The "percentage of the fund" methodology is the prevailing method for calculating a reasonable class counsel fee. 15

2. The requested one-third fee is fair and reasonable. 18

a. Courts regularly approve a one-third fee. 18

b. The reasonableness factors commonly applied in this Circuit support class counsel's request for a one-third fee. 24

c. The fund is significant in size and benefits an entire industry. 25

d. The experience, skill, and efficiency of the attorneys involved, as demonstrated by their work before this Court, justifies the request. 26

e. The complexity of this litigation supports the requested fee. 26

f. The risks of litigation support the requested fee. 27

g. Class counsel devoted a substantial amount of time to this case. 28

h. The request is reasonable when compared to empirical evidence of awards in similar cases. 28

i. Public policy considerations fully support the requested fee. 29

3. The lodestar cross-check confirms the reasonableness of the fee request. 30

C. The request for approval of a service award for the class representative is reasonable and appropriate. 32

I. INTRODUCTION

On December 13, 2019—days before jury selection and a few weeks to trial—direct purchaser class plaintiff Ahold USA, Inc. reached an agreement on behalf of itself and the certified class of direct purchasers to settle all claims against Warner Chilcott[1] and Watson Laboratories, Inc., related Warner Chilcott and Watson entities,[2] and parent entity Allergan, plc. The settlement provides for a payment from the defendants in the total gross amount of $120 million in cash to the direct purchaser class; in exchange, the direct purchasers dismiss their case with prejudice and provide a full release of all claims.[3] To get there, class counsel[4] expended, over about seven years, more than 54,973 hours of uncompensated professional time on behalf of the direct purchaser class.

Class counsel now respectfully seek three things: (1) reimbursement of out-of-pocket litigation expenses totaling $3,965,558, (b) an award of attorneys' fees of one-third of the settlement (after first deducting for reimbursement of expenses from the total settlement amount), totaling $38,678,147,[5] and (c) a service award of $100,000 for Ahold in recognition of its service to the class.

Expenses. Class counsel have incurred approximately $3,965,558 in litigation-related expenses.[6] The largest component of this figure by far is expert fees, totaling approximately $2,798,527; this amount is not unexpected given the number of complex legal and factual issues (and the number of expert reports) involved here. The remaining expenditures were for expenses such as filing fees, court reporting fees, document management/database hosting fees, and travel costs to attend depositions and hearings.[7] We outline the safeguards used to assure the Court these expenses are reasonable.

Fees. The fee request is reasonable using the prevailing percentage-of-fund approach, and then deriving a percentage using either the holistic or mimic-the-market methods. With only a few outliers, district courts have awarded a full one-third fee in similar generic suppression and other pharmaceutical antitrust cases over the last fifteen years. Despite the unique challenges in this case, and the growing complexities, risk, and expense of pharmaceutical antitrust litigation generally, the settlement represents a significant recovery for members of the class. Using the lodestar cross-check sometimes, used in class action fee awards, the requested fees represent 130% of class counsel's reported lodestar (that is, a 1.3 multiplier at the hourly rates in effect at the time the work was performed),[8] a reasonable request given the nature of the case, the degree of risk undertaken in bringing the action, and the excellent result.

Service award. Class counsel also request that the Court approve a service award of [8] Total loadstar using hourly rates in effect at the time the work was performed equals $29,542,219. A fee award of $38,678,147 results in a multiplier of 1.31 ($38,678,147 ÷ 29,542,219 = 1.31). Class counsel also report their lodestar for all hours incurred in the case using the rates for each professional in effect in December 2019 when the case settled. See Kohn Decl. ¶ 109. Expressing the lodestar figure in terms of current rates because of the delay in payment of fees for the services provided is consistent with precedent in this Circuit. See Lipsett v. Blanco, 975 F.2d 934, 942-43 (1st Cir. 1992). The reported loadstar using 2019 rates is $31,684,741. Using this figure results in a multiplier of 1.22.

$100,000 to the class representative, Ahold, in recognition of its vital participation in this case and the time and effort expended in prosecuting the action on behalf of the class.[9]

II. BACKGROUND

In support of this motion, class counsel submit three things. First, the Kohn declaration describes in detail the work undertaken by class counsel from inception of this case through settlement. Second, each co-lead counsel firm provides a separate declaration summarizing the individual firm's involvement, hours expended by each professional, hourly rates, total lodestar from inception to settlement of the case, out-of-pocket expenses by category and any contributions to the joint litigation fund used to pay case related expenses.[10] Third, the Fitzpatrick declaration[11] provides empirical information of fee determinations in similar cases and provides a context for the fee request here.

The Court is too familiar with the procedural and substantive history of this matter. For the Court's convenience, a short summary of the litigation follows. As the Court knows, the direct purchasers coordinated much of their discovery and pre-trial work with the other two plaintiff groups, the end payers and the retailers.

A. The direct purchasers allege that the defendants violated federal antitrust law and imposed overcharges on the class.

Starting in March 2012, co-lead and class counsel for direct purchasers performed an independent investigation of the facts in this case—before the Supreme Court's decision in FTC

v. Actavis, Inc.[12] In May 2013, the first Loestrin 24 direct purchaser complaint was filed.[13] In October 2013, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred four actions pending in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to this district for consolidated pretrial proceedings.[14] In December 2013, the direct purchasers filed the first of three consolidated amended class action complaints.[15] Each complaint alleged that the defendants engaged in a wrongful anticompetitive scheme to impede and delay market entry of AB-rated, less expensive, generic versions of Warner Chilcott's brand name prescription drug, Loestrin 24.[16] The direct purchasers alleged that, as a result of the violations, they were forced to pay artificially inflated prices for branded products.[17]

In February 2014, the defendants moved to dismiss the direct purchasers' Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint.[18] This amended complaint included only a reverse payment claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. At the time, the Actavis decision was less than a year old, and there were few district court opinions interpreting it.[19] In September 2014, this Court dismissed the amended complaint, holding that only cash reverse payments are actionable under Actavis.[20]

The direct purchasers timely appealed the dismissal to the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.[21] Briefing in the First Circuit was voluminous, and the direct purchasers took the laboring oar on appeal. The direct purchasers submitted appellate briefing separate from the other plaintiffs[22] and helped facilitate five amicus briefs.[23] In February 2016, the First Circuit vacated the Court's decision and remanded for further proceedings.[24]

In May 2016, the direct purchasers filed their second amended complaint—a nearly 100-page pleading.[25] With the benefit of additional investigation, the direct purchasers added patent and hard switch-related claims against Warner Chilcott under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. The direct purchasers also bolstered the reverse payment claims by pleading more precise dollar figures attributable to the no-AG clause and Femring and Generess deals.[26]

The second amended complaint resulted in a renewed round of motion to dismiss briefing consisting of over 300 pages in total.[27] In August 2017, the Court upheld all of the direct purchasers' causes of action but dismissed claims against parent companies Allergan, plc and Actavis, Inc.[28]

B. The parties engage in extensive discovery.

While awaiting the Court's second motion to dismiss decision, the parties began discovery, both formal and informal, from parties and multiple non-parties.[29] The Court ordered production of documents to be substantially complete by October 5, 2017[30] and set the close of fact discovery on June 29, 2018.[31] While all parties worked to minimize discovery disputes, it was necessary for the plaintiffs to file several formal motions to compel, all of which required hearings before Magistrate Judge Sullivan.[32] The defendants and various non-party subpoena recipients produced over 410,000 documents totaling over 3.5 million pages and over a million lines of data.[33] All of this discovery needed to be analyzed. This was accomplished by dividing plaintiffs' counsel from all three plaintiff groups into various "issue teams" corresponding to each firm's expertise in a particular subject. In this way duplication of effort was largely avoided. Counsel for the direct purchasers was involved in nearly all issue teams.[34]

Under the deposition protocol negotiated by the parties (with the help and input of Magistrate Judge Sullivan), the parties deposed numerous individuals and non-parties. The plaintiffs deposed 27 fact witnesses. The direct purchasers were actively involved in nearly all fact depositions. The defendants took many depositions of non-parties in which the direct purchasers participated.[35]

Counsel for the direct purchasers also retained several experts to prepare expert reports and to testify at trial. For the sake of efficiency and economy, specific lawyers served as the primary point of contact with specific experts. The direct purchasers retained 13 testifying experts, who collectively issued 32 reports (opening reports and rebuttal reports), comprising thousands of pages of exhibits, and backup materials.[36] The defendants retained 17 expert witnesses to respond to the direct purchasers' experts and in support of their various defenses. In total, the defendants' experts issued 25 reports.[37] While these expert efforts were (sensibly) shared across the three plaintiff groups (direct class, end payer class, retailers), the efforts were a huge and complicated undertaking for all.

C. The Court certifies the direct purchaser class.

In November 2018, the parties completed briefing on direct purchaser class certification.[38] In February 2019, the Court held a full-day hearing on the issue. Despite the fact that the defendants raised all manner of arguments opposing class certification related to numerosity, impact, and typicality, the Court certified the following direct purchaser class:

> All persons or entities in the United States and its territories who purchased brand or generic Loestrin 24 directly from Warner [Chilcott] or Amneal at any time during the period from September 1, 2009, through and until June 3, 2015, and all persons or entities in the United States and its territories who purchased brand Minastrin 24 directly from Warner [Chilcott] at any time during the period from September 1, 2009, through and until March 14, 2017 (the "Class Period").
> Excluded from the Class are defendants, and their officers, directors, management, employees, subsidiaries, or affiliates, and, all federal governmental entities. Also excluded from the class are educational institutions such as universities and colleges.[39]

Following submission of requests for exclusion from the class submitted by certain entities that had independently filed actions against defendants, the Court excluded the retailer group (Walgreen Co., The Kroger Co., Safeway Inc., HEB Grocery Company L.P., Albertson's

D. The parties move for summary judgment and prepare for trial.

The Court considered two separate rounds of summary judgment briefing.

First, in July 2018, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment "due to lack of market power," a motion that included over 690 exhibits.[41] In October 2018, the plaintiffs counter-moved for summary judgment on market power, submitting two voluminous statements of fact and over 200 exhibits of their own.[42] Each side submitted multiple expert reports in support of their respective summary judgment motion. In March 2019, this Court held a full-day hearing on summary judgment related to the issue of market power, and in October 2019 this Court held a second hearing on the issue.

Second, in May 2019 the defendants filed a comprehensive summary judgment motion on all issues other than market power, including on plaintiffs' patent-related, reverse payment, and hard switch claims—again submitted with several hundred exhibits.[43] The plaintiffs opposed the motion, filing a responsive statement of facts,[44] an additional statement of facts[45] and several hundred exhibits of their own.[46] Counsel for direct purchasers took the lead role in compiling the plaintiffs' responsive and affirmative statements of facts—filings totaling 107 pages.[47] The direct purchasers also took on leadership roles in drafting the patent, reverse payment agreement and causation sections of plaintiffs' 60-page opposition brief.[48] In total, the summary judgment briefing for all issues comprised 523 pages of defense briefs and fact statements (exclusive of declarations, exhibits and appendices), 587 pages of plaintiff briefs and fact statements (again, exclusive of declarations, exhibits and appendices), and three days of oral argument.[49] In September 2019, this Court held a full day hearing.

During the fall and winter of 2019, with summary judgment motions pending, the parties continued to prepare for trial. The plaintiffs and defendants filed Daubert motions directed to most experts. The direct purchasers played an active role in drafting nearly all of the plaintiffs' 16 Daubert motions, most of which resulted in some limitation of the respective defense expert's testimony.[50] The defendants filed 8 Daubert motions pertinent to the direct purchaser case.[51]

In preparation for trial, the plaintiffs filed an omnibus motion in limine[52] consisting of 41 targeted motions, as well as a standalone motion in limine related to Warner Chilcott executives.[53] The defendants filed 9 motions in limine of their own,[54] all of which required opposition briefing by the plaintiffs.[55]

Due to the inability to compel the attendance at trial of certain witnesses, each party designated portions of a number of deposition transcripts for use at trial. The plaintiffs designated portions of 49 deposition transcripts, and the defendants designated portions of 95 transcripts.[56] In an initial exchange of potential trial exhibits, the plaintiffs designated 1,609 exhibits, while defendants designated 7,192 potential trial exhibits. The parties exchanged counter designations, lodged specific objections to nearly all the exhibits and deposition designations, and conducted many lengthy meet-and-confers on admissibility of exhibits.[57] Counsel for direct purchasers largely led these efforts.[58]

On December 8, 2019, the parties submitted a 231-page Joint Pretrial Memorandum that, as the Court instructed, would provide a "roadmap" for trial. To avoid duplication of effort and streamline the process, each subject-matter team was tasked with drafting their respective section. The direct purchasers extensively contributed to the patent, reverse payment, market power, and causation-related portions of the document. Given that this was a joint filing, it also required cooperation and negotiation with defense counsel.[59]

Several other important trial tasks were completed by the direct purchasers. On November 25, 2019, the parties filed competing sets of detailed jury instructions and verdict forms.[60] Counsel for the class led the drafting of plaintiffs' proposed instructions and verdict form and conducted the related research. Ultimately, the plaintiffs filed 131 detailed jury instructions spanning 179 pages.[61]

With trial scheduled to begin on January 6, 2020, the parties began the process, led by the Court, of vetting potential jurors through proposed jury questionnaires.[62] Counsel for direct purchasers also took on a leadership role in plaintiffs' jury selection—reviewing juror questionnaires and establishing criteria by which to vet potential jurors.

By the time of the December 2019 direct purchaser settlement, the plaintiffs had spent hundreds of hours reviewing and preparing the witnesses and documentary evidence necessary to try the case to a jury and had conducted a mock trial to help refine arguments to be presented at trial.[63]

E. The direct purchasers and the defendants settle the case for $120 million.

Settlement negotiations between direct purchaser class counsel and counsel for the defendants were quite typical for cases such as this—hard fought, arm's length and spanning about two years. In December of 2018, the parties' first formal attempt to mediate their dispute occurred at a mediation session before mediators Layn R. Phillips and David Murphy of Phillips ADR. The direct purchasers and defendants both submitted detailed mediation briefs with exhibits prior to the mediation. Settlement talks were unsuccessful at that time, and the parties continued to litigate.[64]

With trial looming, in December 2019, the direct purchasers and the defendants again explored settlement. On December 11, 2019, a mediation session was held at White & Case LLP's New York office, overseen by mediator David Murphy of Phillips ADR. On December 13, 2019, the parties entered into a binding settlement term sheet between direct purchaser counsel and counsel for defendants.[65] That term sheet was followed by a letter between the parties related to the terms of the proposed settlement.[66] Subsequently, the parties negotiated the terms of a full settlement agreement, consistent with and incorporating the terms of the December 13, 2019 term sheet.[67] On January 14, 2020, the parties executed the settlement agreement, thereby agreeing to settle all direct purchaser claims for a total cash payment of $120 million.[68] On March 23, 2020, this Court granted the settlement preliminary approval. On April 6, 2020 and pursuant to that order, notice was sent to all class members via First Class mail. The notice advised that class counsel would be filing their motion for fees, reimbursement of expense, and an incentive award on April 20, 2020, and that Class counsel would be seeking up to a fee of one-third of the common fund, after deduction of expenses.[69]

F. The Court denies all summary judgment motions.

On December 17, 2019—days after the direct purchasers and the defendants reached a binding agreement to settle, but with claims still pending by the end payer and retailer plaintiffs—this Court denied all motions for summary judgment.[70]

G. The First Circuit denies the defendants' appeal of class certification.

On January 7, 2020, the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit denied the defendants' Rule 23(f) petition for leave to appeal the Court's certification of a direct purchaser class.[71]

III. ARGUMENT

A. The request for approval of the direct purchasers' litigation expenses is reasonable and appropriate.

"[L]awyers whose efforts succeed in creating a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled not only to reasonable fees, but also to recover from the fund, as a general matter, expenses, reasonable in amount, that were necessary to bring the action to a climax."[72] The reasonableness of expenses is judged by the legitimate needs, size, and complexity of a case.[73]

Class counsel have incurred $3,965,558 in litigation-related expenses.[74] Litigation expenses were incurred by class counsel in two ways. First, most direct purchaser firms contributed to a common litigation fund from which common expenses were paid. These included such expenses as expert fees, court filing fees, and document hosting fees. Expenditures from the common litigation fund total $3,250,761.[75] Second, each direct purchaser firm advanced and kept track of their own firm's non-common litigation expenses, such as expenses related to travel and legal research. These class counsel firm litigation expenses total $492,947.92.[76] The requested reimbursement for expenses also includes payment for certain unpaid invoices associated with the case totaling $160,218, as well as an estimate for payment for future work to be performed by the claims administrator who will administer the settlement and distribute the net settlement funds and the class's economic expert who will assist the claims administrator in reviewing any data submitted in the claims process and calculating each class members' share of the net settlement fund.[77] These additional estimated future expenses to needed to bring the case to a close equal $61,631.[78]

Under the circumstances of this case, the request for approval of the direct purchasers' litigation expenses is reasonable and appropriate for several substantive and procedural reasons. Substantively, this figure is reasonable in a complex case such as this that settled shortly before trial. The expenses for which class counsel seek reimbursement are the type of costs routinely charged to fee-paying clients. The size of the expert costs is not unexpected given the number of complex legal and factual issues (and number of expert reports) involved in this matter.

Procedurally, the direct purchasers' expenses were independently reviewed under an accounting arrangement prior to ex parte submission to the Court and were submitted on a quarterly basis by procedures this Court established before discovery. The ongoing coordination of efforts between the three plaintiff groups largely assured the lack of duplication of expert and other shared costs (e.g., document database, certain deposition expenses).

B. The request for approval of a percentage-of-fund fee of one-third of the settlement fund (net of expenses) is reasonable and appropriate.

Under Rule 23(h), "[i]n a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees and nontaxable costs that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement."[79] Fee awards encourage the prosecution of private antitrust actions, litigation the Supreme Court has recognized as necessary to assure compliance with and effective enforcement of the antitrust laws.[80] As the First Circuit has affirmed, lawyers who create a common fund pursuing such

Here, the efforts of class counsel resulted in the creation of a common fund of $120 million. By any measure, this is a substantial amount of money to compensate direct purchasers for their antitrust injuries.

1. The "percentage of the fund" methodology is the prevailing method for calculating a reasonable class counsel fee.

The Supreme Court holds that a "percentage of the fund" calculation may be appropriate for determining common fund fee awards.[82] Under this method, courts select a percentage that they believe is fair to counsel, multiplying the settlement amount by that percentage to arrive at a fee award.

In the First Circuit, district courts have the discretion to use either the percentage of the fund method or the lodestar method in common fund cases.[83] The lodestar method, under which courts award counsel a fee equal to the number of hours they worked on the case multiplied by both a reasonable hourly rate and a discretionary multiplier based on the risk of non-recovery and other factors, has fallen out of favor in common fund cases.[84] This is because it was often difficult to calculate the lodestar, and the method did not align the interests of counsel with the interests of the plaintiffs.[85]

Instead, this Court, other courts in this district, and courts throughout the country often apply the percentage-of-fund method in calculating attorneys' fees.[86] This method of calculating fees "appropriately aligns the interests of the class with the interests of class counsel . . . ."[87] The vast majority of courts of appeals now permit or direct application of the percentage method.[88]

In determining what percentage to apply, court apply one of the three approaches this Court described in Cabletron—the holistic approach, the mimic-the-market approach and a benchmark approach. Commonly, courts in this district use the holistic approach with a lodestar cross-check. As one court explained, "the weight of the caselaw . . . approves of percentage of the fund as the methodology for determining attorneys' fees, with a lodestar calculation as a pragmatic cross-check."[89]

The mimic-the-market approach, utilized primarily in the Seventh Circuit,[90] has also been used by district courts in this Circuit to affix the appropriate percentage.[91] Absent some bidding process for class counsel services at the beginning of the case, in utilizing this approach a district court estimates what the percentage fee would have been in the market for class counsel's services prior to the commencement of the case. To do so, one examines various factors, including fee contracts large stakes class members may have entered into with their counsel prior to the litigation, fee contracts large stakes plaintiffs may have signed with counsel in similar litigation, and the fee percentages awarded by other district court judges in similar litigation.

In this case, we respectfully suggest that application of either the holistic approach or the mimic-the-market approach yields the same result—selection of a percentage of one-third of the common fund. Under the holistic approach—which admittedly has been previously described as "unprincipled"[92] when used to simply backfill a result—class counsel immodestly suggest the facts of this case hit each of the numerous considerations in favor of the proposed one-third fee award, thus avoiding the potential for an arbitrary result. Under the mimic-the-market approach,

Prof. Fitzpatrick addresses each of the relevant factors in the context of this litigation[93] and concludes that they more than support the one-third fee request here.[94]

2. The requested one-third fee is fair and reasonable.[95]

a. Courts regularly approve a one-third fee.

"[I]n this circuit, percentage fee awards range from 20% to 35% of the fund. This approach mirrors that taken by the federal courts in other jurisdictions."[96] In awarding a one-third fee in In Relafen Antitrust Litigation,[97] Judge Young acknowledged the appropriateness of such a fee in light of the complexity of the legal and regulatory issues inherent in pharmaceutical antitrust cases and held that a one-third fee "is not unreasonable as a matter of law."[98] Similarly, in approving final distribution and awarding attorneys' fees of one-third of the settlement amount in Asacol, the court considered the factors set forth in Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp.[99] and Goldberger v. Integrated Resources, Inc.[100] and found, inter alia:

- The settlement conferred "a monetary benefit to every member of the Class and the settlement amount [was] substantial;"[101]
- Class counsel (including several of the firms serving as counsel here) were "skillful, experienced counsel" who had "effectively and efficiently prosecuted

[93] The third factor, fee percentages awarded by other district court judges in similar litigation, is also discussed at length below in the context of the percentage of the fund analysis.

[94] See Fitzpatrick Decl. ¶¶ 35-44.

[95] For convenience, reference is made to class counsel's request for a "one-third fee." However, the requested fee is actually less than one third. Class counsel propose to calculate their fee based on the remaining funds in the settlement after deduction for reimbursement of reasonable out-of-pocket litigation expenses. Deducting expenses prior to applying the 1/3 requested fee amount results in a fee request that is actually 32.23% of the gross $120 million settlement amount.

this complex action on behalf of the Class;"[102]

- Class counsel had undertaken "numerous and significant risks on behalf of members of the class with no guarantee that they would be compensated;"[103]
- Class counsel "reasonably expended thousands of hours, and incurred [substantial] out of pocket expenses, in prosecuting the action, with no guarantee of recovery;"[104] and
- "Fee awards similar to the fee requested by Class Counsel here have been awarded in similar cases, including numerous Hatch-Waxman antitrust class actions similarly alleging impeded entry of generic drugs."[105]

Each of these observations applies equally in this case. Class counsel's request for one-third of the net settlement fund falls within that range and has been regularly approved in other direct purchaser pharmaceutical antitrust class cases.

To avoid the notion of cherry-picking examples, we provide below a summary of fee percentage determinations from all other generic suppression, antitrust direct purchaser actions that are publicly reported. We are of the view this is the most apt comparison. The cases share many features; they (i) occur against a uniquely complicated regulatory and business background, (ii) involve subject areas in antitrust, patents, FDA regulation, pharmaceutical market dynamics and medicine, (iii) impose huge expert costs, largely from multi-disciplinary areas of expertise, (iv) pose complicated and often cutting-edge legal issues, and (v) require an understandably longer time to litigate.

In direct purchaser, generic delay pharmaceutical cases over the past fifteen years, court have awarded a one-third fee (on either the gross settlement amount, or the net after payment of

The few exceptions to the cases reaching a one-third determination show how the one-third portion should apply here. In Provigil, for example, the court granted a fee award of 27.5% in 2015, but that settlement involved a $512 million cash payment—one of the highest cash payments ever awarded in a pharmaceutical case—and generated a $140.8 million fee that represented a multiplier of 4.12 on the total lodestar.[108] The courts in Aggrenox (2017) and Paxil (2005) similarly departed from the norm, each granting a 20% fee award. But these two cases both settled early in the litigation. In Aggrenox, the case settled for $146 million before any class certification or summary judgment briefing had been submitted and after only a few preliminary depositions had been taken.[109] In Paxil, the case settled for $100 million almost before it even got underway; the 20% fee awarded in that case still amounted to a 15.6 multiplier on barely $1 million in total lodestar.[110]

Delayed generic entry antitrust cases such as this and the circumstances surrounding them have only grown more complex, riskier, longer, and more expensive over the years. The components of the alleged anticompetitive conduct—patent fraud, sham litigation, promises related to the timing of authorized generics, product hops, etc.—evolve, requiring more decisions by the appellate courts.[111] The parties engage in more discovery battles, including battles over tens of thousands of withheld documents.[112] In time, class certification standards have become increasingly more rigorous: the Supreme Court recently held that "at the class-certification stage . . . , any model supporting a 'plaintiff's damages case must be consistent with its liability case, particularly with respect to the alleged anticompetitive effect of the violation.' And for purposes of Rule 23, courts must conduct a more 'rigorous analysis' to determine whether that is so."[113] As a result of these changes, the number of experts involved in these cases grows. And the cases often take more years to resolve.[114]

Some courts apply a "lodestar cross-check" on attorneys' fees requests. In Prograf, Judge Zobel applied the lodestar cross-check and found that the request for attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses was reasonable at a multiplier of 2.35.[115] Here, the requested fee award would provide plaintiffs with a very modest multiplier of 1.31.[116]

Class counsel respectfully submit that a fee award of one-third is fair here, considering that class counsel have worked for seven years without compensation, without any guarantee of compensation, and without any guarantee that millions of dollars of self-funded, out-of-pocket costs would ever be reimbursed. Since a fee above one-third may be merited in some cases of similar complexity and challenge, the fee here is reasonable.[117]

b. The reasonableness factors commonly applied in this Circuit support class counsel's request for a one-third fee.

The First Circuit has not prescribed a particular set of factors for assessing an application for attorneys' fees and has instead allowed district courts to exercise their discretion in applying appropriate factors. Factors the district courts have applied include: (1) the size of the fund and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the skill, experience, and efficiency of the attorneys; (3) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (4) the risks of the litigation; (5) the amount of time devoted to the case by counsel; (6) awards in similar cases; and (7) public policy considerations, [116] See Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 81-82 (noting 1.0-4.0 range for most multipliers).

[117] As the Western District of Oklahoma noted, "An award of forty percent (40%) of the settlement value is well within the range of acceptable fee awards in common fund cases." Chieftain Royalty Co. v. Laredo Petroleum, Inc., No. 12-cv-1319, 2015 WL 2254606, at *3 (W.D. Okla May 13, 2015) (citing cases); see, e.g., Singleton v. Domino's Pizza, LLC, 976 F. Supp. 2d 665, 685 (D. Md. 2013) ("In considering awards in similar cases, courts look to cases of similar size, rather than similar subject matter. Fees awarded under 'the percentage-of-recovery' method in settlements under $100 million have ranged from 15% to 40%."); Stoner v. CBA Info. Servs., 352 F. Supp. 2d 549, 553 (E.D. Pa. 2005) (same). This mirrors other contingency fee cases: "In non-class contingency fee litigation, a 30% to 40% contingency fee is typical." Montague v. Dixie Nat. Life Ins. Co., No. 09-cv-687, 2011 WL 3626541, at *2-3 (D.S.C. Aug. 17, 2011); dee Flournoy v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., No. CV 205-184, 2007 WL 1087279, at *2 (S.D. Ga. Apr. 6, 2007) ("Forty percent fee contracts are common for complex and difficult litigation . . . ."); In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 03-cv-85, 2005 WL 3008808, at *16 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2005) ("Attorneys regularly contract for contingent fees between 30% and 40% with their clients in non-class, commercial litigation.").

Fees of 40% of the common fund have been awarded in numerous class cases, including those deemed by the court to be relatively straightforward. Jernigan v. Protas, Spivok & Collins, LLC, No. 16-cv-3058, 2017 WL 4176217, at *8 (D. Md. Sept. 20, 2017) (approving 40% fee even after finding the case was not complex but was "undoubtedly important to the class members" and recognizing that class members, "in all likelihood, would have had no recourse in the absence of a class action"); Chieftain Royalty Co., 2015 WL 2254606, at *2 (awarding 40% attorneys' fees in a $6.7 million case litigated for almost three years).

if any.[118] Applying these factors to this case demonstrates that the fee request here is reasonable.

c. The fund is significant in size and benefits an entire industry.

"Analyzing net dollars and cents results accomplished by counsel for their clients is often the most influential factor in assessing the reasonableness of any attorneys' fee award."[119] The settlement here represents a significant percentage recovery of class damages. The direct purchaser's expert estimated that, depending on the date on which the jury determined a generic Loestrin 24 would have entered the market, single damages ranged from a high of $640 million to a low of $145 million. Accordingly, the $120 million recovery represents between 18.75% and 82.75% of the class's single damages—a significant achievement given the complexities and uncertainties involved in this case.[120]

The $120 million fund created by the settlement also provides significant benefits to direct purchasers of Loestrin 24: their overpayments for brand and generic Loestrin 24 Fe and brand Minastrin 24 will be partially reimbursed, and their interest in enforcement of the federal antitrust laws will be validated. The fund will benefit an entire industry: the class includes the vast majority of the direct purchasers of brand and generic oral contraceptives in the United States.

d. The experience, skill, and efficiency of the attorneys involved, as demonstrated by their work before this Court, justifies the request.

"[T]he quality of representation is best measured by results."[121] The results here show success. Class counsel's experience, skill, and efforts resulted in the creation of a $120 million settlement fund, despite vigorous opposition and a complex set of factual and legal claims and defenses.

Class counsel have been active in the area of pharmaceutical antitrust litigation for more than fifteen years (some more than 20). Over the same period, one or more of class counsel has served as court-appointed lead counsel, co-lead counsel, or a member of the steering committee in virtually every pharmaceutical antitrust action litigated across the country. The area of law is highly specialized, and successful class litigation in this area requires knowledge of unique legal, regulatory, scientific, and industry-specific facts implicating patent law, antitrust law, and FDA regulations. Class counsel used their specialized knowledge and years of experience to develop a trial-ready record while litigating against some of the largest law firms in the country, including White & Case LLP and Adler Pollock & Sheehan P.C. (counsel for defendants in this case). With the benefit of a full record and with trial imminent, class counsel was able to negotiate a favorable settlement with defendants, securing guaranteed compensation for the class without the substantial risks, continuing costs and uncertainties of trial.

e. The complexity of this litigation supports the requested fee.

The complexity of this case weighs heavily in favor of the requested fee award. This case involved intertwined legal issues spanning several areas of law, along with complicated scientific and medical information, patent and regulatory issues, and antitrust economics. Class counsel have had to demonstrate, factually and legally, that the defendants' conduct was anticompetitive and illegal, and that the class incurred significant overcharge damages as a result of those violations.

Having closely supervised this case for years, the Court is familiar with the parties' litigation activities and they are recounted for the Court in detail in the accompanying declaration in support of this motion.[122]

f. The risks of litigation support the requested fee.

Courts recognize the risk assumed by an attorney as a key factor in determining an appropriate fee.[123] In this case, class counsel devoted enormous resources and millions of dollars in expenses to an action in which the allegations and defenses were complex and the plaintiffs' burden of proof was challenging, and there was no guarantee that the time and costs would ever be reimbursed.

Trial of this case would also have been risky.[124] The defendants raised vigorous defenses that presented significant legal and factual hurdles. The direct purchasers bore the burden of proving to a lay jury that, among other things, Warner Chilcott engaged in an anticompetitive scheme to impede generic competition for Loestrin 24, that it had market power, that the alleged reverse payments constituted a large and unjustified payment for delay of generic Loestrin 24, that Warner Chilcott engaged in an illegal product hop to Minastrin 24, and that defendants' conduct caused harm to the direct purchaser class.

June 8, 1994) (granting final approval, noting that "even assuming that plaintiffs ultimately would have prevailed on liability, they faced the risk that they could not establish damages . . . that is achieved by this Settlement Agreement").

Any recovery in this case was hardly a foregone conclusion;[125] in recent years, pharmaceutical antitrust cases have met with mixed results in the courts.[126] Class counsel's success in achieving a favorable result despite significant hurdles further demonstrates the reasonableness of the fee request. Class counsel bore significant risk.

g. Class counsel devoted a substantial amount of time to this case.

Class counsel devoted substantial time to prosecuting the class's claims. In In re Relafen, the court took special note of the "mass of discovery" adduced in that case. The court pointed to "hundreds of hours" spent with experts, and the review of "hundreds of boxes of documents."[127] In this case, class counsel collectively expended more than 54,973 hours from inception of the case to the eve of trial. The one-third fee request here is entirely reasonable considering this immense effort.

Class counsel had every incentive to work efficiently, and the time expended is not at all surprising given the defendants' aggressive defense, the skill of their counsel, the complexity of the issues, and a voluminous record.

h. The request is reasonable when compared to empirical evidence of awards in similar cases.

Professor Fitzpatrick's empirical study found that the most common percentages awarded by all federal courts using the percentage method were 25%, 30% and 33%, with a fee award of 33% falling within the most populous range of fee awards nationwide.[128] While the size of the settlement may have an inverse relation to the fee percentage awarded,[129] and there is no doubt $120 million is a large settlement, as Professor Fitzpatrick points out, "nothing in the First Circuit law requires that fee percentages decline as settlement size increases."[130] He further explains that decreasing percentage fee awards merely because of the size of the settlement can undermine public policy by creating "perverse incentive for class counsel to settle too early for too little."[131] The case law is replete with examples of fee awards of 33% or more in large cases.[132] Courts in this circuit and across the country have approved fees comparable to the one requested here in cases yielding similar recoveries, even when the recovery is large.[133] The requested award of one-third in this case is thus fully supported by the "comparables."

i. Public policy considerations fully support the requested fee.

The requested fee supports recognized public policy goals.

First, the requested fee furthers the public policy goal of "providing lawyers with sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases that serve the public interest."[134] Prof. Fitzpatrick opines that "the percentage requested here will help further the social goal of appropriately incentivizing lawyers to invest properly in meritorious cases like this one in the future."[135] Second, this litigation itself furthered "significant societal interest in obtaining redress for prescription drug [purchasers] whose harms could not, given the cost of litigation, be pursued on an individual basis."[136] Third, "the public interest is also served by the defendants' disgorgement of the proceeds of predatory marketplace behavior."[137]

3. The lodestar cross-check confirms the reasonableness of the fee request.

Although not required, courts in this Circuit have endorsed the "lodestar calculation as a pragmatic cross-check" of a percentage-based fee award.[138] A lodestar cross-check here confirms the reasonableness of the one third fee requested.

The reported total lodestar accumulated by class counsel through the date of settlement is $29,542,219. The requested fee of $38,678,147, representing one-third of the settlement funds (after deduction of reimbursement for reasonable litigation expenses totaling $3,965,558), results in a multiplier of approximately 1.31.[139]

Pursuant to the Court's direction, all contemporaneous time records, as well as multiple formatted reports for each quarter and cumulatively from inception of the case, were reviewed, certified and submitted to Magistrate Judge Sullivan quarterly by an independent public accountant.[140] After reviewing these records, Magistrate Judge Sullivan met quarterly with one or more representative of co-lead counsel to review the records and provide feedback on hours, rates and expense charges. This feedback was incorporated by counsel moving forward in the case so as to ensure that timekeeping and case expenses were in line with the Court's expectations. Class counsel will make each of those quarterly reports available to the Court again, should the Court desire to review them. In further support of this motion, class counsel have also provided sworn declarations from each firm involved in the litigation that explain how much time and expenses were incurred in this case. These declarations are appended to the Kohn Declaration.[141]

Even if some adjustment were to be made on the rates or time recorded by class counsel, under any view the resultant multiplier is entirely reasonable in view of the range customarily awarded in like cases.[142] Professor Fitzpatrick's empirical study found that of 204 cases where the district court used the percentage of the fund method with a lodestar crosscheck, the multiplier ranged from .07 to 10.3 with a mean and median of 1.65 and 1.34 respectively.[143] Of the seven settlements between $100 million and $250 million in Prof. Fitzpatrick's study where the multiplier could be determined, the average multiplier was 3.47 and the median was 2.20.[144]

[140] The accountant, Robert A. Zagrodny, C.P.A., has provided a supplemental declaration in support of this motion, including the certification of certain payments made for expenses owed out of the joint litigation fund maintained by counsel since the last quarterly report submitted to Magistrate Judge Sullivan for the fourth quarter of 2019. See Decl. of Robert A. Zagrodny, CPA, attached as Ex. H to the Kohn Declaration.

[141] See Kohn Decl. Exs. A-G; see also Rite Aid, 396 F.3d at 306-07 ("The district courts may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records.").

[142] This requested award is well within the range of those multipliers accepted by courts in similar complex and long-running litigation. In Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., the Ninth Circuit created an appendix of fee awards and multipliers on 24 common fund cases from 1996 to 2001, and found "a range of 0.6 - 19.6 with most (20 of 24, or 83%) from 1.0 to 4.0 and a bare majority (13 of 24, or 54%) in the 1.5 - 3.0 range." 290 F.3d 1043, 1051 n.6 (9th Cir. 2002). In a similar pharmaceutical antitrust class action, Judge Young relied on the Vizcaino analysis in approving a 2.02 multiplier. Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 82.

[143] Fitzpatrick Decl. ¶ 33.

Class counsel's request for a fee resulting in a 1.31 multiplier is eminently reasonable. It represents only a modest premium over straight hourly compensation, a premium that appropriately reflects the fact that counsel were not paid hourly, and all work was done on a contingent basis.

C. The request for approval of a service award for the class representative is reasonable and appropriate.

"Service awards serve an important function in promoting class action settlements."[145] These payments serve "to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred."[146] "Courts have consistently found service awards to be an efficient and productive way to encourage members of a class to become class representatives."[147] As "a named plaintiff is an essential ingredient of any class action," a service award is an appropriate means "to encourage or induce an individual to participate."[148]

The direct purchasers request that the Court award the class representative, Ahold, a service award of $100,000 for its service to the class and for the time it expended in prosecuting this case. Ahold diligently and completely fulfilled its obligation to the class. It stepped forward to assert the class's interests by filing suit, undertaking the public service of contributing to enforcement of the nation's antitrust laws. Ahold actively protected the class's interests by undertaking all the responsibilities involved in being a named class representative plaintiff, including monitoring the progress of the case and responding to discovery requests.

Discovery was a significant burden to Ahold. Ahold conducted broad document searches and collections, resulting in production of nearly 9,000 documents to defendants.[149] Ahold also prepared for and provided deposition testimony pursuant to individual and Rule 30(b)(6) deposition notices. As trial neared, two Ahold employees prepared to participate at trial.[150] These efforts required employees of Ahold to take time away from their regular job functions—time which has gone uncompensated for the entire seven years this litigation has been pending. The $100,000 requested as a service award for Ahold is within the acceptable range of payments awarded by other courts.[151]

IV. CONCLUSION

Class counsel worked diligently and efficiently over the course of many years in this complex, hard-fought litigation, all without any guarantee of compensation, and secured $120 million for the class. We request that this Court (a) approve the requested expense reimbursement ($3,965,558), (b) approve the requested percentage-of-fund one-third fee ($38,678,147), and (c) approve the service award to the class representative Ahold ($100,000).

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

IN RE: CATHODE RAY TUBE (CRT) ANTITRUST LITIGATION	MDL No. 1917 Case No. C-07-5944 JST
This Order Relates To: ALL DIRECT ACTION PLAINTIFFS	ORDER ON ATTORNEYS' FEES AND EXPENSES

Now before the Court is a motion for approval of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses for the Direct Purchaser Plaintiff ("DPP") class. See ECF No. 4055 ("Mot."). DPPs originally sought $38,235,000 in combined attorneys' fees plus $1,927,392.12 in expenses, both to be paid from a settlement fund of $127,450,000.[1] No one objected. See ECF No. 4114 at 2. Plaintiffs subsequently reduced their expense demand to $1,534,748.94. See ECF No. 4264 ("Supp. Mot."). The Court held oral argument on this motion on December 15, 2015.

The Court has already granted final approval of the settlements and, by separate order, has approved incentive awards for ten named plaintiffs.[2] See ECF Nos. 4055-1 ¶¶ 59-67; 1412 (Chunghwa and Philips, settling for $10 million and $15 million, respectively); 1508 (Panasonic, settling for $17.5 million); 1621 (LG, settling for $25 million); 1791 (Toshiba, settling for $13.5 million); 3931 (Hitachi and Samsung SDI, settling for $13.45 million and $33 million, respectively), 4299 (approving incentive awards). After careful consideration and good cause

[1] Class Counsel already paid $2,867,395.32 in expenses directly from the Settlement Fund, as previously authorized by the Court. ECF Nos. 1506, 1507, 1833. In this motion, Class Counsel seek reimbursement of the balance of $1,927,392.12 that they advanced themselves.

[2] Since the instant motion was filed, the Court has granted final approval for a settlement between DPPs and Thomson. Fees for that settlement do not appear to be incorporated into this motion. See ECF No. 4260.

appearing, the Court now GRANTS the motion for attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses for the reasons set forth below.

I. BACKGROUND

The parties are familiar with the facts of this case, and the Court has already summarized the relevant facts as to this settlement in a prior order. See ECF No. 4260.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

"While attorneys' fees and costs may be awarded in a certified class action where so authorized by law or the parties' agreement, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h), courts have an independent obligation to ensure that the award, like the settlement itself, is reasonable, even if the parties have already agreed to an amount." In re Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d 935, 941 (9th Cir. 2011). "Where a settlement produces a common fund for the benefit of the entire class," as here, "courts have discretion to employ either the lodestar method or the percentage-of-recovery method" to determine the reasonableness of attorneys' fees. Id. at 942. "Because the benefit to the class is easily quantified in common-fund settlements," the Ninth Circuit permits district courts "to award attorneys a percentage of the common fund in lieu of the often more time-consuming task of calculating the lodestar." Id. "Applying this calculation method, courts [in the Ninth Circuit] typically calculate 25% of the fund as the 'benchmark' for a reasonable fee award, providing adequate explanation in the record of any 'special circumstances' justifying a departure." Id. (citing Six (6) Mexican Workers v. Ariz. Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1311 (9th Cir. 1990)). However, the benchmark should be adjusted when the percentage recovery would be "either too small or too large in light of the hours devoted to the case or other relevant factors." Six (6) Mexican Workers, 904 F.2d at 1311. "[W]here awarding 25% of a 'megafund' would yield windfall profits for class counsel in light of the hours spent on the case, courts should adjust the benchmark percentage or employ the lodestar method instead." Id.; see also In re Bluetooth Headset Products Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d at 942 (9th Cir. 2011) (citing Six (6) Mexican Workers, 904 F.2d at 1311).

An attorney is entitled to "recover as part of the award of attorney's fees those out-of-pocket expenses that would normally be charged to a fee paying client." Harris v. Marhoefer, 24

F.3d 16, 19 (9th Cir. 1994) (citation omitted). An attorney seeking an expense award should file an itemized list of her expenses by category, listing the total amount advanced for each category, allowing the Court to assess whether the expenses are reasonable. Wren v. RGIS Inventory Specialists, No. 06-cv-05778-JCS, 2011 WL 1230826, at *30 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 1, 2011), supplemented, No. 06-cv-05778-JCS, 2011 WL 1838562 (N.D. Cal. May 13, 2011).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Attorneys' Fees

DPPs move the Court for $38,235,000 in aggregate attorneys' fees, split among thirty-six (36) distinct law firms. Mot. at 1. The requested fee represents thirty percent of the overall $127,450,000 million settlement fund.

The "benchmark" percentage for an award of attorneys' fees in a class action in this circuit is 25 percent. In re Bluetooth Headset Prods. Liab. Litig., 654 F.3d at 942. But in a "megafund" settlement of this size, resort to the Ninth Circuit's 25 percent "benchmark" is of little use in determining an appropriate attorney's fee. See In re Washington Pub. Power Supply Sys. Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1297 (9th Cir. 1994) ("Because a court must consider the fund's size in light of the circumstances of the particular case, we agree with the district court that the 25 percent 'benchmark' is of little assistance in a case such as this."). In fact, sometimes courts will award fees of less than 25 percent in megafund cases. See Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1052 (9th Cir.2002) (listing percentage of fund fee awards in cases with class funds of $50-$200 million from 1996-2001, showing approximately half above 25 percent and half below 25 percent).

Close examination of the cases listed in Vizcaino, however, shows that with only one exception, Fanning v. Acromed Corp., No. 1014, 2000 WL 1622741 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 23, 2000), the fees awarded in those cases were a multiple of the lodestar in the case. And in the one exception, Fanning, the only reason the Court awarded an attorneys' fee in an amount lower than the attorneys' lodestar was that the Court lacked sufficient funds to make a more generous award. Id. at *9 ("[T]he court is dealing with a limited fund and must apportion a fee award that totals only 12 percent of that fund, considerably less than either the current or historical lodestars."). Indeed, when objection is made to the use of a percentage award in a megafund case, it is usually on the ground that a flat percentage results in a windfall to plaintiffs' counsel relative to their lodestar. In re Washington Pub. Power Supply Sys. Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1297 (9th Cir. 1994); see also 1 Robert L. Rossi, Attorneys' Fees § 7:9 (3d ed. 2015) (citing cases) (noting that because of economies of scale, "fee awards in 'megafund' common fund cases frequently represent much lower percentages of the total fund").

Here, the record supports an award of 30 percent, even given the size of the settlement fund. First, counsel here has expended far more work -- over ninety-five thousand hours -- and taken upon themselves more risk -- spanning eight years of litigation -- than is present in a normal class action suit. See Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1047-1050 (awarding a fee in excess of 25 percent for high risks, effort, sophisticated work, and good results obtained by counsel); see also In re Pac. Enters. Sec. Litig., 47 F.3d 373, 379 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Six (6) Mexican Workers for the proposition that 25 percent is the benchmark in this circuit yet affirming an award of fees for 33 percent due, in part, to substantial risk undertaken by counsel). Second, no class member has objected to the proposed settlement or proposed fee award. ECF No. 4114; see Ching v. Siemens Indus., Inc., No. 11-CV-04838-MEJ, 2014 WL 2926210, at *8 (N.D. Cal. June 27, 2014). Third, an award of fees of this size is consistent with decisions by Judge Illston in a similar multidistrict litigation case and awards by other judges in this district. See In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig. ("LCD"), No. MDL 3:07-MD-1827 SI, 2011 WL 7575003, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 27, 2011) (30 percent); LCD II, No. M 07-1827 SI, 2013 WL 149692, at *1-2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2013) (30 percent); LCD III, No. M 07-1827 SI, 2013 WL 1365900, at *7-8 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 3, 2013), appeal dismissed (July 12, 2013), appeal dismissed (June 10, 2014), appeal dismissed (June 12, 2014), appeal dismissed (June 13, 2014) (28.6 percent); In re: Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litigation, Case No. 07-md-1819-CW (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2011) (Dkt. No. 1370) (30 percent); In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., M-02-1486, 2007 WL 2416513 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2007), at *1 (25 percent); In re Optical Disk Drive Antitrust Litig., Case No. 10-md-2143 RS (N.D. Cal. July 23, 2015) (Dkt. No. 1658) (30 percent).

Lastly, and most importantly, the Court has cross-checked this award against DPPs' lodestar. The Court has reviewed the documentation provided by DPPs and agrees with their calculation of an anticipated lodestar of $43,335,517.50. See Mot. at 1, 22; see also ECF No. 4055 Exs. 2, 4-38. Thus, the fee multiplier is 0.8823. This multiplier confirms the reasonableness of the award. Cf. In re High-Tech Emp. Antitrust Litig., No. 11-CV-02509-LHK, 2015 WL 5158730, at *10-11 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 2, 2015) (approving attorneys' fees for less than 30 percent but with a lodestar multiplier of 2.5); see also Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1052-54 (conducing a survey of attorneys' fees in "megafund" cases and finding that 83 percent of such cases award a multiplier from 1.0-4.0).

B. Expenses

DPPs originally requested a total of $4,794,747.44 in reimbursable expenses. Of this amount, counsel seeks approval of the $2,867,395.32 already paid from the Settlement Fund, as previously authorized by the Court, ECF Nos. 1506, 1507, 1833, and reimbursement of the balance of $1,927,392.12 that they advanced themselves. See Mot. at 23. The aggregate itemized claimed costs were as follows:

1. Document management: $283,694.51
2. Mediation costs: $83,724.42
3. Special Masters: $186,644.14
4. Translation costs: $127,083.17
5. Court filing fees: $6,352.59
6. Expert witnesses: $3,076,506.85
7. FedEx costs: $14,339.14
8. Transcript costs: $166,311.46
9. Online legal research: $245,126.87
10. Messenger/Delivery: $788.60
11. In-house copying: $140,085.84
12. Professional copying: $12,083.24
13. Postage charges: $1,331.39
14. Service of Process: $22,789.36
15. Phone/Fax costs: $35,282.68
16. Travel/meal costs: $392,643.18

As discussed at the December 15, 2015 hearing, the claimed travel and meal costs included many items that were clearly inappropriate, including first class airfare, expensive meals and wine, social drinks with co-counsel, and hotel rooms costing upwards of $3,500 per night. ECF No. 4266. The Court expressed its unwillingness to approve these expenses, which one Plaintiffs' lawyer correctly described as "pure nonsense." Id. The Court further noted its reluctance to again spend the time poring over now-largely suspect meal and travel requests and gave counsel an opportunity to submit a revised request by December 22, 2015. Id. Counsel instead withdrew their request for reimbursement of meal and travel expenses. ECF No. 4264. The Court therefore removes that line item from counsel's expense request.

The Court finds the remaining expenses to be fair and reasonable, approves the $2,867,395.32 already paid from the Settlement Fund, and grants the motion for the reimbursement in the reduced amount of $1,534,748.94.

IV. CONCLUSION

The Court hereby grants in full the request for attorneys' fees in the amount of $38,235,000, approves the $2,867,395.32 already paid from the Settlement Fund, and grants reimbursement of all claimed expenses except those related to travel and meals in the amount of $1,534,748.94. Therefore, the Court orders a total of $39,769,784.94 be paid from the settlement fund to counsel for DPPs for reallocation among the 36 firms consistent with its motion as modified, see Supp. Mot., and approved herein.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

NOTICE OF MOTION AND MOTION

TO ALL PARTIES AND THEIR COUNSEL OF RECORD:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that at 10:00 a.m. on October 23, 2015, Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") and their counsel ("Class Counsel") will, and hereby do move before the Honorable Samuel Conti, United States District Judge, at the United States Courthouse, 450 Golden Gate Avenue, Courtroom 1, San Francisco, California, for an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of 30% of the Settlement Fund ($38,235,000) plus interest, reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $1,927,392.12. DPPs also seek approval of $2,867,395.32 in expenses paid with settlement funds. This motion is brought pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h), 54(b) and 54(d)(2).

This motion is made on the grounds that (a) such fees are fair and reasonable in light of Class Counsel's efforts in creating the Settlement Fund; (b) the requested fees comport with the Ninth Circuit case law in common fund cases; and (c) the expenses for which reimbursement is sought were reasonably and necessarily incurred in connection with the prosecution of this action.

This motion is based upon this Memorandum of Points and Authorities; the Declaration of R. Alexander Saveri in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses; the proposed order submitted herewith; the declarations of Class Counsel, and other records, pleadings, and papers filed in this action; and upon such argument and further pleadings as may be presented to the Court at the hearing on this motion.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

I. INTRODUCTION

Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") and their counsel ("Class Counsel") respectfully submit this Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for an Award of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses. DPPs have achieved an excellent result for the class. They have secured settlements with all seven of the original defendant groups totaling $127.45 million (the "Settlement Fund"). To do so, Class Counsel have invested over $43,335,517.50 in time and $1,927,392 in out of pocket expenses since this case began almost eight years ago. DPPs now seek an award of attorneys' fees of $38,235,000—30% of the Settlement Fund. DPPs also seek reimbursement of their litigation expenses in the amount of $1,927,392.12, and approval of $2,867,395.32 in expenses paid with settlement funds.

Class Counsel have prosecuted this case on a purely contingent basis. The settlements were achieved in the face of a tremendously hard fought defense, fueled by Defendants' near limitless resources. The settlements represent excellent recoveries for the class, and the fee class counsel seeks is eminently fair in light of the mammoth investment of time and money they have made and the substantial risks they have undertaken. Indeed, Class Counsel seek over $5 million less than the value of time that they have incurred to date in the prosecution of the case.

As detailed in the accompanying declarations, the work done by Class Counsel was reasonable and necessary, of high quality, and efficiently performed. Among other things, Class Counsel have:

- Conducted an initial investigation of this case to develop the theories and facts that formed the basis of the allegations against Defendants. The research included a review of publicly available information regarding the CRT industry and consultation with industry experts and economists prior to the filing of the complaints (see e.g., Declaration of R. Alexander Saveri in Support of Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Notice of Motion and Motion for an Award Of Attorneys' Fees and Reimbursement of Expenses; Memorandum of Points and Authorities In Support Thereof ("Saveri Decl.") ¶ 15);
- Drafted a comprehensive consolidated amended complaint detailing the Defendants' violations of the antitrust laws (id. ¶¶ 15, 24–25);
- Conducted exhaustive legal research regarding the class's claims and the defenses thereto (id. ¶ 15);

- Successfully defended, over the course of nearly a year, a set of hard-fought motions to dismiss the complaint before the Special Master and this Court (id. ¶¶ 15, 26–30);
- Successfully defended, over the course of a year, a Summary Judgment motion by which the Defendants sought to deny any recovery for Finished Products, which constitute the majority of DPPs purchases (id. ¶¶ 15, 36–40);
- Propounded discovery that—after extensive research, negotiations with defendants, and motion practice—resulted in the identification of dozens of defendant-employee custodians and the production of millions of documents, as well as voluminous electronic transactional data (id. ¶¶ 15, 41–48);
- Reviewed and analyzed these documents (many of which were in foreign languages and required translation), as well as the transactional data (id.);
- Propounded several sets of interrogatories on defendants and issued Rule 30(b)(6) deposition notices (id. ¶¶ 15, 43–44, 49);
- Cooperated with the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs ("IPPs") and the Direct Action Plaintiffs ("DAPs") to take over one hundred depositions of employees and officers of Defendants (id. ¶¶ 15, 49);
- Contended with near-constant discovery disputes and motions to compel (id. ¶¶ 15, 53);
- Responded to Defendants' numerous document requests and interrogatories and prepared and defended the depositions of the class representatives (id. ¶¶ 15, 50–52);
- Prepared a motion for class certification and supporting materials, including over one hundred exhibits and the expert report of Dr. Jeffrey Leitzinger (id. ¶¶ 15, 54–56);
- Consulted extensively with experts on issues pertaining to liability, class certification, and damages throughout the course of the Action and defended the deposition of DPPs' expert Dr. Leitzinger (id.);
- Engaged in extensive settlement negotiations with each of the seven Defendant groups (id. ¶¶ 15, 58–67); and
- Documented each settlement and did the substantial work necessary to obtain final approval of each settlement—e.g., drafted and filed motions for preliminary and final approval, drafted class notices, and worked with the settlement administrator to provide notice to the class of each settlement (id.).

DPPs have also faced substantial risks in this case, including, among others:

- The risk of litigating against some of the largest and most sophisticated law firms in the world with seemingly limitless resources;
- The risk that the consolidated complaints would not withstand the individual and joint motions to dismiss, which claimed, inter alia, that the alleged conspiracy was not plausible under Twombly and Iqbal; that certain DPPs lacked standing to sue for federal antitrust violations; and that the claims were time barred;
- The risk that there would be no recovery for Finished Products—i.e., televisions and computer monitors—which comprised the vast majority of DPPs' purchases;
- The risk that Defendants would successfully argue that any antitrust violation engaged in by their company's representatives caused no antitrust impact or damages to class members;

- The risk of not achieving class certification;
- The risk of trying a case in which many of the events occurred as much as nineteen years ago, and in which much evidence and many witnesses are now unavailable;
- The risk of diminished recovery because of the financial difficulties, bankruptcy, and/or disappearance of corporate defendants as a result of the demise of the CRT industry; and
- The changing landscape of the law with respect to civil antitrust actions and class actions.

In this context, it is apparent that the recovery DPPs obtained for the class is excellent and that DPPs' request for a fee award of 30% of the settlements is fair and reasonable. While the benchmark for attorneys' fees in the Ninth Circuit is 25%, in practice, awards generally approximate 30%. Many courts have awarded 30%, or higher, where, as here, the litigation posed substantial risks and the multiplier is low.

Importantly, DPPs' fee request appears to have the near unanimous support of the class. Each of the five notices of settlement sent to the over sixteen thousand class members disclosed that class counsel would seek as much as one-third of the settlement fund as a fee, and no objections were received. See Dkt. Nos. 1323-3, Ex. A; 1464-2, Ex. A; 1573-2, Ex. A; 1757-2, Ex. A; 2728-2, Ex. A. This is especially significant where, as here, the class contains many large and sophisticated companies. Saveri Decl. ¶ 78.

Class Counsel should also be reimbursed for the expenses they have advanced on behalf of the class. All were reasonable and necessary.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This case is notable for and characterized by the complex issues it has presented and the tenacity and creativity with which Defendants—all possessing enormous resources and represented by law firms among the best and largest in the world—have litigated those issues. Defendants have steadfastly opposed DPPs on a cornucopia of grounds. From the outset of the case, Defendants have contended that DPPs are entitled to little or no recovery because, inter alia, (1) the conspiracy was limited to Asia and did not affect the United States; (2) the FTAIA barred DPPs' case; (3) DPPs lacked standing because the conspiracy did not extend to the Finished Products (i.e., computer monitors and televisions) most had purchased; (4) DPPs claims were barred by the statute of limitations; (5) the conspiracy involved only CDTs; and (6) the conspiracy, if it existed, caused little or no damage to DPPs. Several defendants also asserted that they were not conspirators or had withdrawn from the conspiracy long ago. At every stage of this case, Defendants asserted these arguments as a basis to dismiss all or part of the case, to limit damages, or to deny or limit discovery. DPPs battled Defendants at every step, but the battles were difficult and drawn out. For example, Defendants' motions to dismiss ultimately entailed over 500 pages of briefing and took over a year to resolve. Defendants' summary judgment motion to eliminate Finished Products from the case—which would have gutted DPPs' case—also involved hundreds of pages of briefing and took over a year to finally resolve. In this context, it is plain that the efforts of Class Counsel were not only essential to the substantial benefits conferred on the class by the settlements obtained, but that Class Counsel also managed the litigation effectively and efficiently. Saveri Decl. ¶ 15, 26–30, 36–40.

A. Commencement of the Case

This multidistrict litigation arises from an alleged worldwide conspiracy to fix prices of Cathode Ray Tubes ("CRTs"). CRTs are the primary components of CRT televisions and computer monitors. The alleged conspiracy involved some of the largest companies in the world—Samsung SDI, Panasonic, LG, Toshiba, Hitachi, and Philips. Saveri Decl. ¶ 18.

After the United States Department of Justice ("DOJ") announced its investigation into the conspiracy in November of 2007, twenty direct purchaser plaintiff class action complaints were filed alleging a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15.[1] Saveri Decl. ¶ 19.

Plaintiffs commenced proceedings before the JPML, and on February 15, 2008, the JPML

[1] On February 10, 2009 and November 9, 2010, the DOJ announced the indictment of executives of Defendants Samsung SDI, LG Electronics and Chunghwa for price fixing Cathode Display Tubes ("CDTs") used in computer monitors. Ultimately, the DOJ secured only a single conviction. Defendant Samsung SDI admitted to participation in a conspiracy to fix the prices of CDTs between January 1997 and March 2006. Saveri Decl., Ex. 8 (Amended Plea Agreement, U.S. v. Samsung SDI Co., Case No. 11-cr-162-WHA (N.D. Cal. Aug. 8, 2011) (Dkt. No. 29)). There were no indictments or guilty pleas with regard to Cathode Picture Tubes ("CPTs") used in televisions.

transferred all related actions to this Court. Dkt. No. 122. On May 9, 2008, the Court appointed Saveri & Saveri, Inc. ("S&S") Interim Lead Class Counsel for the putative nationwide class of direct purchasers. Dkt. No. 282. The Court's order tasked S&S with making sure the DPP action was prosecuted in an efficient manner, and required, among other things, the periodic collection of time and expenses from Class Counsel, and coordination of the work of Class Counsel. Saveri Decl. ¶ 20.

During this time, DPPs effected service of their complaints on Defendants. As to several, plaintiffs were required to utilize the procedures for international service of process set forth in the Hague conventions. This was a lengthy, time consuming, and, in certain instances, expensive endeavor requiring the appointment of a special international process server. Saveri Decl. ¶ 21.

B. The DOJ Intervenes

On February 21, 2008, the DOJ moved to intervene in the litigation for the purpose of seeking a stay of the action pending its own investigation. As a result of the DOJ's request, with the exception of limited written discovery—i.e., interrogatories—the Court stayed discovery in the action. Ultimately, document discovery was stayed, for over two years, until March 8, 2010. Depositions of Defendants and their employees were stayed until March 11, 2011. Dkt. No. 798. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 22–23.

C. DPPs File Their Consolidated Complaint; Defendants File Motions To Dismiss

On March 16, 2009, Plaintiffs filed their Consolidated Amended Complaint ("CAC") alleging an over-arching horizontal conspiracy among the Defendants and their co-conspirators to fix prices, restrict production, and to allocate markets and customers for the sale of CRTs and Finished Products in the United States from March 1, 1995 through November 25, 2007 (the "Class Period"). The CAC alleged, inter alia, that Plaintiffs and members of the Class were direct purchasers of CRTs and/or CRT Finished Products from Defendants and/or their subsidiaries and were injured because they paid more for CRTs and/or CRT Finished Products than they would have absent the conspiracy. CAC ¶¶ 213–221. Plaintiffs sought, inter alia, treble damages pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 22. CAC at p. 47. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 24–25.

On May 18, 2009, beginning a process that would take almost a year to complete, Defendants filed a massive set of motions to dismiss the CAC. Defendants filed a joint motion, and nine individual motions. Their total briefing included 197 pages of argument and hundreds of pages of supporting material. See Dkt. Nos. 463–493. Defendants argued, inter alia, that the CAC failed to allege a plausible conspiracy, that the FTAIA barred DPPs' action, that DPPs lacked antitrust standing, and that DPPs had failed to allege fraudulent concealment of the conspiracy sufficient to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations. Saveri Decl. ¶ 26.

DPPs filed their opposition to Defendants' motions—118 pages of argument, along with over 250 pages of supporting declarations and other material—on August 3, 2009 (Dkt. Nos. 530, 531) and August 31, 2009 (Dkt. No. 537). Defendants' reply briefs totaled 132 pages of argument and hundreds more pages of supporting material. See Dkt. Nos. 545–561. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 27, 30.

A full-day hearing was held on October 5, 2009.[2] On February 5, 2010, the Special Master issued his Report and Recommendation ("R&R") denying Defendants' motions. Dkt. No. 597. Defendants objected to virtually all of the Special Master's recommendations. The parties filed briefs in support and in opposition to adoption of the R&R (approximately 80 pages of argument) (See Dkt. Nos. 605–641), and the Court conducted another hearing on March 18, 2010. Dkt. No. 656. On March 30, 2010, this Court adopted the Special Master's ruling and recommendation granting in part and denying in part Defendants' Motions to Dismiss. Dkt. No. 665. Saveri Decl. ¶ 28.

Finally, on April 9, 2010, Defendants moved to certify the Court's order for interlocutory appeal. Dkt. No. 667. DPPs filed their opposition on April 27, 2010. Dkt. No. 673. The matter was heard on April 30, 2010. Dkt. No. 711. The Court denied the motion to certify on that date. Id. Saveri Decl. ¶ 29.

D. Defendants' Rule 11 Motion

On April 12, 2011, certain Defendants moved to strike allegations of a finished product conspiracy from the CAC pursuant to FRCP 11. Dkt. No. 880. DPPs' opposition, filed under seal on April 20, 2011 (Dkt. No. 896) ("Rule 11 Opp."), explained that the motion was meritless for several reasons, namely: (1) DPPs' allegations that the conspiracy embraced Finished Products were supported by evidence and, therefore, not "baseless"; and (2) DPPs had conducted a reasonable investigation prior to filing the complaint. Rule 11 Opp. at 9–24. Defendants, therefore, did not satisfy either of the requirements of Rule 11.[3] In addition, among other things, Defendants' motion was procedurally improper: Defendants had not properly followed the required "safe harbor" provisions, the motion was filed before DPPs' allegations—which this Court had already upheld as "plausible"—had been determined to lack merit, and Defendants were seeking to use the motion as, essentially, a summary judgment motion before DPPs had a chance to conduct meaningful discovery. Id. at 9. Saveri Decl. ¶ 31.

After a hearing on May 26, 2011, however, and despite finding that DPPs' had conducted a reasonable inquiry prior to filing their complaint, the Special Master recommended that the motion be granted. Dkt. No. 947. The Special Master recommended that DPPs' allegations of a finished products conspiracy be stricken from the complaint and certain discovery be disallowed, but did not recommend that DPPs be otherwise sanctioned. Id. at 14. Saveri Decl. ¶ 32.

On June 29, 2011, DPPs objected to the Special Master's R & R. Dkt. No. 957. DPPs explained, inter alia, that the Special Master's finding that they had conducted a reasonable investigation compelled the denial of the motion, that he had failed to credit the evidence adduced by DPPs, had misunderstood well-established antitrust law, and had applied an improper Rule 11 standard to conclude that DPPs' allegations were baseless. Defendants asked the Court to adopt the R& R the same day. Dkt. No. 953. Saveri Decl. ¶ 33.

The Court set the matter for hearing on September 2, 2011. Dkt. No. 968. Prior to the hearing, on August 26, 2011, the parties entered into a stipulation resolving the matter. It provided, among other things, that the Special Master's recommended finding that Plaintiffs violated Rule 11 be vacated, and that DPPs withdraw their allegations of a conspiracy encompassing Finished Products and certain discovery. Significantly, the stipulation preserved DPPs' damage claims based on their purchases of Finished Products. Dkt. No. 996. Saveri Decl. ¶ 34.

[3] Under the Ninth Circuit's decisions in Townsend v. Holman Consulting Corp., 929 F.2d 1358 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) and In re Keegan Management Co. Sec. Litig., 78 F.3d 431 (9th Cir. 1996), the filer of a complaint may not be subject to Rule 11 sanctions unless he or she failed to conduct a reasonable inquiry under the circumstances and the claims are objectively baseless.

E. Finished Products Summary Judgment Motion

On December 12, 2011, Defendants moved for Summary Judgment against Plaintiffs who purchased CRT Finished Products only. Dkt. No. 1013. Defendants contended, as they had in their motions to dismiss, that DPPs could not bring claims under the federal antitrust law based on purchases of Finished Products containing price fixed CRTs. Id. at 5–12. Saveri Decl. ¶ 36.

On February 24, 2012, DPPs filed their opposition under seal (see Dkt. No. 1057) arguing that, as the Court had noted in its Order on Defendants' motion to dismiss, purchasers of finished products containing price fixed goods had antitrust standing under Royal Printing Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 621 F.2d 323 (9th Cir. 1980). In addition, DPPs submitted a massive declaration collecting evidence that each of the class representatives Defendants had moved against had purchased Finished Products from entities "owned or controlled" by an alleged conspirator. See Dkt. No. 1057. DAPs also opposed the motion. Dkt. No. 1056. The motion was heard on March 20, 2012. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 37, 40.

On May 31, 2012, the Special Master issued his Report and Recommendation that the Court grant Defendants' motion for summary judgment and that judgment be entered against certain plaintiffs that purchased CRT Finished Products from defendants. Dkt. No. 1221. The parties filed briefs in support and in opposition to adoption of the R&R. On November 29, 2012, the Court declined to adopt the R&R, and ruled that the "Ownership and Control Exception" created in Royal Printing, 621 F.2d 323, and confirmed by the Ninth Circuit in In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d 741 (9th Cir. 2012), conferred standing on Plaintiffs to sue "insofar as they purchased [Finished Products] incorporating the allegedly price-fixed CRTs from an entity owned or controlled by any allegedly conspiring defendant" (Dkt. No. 1470 at 16). Saveri Decl. ¶ 38.

Finally, some Defendants asked the Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 1292(b) to certify the Order for interlocutory appeal. Dkt. No. 1499. DPPs filed an opposing brief. Dkt. No. 1525. The Court denied defendants' request on February 13, 2013. Dkt. No. 1569. Saveri Decl. ¶ 39.

F. Discovery

Discovery in this action was extensive and hard-fought. Defendants opposed DPPs at almost every step. Ultimately, DPPs—in cooperation with the IPPs and the DAPs—obtained millions of documents, took over one hundred depositions, and obtained important information via interrogatories and other discovery devices. Saveri Decl. ¶ 41.

1. Requests for Production of Documents and Interrogatories

On March 12, 2010, after the partial stay of discovery was lifted, Plaintiffs propounded their Second Set of Document Requests and First Set of Interrogatories. Among other things, Defendants sought to limit the temporal and geographic scope of the discovery and sought to avoid searching the files of some or all of their subsidiaries or related companies. DPPs, along with the IPPs, engaged in exhaustive separate negotiations with each Defendant group. Eventually, Defendants agreed to produce documents from the files of designated document custodians. These negotiations, however, were lengthy and difficult, and required the intervention of the Special Master. DPPs briefed, along with the IPPs, at least ten motions relating to Defendants' discovery responses. Ultimately, Defendants produced millions of documents. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 42–43, 46–48, 53.

DPPs, with the IPPs and DAPs, also spent substantial time obtaining Defendants' transactional data and negotiating a protocol relating to ESI. Dkt. No. 828. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 15, 44.

A substantial percentage of the documents produced in this action were in Korean, Chinese, or Japanese. Consequently, DPPs utilized foreign language attorneys and paralegals both to review and analyze these documents, as well as to translate working copies of important documents. In addition, DPPs, along with the other parties, worked with commercial translators in order to produce "certified translations" of thousands of evidentiary documents. Ultimately, all parties negotiated a Translation Protocol (as part of the larger discovery protocol). Dkt. No. 1128. This was a laborious process that involved, first, a proposed translation, then an opportunity for other parties to object, then a meet and confer process, and, ultimately, a procedure for the Court to resolve disputes. The protocol applied to all translated documents used at depositions, attached to motions, or which a party intended to use at trial. After the protocol was established, negotiation with the Defendants about translations was virtually continual. Saveri Decl. ¶ 45.

2. Depositions

Beginning in June of 2012, after meeting and conferring with Defendants regarding the scope and topics of 30(b)(6) witnesses, Plaintiffs began taking 30(b)(6) depositions of Defendants. Beginning in December of 2012, Plaintiffs began taking merits depositions. DPPs coordinated with DAPs and IPPs in the taking all of these depositions to avoid duplication of effort. Generally, one plaintiffs' firm representing the DAPs, IPPs, or DPPs was designated to take the lead with regard to preparing for and taking each deposition. The non-lead plaintiffs would assist, as necessary, in the preparation for the depositions and the examination of the witnesses. Over one hundred depositions were taken. DPPs took the lead in over twenty-five depositions, and assisted the lead attorneys in most of the rest. DPPs participation in the depositions of some Defendants diminished after DPPs had settled with them. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 15, 49.

3. Discovery of Plaintiffs

DPPs also spent substantial time responding to discovery propounded by Defendants. DPPs worked with each of the Class Representatives to collect and provide discoverable information and documents, object where appropriate, and meet and confer with Defendants. DPPs also briefed, in cooperation with the IPPs unless the issue was particular to the DPPs, several discovery motions in connection with Defendants' discovery demands. Saveri Decl. ¶ 50.

Defendants propounded eight sets of interrogatories and nine sets of document requests. Each of the ten Class Representatives participated in the collection of responsive hard copy documents and identification of ESI sources likely to contain responsive data. In total, the Class Representatives produced over twelve thousand pages of documents. These document requests required the Class Representatives to search for and produce both hard copy and, in certain circumstances, electronic documents from multiple sources. Saveri Decl. ¶ 51.

The Class Representatives were also deposed. DPPs spent substantial time preparing each Class Representatives for their deposition, and defending the depositions. Saveri Decl. ¶ 52.

G. Motion for Class Certification

DPPs filed a motion for class certification against Defendants Hitachi and Samsung SDI on May 14, 2013. Dkt. No. 1674. The motion was supported by the report of DPPs' expert economist,

Dr. Jeffrey Leitzinger and a declaration of counsel attaching over 130 exhibits. DPPs' moving papers comprised in excess of 2,600 pages. Defendants filed their nearly fifty-page opposition to class certification, which included hundreds of pages of exhibits, as well as a 176 page expert report critiquing Dr. Leitzinger's report, on September 11, 2013. See Dkt. No. 1921. DPPs filed their reply brief and Dr. Leitzinger's rebuttal report on November 11, 2013. Dkt. Nos. 2208-3, 2208-4. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 15, 54.

DPPs spent an enormous amount of time and effort drafting their motion for class certification, analyzing relevant evidence, working with Dr. Leitzinger and his associates, preparing Dr. Leitzinger for deposition and defending his deposition, and analyzing and responding to the Defendant's opposition papers and expert report. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 55–56.

After the motion was filed, DPPs reached settlements with both Hitachi and Samsung SDI. DPPs reached agreement with Samsung SDI after the matter was fully briefed. Saveri Decl. ¶ 57.

H. Settlements

DPPs spent substantial time in settlement negotiations throughout the litigation. Ultimately, DPPs reached settlements with all of the Defendants who appeared in the action. Saveri Decl. ¶ 58.

DPPs first settled with Chunghwa, the amnesty applicant. The parties executed an agreement in April, 2009 after several months of negotiation. The settlement required Chunghwa to pay the class $10 million and to cooperate with DPPs in the prosecution of the case against the rest of the Defendants. Saveri Decl. ¶ 59.

DPPs next settled with Philips. The parties reached an agreement in principle in January, 2012, and executed a written agreement in February, 2012, after almost a year of negotiations. The settlement required Philips to pay the class $15 million (after an opt-out reduction) and cooperate with DPPs in prosecution of the case against the remaining Defendants. Saveri Decl. ¶ 60.

DPPs moved for preliminary and final approval of the Chunghwa and Philips settlements in the summer of 2012. The Court certified settlement classes, notice was given to the classes, and, on October 19, 2012, the Court granted final approval of the two settlements. Saveri Decl. ¶ 61.

DPPs' next settled with Panasonic. The parties executed a settlement agreement in June, 2012 after several months of negotiation. The settlement required Panasonic to pay the class $17.5

million and to cooperate with DPPs in the prosecution of the case against the rest of the Defendants. After DPPs moved for preliminary and final approval of the settlement, certification of a settlement class and notice to the class, the Court granted final approval of the Panasonic settlement on December 27, 2012. Saveri Decl. ¶ 62.

DPPs executed a fourth settlement agreement with LG on August 13, 2012. The Court finally approved the LG settlement on April 1, 2013, after DPPs moved for preliminary and final approval of the settlement, certification of a settlement class and notice to the class. The settlement required LG to pay the class $25 million and to cooperate with DPPs in the prosecution of the case against the rest of the Defendants. Saveri Decl. ¶ 63.

DPPs executed a fifth settlement with Toshiba on February 6, 2013. The settlement was a reached as a result of a mediation before Mr. Eric Green. The parties exchanged mediation briefs and attended a one-day mediation on October 3, 2012. While no settlement was reached at the mediation, the parties continued their discussions with the assistance of Mr. Green and eventually reached agreement. The Court finally approved the settlement on July 23, 2013, following DPPs' motions for preliminary and final approval of the settlement, certification of a settlement class and notice to the class. Toshiba agreed to pay $13.5 million and cooperate with DPPs in the prosecution of the case against the rest of the Defendants. Saveri Decl. ¶ 64.

DPPs next settled with Hitachi. DPPs engaged in settlement discussions with Hitachi over the course of the litigation. The settlement was finally reached as a result of mediation sessions conducted by Judge Vaughn Walker (Ret.). The parties exchanged mediation briefs and attended a mediation session on March 26, 2013. On May 14, 2013, the parties again exchanged briefs and attended another mediation session. While no settlement was reached at the mediation sessions, the parties continued their discussions with the assistance of Judge Walker and executed an agreement on November 29, 2013. Hitachi agreed to pay $13.45 million and cooperate in the prosecution of the case against the rest of the Defendants. Saveri Decl. ¶ 65.

DPPs settlement with Samsung SDI was also reached as a result of mediation sessions conducted by Judge Walker. The parties exchanged mediation briefs and attended a mediation session on March 19, 2013. On September 24, 2013, the parties again submitted briefs and attended another session. While no settlement was reached at the mediations, the parties continued their discussions with the assistance of Judge Walker and executed an agreement on February 11, 2014. Samsung SDI agreed to pay the class $33 million and to cooperate with DPPs in the prosecution of the case against other alleged conspirators. Saveri Decl. ¶ 66.

The Court granted preliminary approval, certified settlement classes, and approved class notice for the Hitachi and Samsung SDI settlements. After notice to the class, the Court held a final approval hearing on August 22, 2014. However, because of motion practice relating to DAP Sharp Corporation's failure to submit a timely request for exclusion from the settlement classes, final approval of these settlements was delayed until July 22, 2015. Saveri Decl. ¶ 67.

I. Miscellaneous Motions

DPPs were involved in a number of other motions in addition to those described above. In February, 2014, two large purchasers of CRTs and CRT Products, Viewsonic and Unisys, who had opted out of the DPP settlements with Chunghwa, Philips, Panasonic, LG, and Toshiba, moved to withdraw their requests for exclusion and rejoin the settlement classes. Dkt. No. 2403. DPPs opposed the motion and the Court denied the motion. Dkt. Nos. 2417, 2517. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 68–69.

In the summer of 2014, two DAPs with large CRT purchases—Sharp and Dell— who failed to submit timely requests for exclusion from the Hitachi and Samsung SDI settlement classes moved the Court for leave to submit a late request. Dkt. Nos. 2696, 2698. The Court granted Dell's request and denied Sharp's. Dkt. No. 2746. Sharp moved for leave to submit a late objection to the settlements and for reconsideration. Dkt. Nos. 2750, 2751. The DPPs submitted briefs in connection with these motions, as well as Sharp's later request for a status conference. Dkt. Nos. 2715, 2753, 3160. Sharp ultimately settled with Samsung SDI and Hitachi and thus mooted the question of Sharp's membership in the settlement classes. Dkt. No. 3842. These proceedings delayed final approval for nearly a year. Saveri Decl. ¶ 70.

III. ARGUMENT

DPPs' requests (1) for an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of 30% of the Settlement Fund; (2) for approval of expenses; and (3) for reimbursement of expenses Class Counsel have advanced on behalf of the class are reasonable and appropriate.

A. The Common Fund Doctrine and the Percentage-of-the-Recovery Approach

1. The Ninth Circuit Recognizes the Common Fund Doctrine

Counsel who represent a class and produce a benefit for class members are entitled to compensation. As the Supreme Court has explained, "this Court has recognized consistently that a litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980). See also Mills v. Elec. Auto-Lite Co., 396 U.S. 375, 392–93 (1970); Central R.R. & Banking Co. v. Pettus, 113 U.S. 116, 123 (1885). The Supreme Court has also recognized that under the "common fund doctrine" a reasonable fee may be based "on a percentage of the fund bestowed on the class." Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 900 n.16 (1984). The purpose of this doctrine is that "those who benefit from the creation of the fund should share the wealth with the lawyers whose skill and effort helped create it." In re Wash. Pub. Power Supply Sys. Sec. Litig., 19 F.3d 1291, 1300 (9th Cir. 1994) ("WPPSS"); see also Paul, Johnson, Alston & Hunt v. Graulty, 886 F.2d 268, 271 (9th Cir. 1989) ("Paul, Johnson") (well-settled that lawyer who helps create common fund should be allowed to share in the award).

The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that private antitrust litigation is essential to the enforcement of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262–63 (1983); Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 331 (1979); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 266 (1972); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. Int'l Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139 (1968). Reasonable fee awards encourage meritorious class actions, and thereby promote private enforcement of—and compliance with—the antitrust laws. "In the absence of adequate attorneys' fee awards, many antitrust actions would not be commenced . . . ." Alpine Pharmacy, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., 481 F.2d 1045, 1050 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1092 (1973), Here, Class Counsel's efforts have created a common fund of $127.45 million. Under either a "percentage-of-the-fund" or "lodestar" method, Class Counsel's requested fee is warranted in light of the value of the extensive work performed, the difficulty and risk of the case, and the results achieved, among other things.

2. Percentage-of-the-Recovery Approach Is the Predominant Method for Determining Attorneys' Fees Under Ninth Circuit Law

The amount an award of reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses is within the sound discretion of the court. Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1029 (9th Cir. 1998); WPPSS, 19 F.3d at 1296. In the Ninth Circuit, the court has discretion in a common fund case to choose either the "percentage-of-the-fund" or the "lodestar" method to determine fees. Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1047 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Vizcaino II"); In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 934, 949 (9th Cir. 2015) ("Online DVD"). Most courts have exhibited a clear preference for the percentage-of-the-fund method. Virtually all of the major recent antitrust class actions in the Northern District of California have applied the percentage-of-the-fund approach. See, e.g., In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., No. M 07-1827 SI, 2011 WL 7575003, at *1–2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 27, 2011) ("LCD I") (30%); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., No. M 07-1827 SI, 2013 WL 149692, at *1–2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2013) ("LCD II") (30%); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., No. M 07-1827 SI, 2013 WL 1365900, at *7–8 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 3, 2013) ("LCD III") (28.6%); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., Case No. 07-md-1819-CW (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2011) (Dkt. No. 1370) ("SRAM") (attached as Exhibit 9 to the Saveri Declaration) (30%); Meijer v. Abbott Laboratories, C-07-05985 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 11, 2011) (Dkt. No. 514) ("Meijer") (attached as Exhibit 10 to the Saveri Declaration) (33⅓%).

B. Application of the Pertinent Factors Shows that an Upward Adjustment of the Benchmark Is Justified

"[I]n this circuit, the benchmark percentage is 25%." Id. at *9. However, "[t]he 25% benchmark rate, although a starting point for analysis, may be inappropriate in some cases." Vizcaino II, 290 F.3d at 1048. Indeed, Vizcaino II makes clear that it is not sufficient to arbitrarily apply a percentage; rather the District Court must show why that percentage and the ultimate award are appropriate based on the facts of the case. Id.; see also Torrisi v. Tucson Elec. Power Co., 8 F.3d 1370, 1376 (9th Cir. 1993) ("This 'benchmark percentage should be adjusted, or replaced by a lodestar calculation, when special circumstances indicate that the percentage recovery would be either too small or too large in light of the hours devoted to the case or other relevant factors.'" (quoting Six (6) Mexican Workers v. Arizona Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1311 (9th Cir.

1990)). In considering whether an award of 30% would be fair, several factors may be considered:

> In [Vizcaino II], we listed several factors courts may consider in assessing a request for attorneys' fees that was calculated using the percentage-of-recovery method. These factors include the extent to which class counsel "achieved exceptional results for the class," whether the case was risky for class counsel, whether counsel's performance "generated benefits beyond the cash settlement fund," the market rate for the particular field of law (in some circumstances), the burdens class counsel experienced while litigating the case (e.g., cost, duration, foregoing other work), and whether the case was handled on a contingency basis. In addition, a court may cross-check its percentage-of-recovery figure against a lodestar calculation.

Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 954–55 (citations omitted). In addition, the Court may consider other factors including the volume of work performed, counsel's skill and experience, the complexity of the issues faced, and the reaction of the class. See, e.g., In re Heritage Bond Litig., 02-ML-1475 DT, 2005 WL 1594403, at *18–23 (C.D. Cal. June 10, 2005) ("Heritage Bond").

As this Court has noted, fee awards tend to approximate 30%. Knight v. Red Door Salons, Inc., No. 08-01520 SC, 2009 WL 248367, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 2, 2009) ("nearly all common fund awards range around 30%" (quoting In re Activision Sec. Litig., 723 F. Supp. 1373, 1377–78 (N.D. Cal. 1989) ("Activision"))); Pokorny v. Quixtar, Inc., Case No. c 07-0201 SC, 2013 WL 3790896, at *1 (N.D. Cal. July 18, 2013) ("30% award the norm"); In re Omnivision Tech., Inc., 559 F. Supp. 2d 1036, 1048 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("Omnivision") (same).

Thus, in other large electronics antitrust class actions in this district, the court has generally awarded a fee of 30% or near 30%. See, e.g., LCD I, 2011 WL 7575003 (30%); LCD II, 2013 WL 149692 (30%); LCD III, 2013 WL 1365900 (28.6%); SRAM, Case No. 07-md-1819-CW (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2011) (Dkt. No. 1370) (30%); In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., M-02-1486, 2007 WL 2416513 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2007), at *1 ("DRAM") (25%); In re Optical Disk Drive Antitrust Litig., Case No. 10-md-2143 RS (N.D. Cal. July 23, 2015) (Dkt. No. 1658) (attached as Exhibit 7 to the Saveri Declaration) (30%).

Fee awards of less than 30%, unlike this case, usually involve multipliers—i.e., counsel receive a multiple of their hourly rate. See, e.g., DRAM, 2007 WL 2416513 (multiplier of 2.3); In re High-Tech Emp. Antitrust Litig., No. 11-CV-02509-LHK, 2015 WL 5158730, at *10–11 (N.D.

Cal. Sept. 2, 2015) ("High-Tech") (multiplier of 2.5). By the same token, fees in excess of 30% often involve cases presenting substantial risk, again, as here. See, e.g., In re Pac. Enters. Sec. Litig., 47 F.3d 373, 379 (9th Cir. 1995) ("Pac. Enters.") (33%).

In this context, it is plain that the award DPPs seek is consistent with recoveries awarded in other major class action cases. Consideration of the Vizcaino factors confirms its fairness.

1. Class Counsel Achieved an Excellent Recovery for the Class

Courts emphasize that the recovery achieved is an important factor to be considered in determining an appropriate fee award. See Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 431 (1983); Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 142 F. Supp. 2d 1299, 1303 (W.D. Wash. 2001) aff'd, 290 F.3d 1043 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Vizcaino I"); Omnivision, 559 F. Supp. 2d, 1046. Here, DPPs have obtained a $127.45 million in cash. The settlement fund confers a substantial and immediate benefit to class members, and represents an excellent recovery, especially in light of the many risks involved in the action. The quality of the recovery in this action is confirmed by the fact that in December of 2014, sophisticated DAPs with large purchases who initially opted out of the first five settlements sought to revoke their opt-out notices and rejoin the class in order to participate in the settlements. Dkt. 2403; Saveri Decl. ¶ 68.

2. A High Level of Skill Was Required to Prosecute This Case and Class Counsel Are Highly Qualified

The skill and quality of legal counsel also support the requested fee award. See Mark v. Valley Ins. Co., Case No. CV 01-1575-BR, 2004 WL 2260605, at *2 (D. Or. Oct. 6, 2004). Class Counsel are among the nation's most experienced and skilled practitioners in the antitrust litigation field, and each firm has successfully litigated these types of cases on behalf of direct purchasers of price-fixed products throughout the country.[4]

This was a complex case which required DPPs to confront novel and difficult legal and factual issues which courts have recognized as a significant factor to be considered in making a fee award. See, e.g., Vizcaino I, 142 F. Supp. 2d at 1303, 1306. Antitrust price-fixing conspiracy cases are notoriously complex and difficult to litigate. See, e.g., In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., No. CIV.A. 98-5055, 2004 WL 1221350, at *10 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) ("antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute"). Class Counsel also effectively managed the logistics of such a complex case, with more than thirty plaintiffs' firms, scores of able defense counsel, and seven defendant groups. Saveri Decl. ¶ 17, 42.

The caliber of opposing counsel is another important factor in assessing the quality of Class Counsel's work. Vizcaino I, 142 F. Supp. 2d at 1303; In re King Res. Co. Sec. Litig., 420 F. Supp. 610, 634 (D. Colo. 1976); Arenson v. Board of Trade, 372 F. Supp. 1349, 1354 (N.D. Ill. 1974). Here, DPPs were opposed by attorneys from some of the best and largest firms in the country with near limitless resources.[5]

3. The Risks of This Litigation

Risk is another important factor in determining a fair fee award. Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 954–55. Consistent with the complexity and difficulty of antitrust class actions in general, this case presented substantial risk. Some of these risk factors are discussed below.

a. Defendants Have Tremendous Resources

The resources available to the opposing parties are a significant indicator of risk. See Vizcaino I, 142 F. Supp. 2d at 1303–04. Here, of course, Defendants' resources are vast.[6]

b. Antitrust Class Actions Are Unpredictable

"Antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable." In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 475 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). "The 'best' case can be lost and the 'worst' case can be won, and juries may find liability but no damages. None of these risks should be underestimated." In re Superior Beverage/Glass Container Consol. Pretrial, 133 F.R.D. 119, 127 (N.D. Ill. 1990). There is also always a risk of unfavorable changes in the law.

[5] For example, Kirkland & Ellis LLP (Hitachi's counsel) employs over 1,600 attorneys in 12 offices worldwide. See http://www.kirkland.com.

[6] For example, Samsung Group, parent of the Samsung Defendants, has $470.2 billion in assets and employs over 425,000 people. See http://www.samsung.com/us/aboutsamsung/samsung_group/our_performance.

c. The Risk that Class Certification Will Be Denied

While the Court ultimately granted certification here, the risk that class certification will be denied is real. Several large antitrust class actions have been denied certification in recent years. See, e.g., In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 253 F.R.D. 478, 508 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (denying certification of indirect purchaser class and certifying a direct purchaser class that was much smaller than requested); In re Optical Disk Drive Antitrust Litig., 303 F.R.D. 311, 325 (N.D. Cal. 2014); In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., No. C 07-0086 SBA, 2010 WL 2332081, at *19 (N.D. Cal. June 9, 2010). See also In re Rail Freight Fuel Surcharge Antitrust Litig., 725 F.3d 244, 255 (D.C. Cir. 2013).

d. The Risk of Not Being Able to Establish Liability or Recover Substantial Damages

This case also presented substantial risks on the merits. Many large antitrust cases do not make it past summary judgment. See, e.g., In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 914, 918 (9th Cir. 2015) (affirming grant of summary judgment against plaintiffs); In re Citric Acid Antitrust Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1093, 1108 (9th Cir. 1999), cert. denied sub nom. Gangi Bros. Packing Co. v. Cargill, Inc., 529 U.S. 1037 (2000) (summary judgment in favor of Cargill).

While one defendant eventually pled guilty, Defendants have strenuously argued the conduct underlying that plea related only to the market for CDTs in Asia, and did not support the global market wide conspiracy DPPs allege.

Defendants have also steadfastly maintained that DPPs are entitled to no recovery for finished products—i.e., televisions and computer monitors—which account for the vast majority of DPPs' damages. DPPs estimate that finished products constitute over 70% of class members' purchases. Saveri Decl. ¶ 77. The danger this argument posed to the class is made clear by the fact that the Special Master recommended that the Court grant Defendants' summary judgment motion on this issue. Dkt. No. 1221; Saveri Decl. ¶ 38.

Defendants also argued that the FTAIA and the statute of limitations bar some or all of DPPs alleged damages, and that the alleged conspiracy caused no harm to the class. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 15, 26, 79.

Some Defendants—e.g., Hitachi, Philips, LG, and Panasonic—moved their CRT businesses into separate entities in 2001 -2004. They have argued that they withdrew from the conspiracy, and, because of the statute of limitations, have no liability whatsoever. Saveri Decl. ¶ 75.

Finally, some of the largest CRT manufacturers—e.g., Daewoo and LPD, the joint venture between LG and Philips—were bankrupt or essentially defunct by the time the case was filed. Saveri Decl. ¶ 76.

All of these issues posed serious threats to DPPs ability to prove liability against some or all Defendants or to recover substantial damages.

4. Contingent Nature of the Fee

The Ninth Circuit has confirmed that a fair fee award must include consideration of the contingent nature of the fee, where there is no assurance of attorneys' fees or reimbursement of expenses. See, e.g., Vizcaino II, 290 F.3d at 1050; Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 954–55 & n.14. The commencement of a class action is no guarantee of success. "[T]he risk of non-payment in complex cases, such as this one, is very real." In re Veeco Instruments Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 05-md-01695(CM), 2007 WL 4115808, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 7, 2007). It is well-established that attorneys who take on the risk of a contingency case should be compensated for the risk they take:

> It is an established practice in the private legal market to reward attorneys for taking the risk of non-payment by paying them a premium over their normal hourly rates for winning contingency cases. See Richard Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 21.9, at 534–35 (3d ed. 1986). Contingent fees that may far exceed the market value of the services if rendered on a non-contingent basis are accepted in the legal profession as a legitimate way of assuring competent representation for plaintiffs who could not afford to pay on an hourly basis regardless whether they win or lose.

WPPSS, 19 F.3d at 1299.

Class Counsel have received no compensation during the almost eight year course of the litigation. They have invested over $43 million in time and $1.9 million in expenses, and took the chance that they might never be compensated. This factor strongly supports the requested fee.

5. Delay

For virtually all of the services for which DPPs seek payment now, Class Counsel have waited years for payment. Thus, even if DPPs were to receive their full lodestar, they would not be fully compensated for the value of their time. See, e.g., Vizcaino, 290 F.3d at 1051 ("Calculating fees at prevailing rates to compensate for delay in receipt of payment" allowed).

6. High Quality of Work Performed

Finally, Class Counsel respectfully submit that their work has been of the highest quality and has been of great benefit to the class. The Court is familiar with the history of this case, having presided over years of contentious litigation, represented by over four thousand docket entries. This brief provides an overview of the work Class Counsel performed by describing the various substantive motions, procedural matters, discovery requests and disputes, depositions, and other matters. Further description of the work performed by Class Counsel is set forth in the Saveri Declaration and the declarations of other Class Counsel. The amount and quality of the work of Class Counsel also strongly supports the fee they seek.

7. Lodestar Cross-Check Confirms the Reasonableness of the Requested Fee

Finally, a cross-check of the requested fee with Class Counsel's lodestar demonstrates that the proposed fee is reasonable. The lodestar method requires that the Court determine the number of hours reasonably spent by counsel on a matter, multiply it by counsel's reasonable hourly rates, and then adjust the lodestar up or down based on various factors similar to those relevant to the percentage method. Ordinarily, where there has been a substantial recovery for the class, the Court applies a multiplier to account for contingency, risk, delay and other factors which can range from one to four. Omnivision, 559 F. Supp. 2d, 1048. Here, because the fee sought amounts to less than the value of the time Class Counsel has invested in the case, and because the circumstances would support the application of a multiplier, the lodestar cross-check confirms the reasonableness of the fee DPPs seek. See, e.g., Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949; Vizcaino II, 290 F.3d at 1048–50.

Class Counsel have spent 95,229.33 hours prosecuting this Action. As explained above, all of this time was reasonable and necessary for the prosecution of this action. Online DVD, 779 F.3d at 949. Among other things, work was assigned by S&S among Class Counsel to avoid duplication; as required by CMO 1, counsel kept contemporaneous time records and periodically reported their time to S&S; and, where possible, DPPs worked with the IPPs and DAPs to avoid duplication of effort. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 8, 17.

Moreover, the lodestar understates the work performed by Class Counsel. It includes time from May 9, 2008, the date the Court appointed interim lead counsel through January, 2014, when DPPs reached agreement on a settlement with Samsung SDI. At that time, S&S instructed Class Counsel to stop working. It therefore excludes substantial work by counsel in connection with their pre-filing investigation of the case, the JPML proceeding, and the organization of counsel. It also does not include substantial time preparing this application for fees and reimbursement of expenses. Saveri Decl. ¶ 8.[7]

At historic hourly rates—i.e., those in place at the time the work was performed—this time results in a lodestar of $43,335,517.50. See Saveri Decl. ¶ 8 & Ex. 4. The record demonstrates that Class Counsel's hourly rates are reasonable. Each firm avers that the rates charged are that firm's usual and customary rates at the time the work was performed. See Declarations of Class Counsel filed herewith. See also High-Tech, 2015 WL 5158730, at *9 (approving rates).

DPPs' fee request of $38,235,000 thus amounts to just 88% of their lodestar. This confirms its reasonableness beyond question. In re Portal Software, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. C-03-5138 VRW, 2007 WL 4171201, at *16 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 26, 2007) (fact that fee sought is less than the lodestar suggests fairness of award); LCD II, 2013 WL 149692, at *1 (fact that fee sought is less than the lodestar "serves to confirm the reasonableness of the fees requested.").

8. The Reaction of the Settlement Class to Date Supports the Fee Request

Settlement notices were sent to class members in connection with each settlement reached with Defendants. Altogether, five settlement notices were sent to class members. Each informed class members that "At a future time, Interim Lead Counsel will ask the Court for attorneys' fees not to exceed one-third (33.3%) of this or any future Settlement Fund plus reimbursement of their costs and expenses." See Dkt. Nos. 1323-3, Ex. A; 1464-2, Ex. A; 1573-2, Ex. A; 1757-2, Ex. A;

[7] S&S's declaration includes additional time through July 31, 2015 for work relating preliminary and final approval of the Hitachi and Samsung SDI settlements, motion practice relating to the failure of Dell and Sharp to timely submit their requests for exclusion from those settlement classes, and administrative matters. After January, 2014, S&S and Class Counsel also worked on the case against Mitsubishi and Thomson. However, DPPs do not seek a fee award for that work at this time, and have not included any such time in their lodestar calculation. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 71–73.

2728-2, Ex. A. As noted above, out of over 16,000 class members, including many large and sophisticated businesses, no objections were received. Saveri Decl. ¶ 78. This is another strong indication of the reasonableness of the fee DPPs seek. "When a class is comprised of sophisticated business entities that can be expected to oppose any request for attorney fees they find unreasonable, the lack of objections 'indicates the appropriateness of the [fee] request.'" In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. Civ.03-0085 FSH, 2005 WL 3008808, at *13 n.1 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2005) (awarding fee of 33.3% of a $75 million settlement).

C. Class Counsel Are Entitled to Reimbursement for Their Reasonable Litigation Expenses

Class Counsel also request reimbursement and/or approval of litigation costs and expenses they incurred on behalf of the class. Attorneys who create a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled to be reimbursed out-of-pocket expenses incurred in creating the fund so long as the submitted expenses are reasonable, necessary and directly related to the prosecution of the action. Vincent v. Hughes Air West, 557 F.2d 759, 769 (9th Cir. 1977); OmniVision, 559 F. Supp. 2d at 1048 ("Attorneys may recover their reasonable expenses that would typically be billed to paying clients in non-contingency matters."). Reasonable reimbursable litigation expenses include: those incurred for document production, experts and consultants, depositions, translation services, notice, and claim administration. See, e.g., 1 Alba Conte, Attorney Fee Awards § 2.19 (3d ed. 2004).

Class Counsel incurred a total of $4,794,787.44 in reasonable expenses as follows : (i) document management system and database costs of $283,694.51; (ii) mediation costs of $83,724.42; payments to special masters of $186,644.14; (iv) payments to translation services of $127,083.17; (v) Court filing fees and costs of $6,352.59; (vi) payments to experts of $3,076,506.85; (vii) federal express costs of $14,339.14; (viii) transcript costs of $166,311.46; (ix) online legal and factual research (e.g., LexisNexis and Westlaw) of $245,126.87; (x) messenger and delivery costs of $788.60; (xi) in-house copy charges (capped at 20 cents per page) of $140,085.84; (xii) professional copy charges of $12,083.24; (xiii) postage charges of $1,331.39; (xiv) service of process charges of $22,789.36; (xv) telephone and facsimile charges of $35,282.68; and (xvi) travel and meal charges of $392,643.18. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 12–13. As detailed in the Declarations of Class Counsel, these expenses were reasonable and necessary for the prosecution of this action and are customarily approved by courts as proper litigation expenses. See In re Media Vision Tech. Sec. Litig., 913 F. Supp. 1362, 1366 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (Court fees, experts/consultants, service of process, court reporters, transcripts, deposition costs, computer research, photocopies, postage, telephone/fax); Thornberry v. Delta Air Lines, 676 F.2d 1240, 1244 (9th Cir. 1982), remanded on other grounds, 461 U.S. 952 (1983) (travel, meals and lodging); Redding v. Fairman, 717 F.2d 1105, 1119 (9th Cir. 1983) (same); Conte, Attorney Fee Awards § 2.19.

Of the total amount, Class Counsel advanced $1,927,392.12 out of their own funds on behalf of the class. $986,167.30 of this was paid out of a litigation fund established by Class Counsel and maintained by S&S (the "Litigation Fund"). An accounting of the payments from the Litigation Fund by category is set forth in Exhibit 5 to the Saveri Declaration. Id. $941,224.82 was paid by individual Class Counsel and is detailed in their individual declarations. Exhibit 4 to the Saveri Declaration summarizes these expenses. Class Counsel therefore request that the Court Order that they be reimbursed in the amount of $1,927,392.12 from the Settlement Fund. Saveri Decl. ¶¶ 9–10.

Class Counsel paid $2,867,395.32, the balance of the expenses, from the Settlement Fund as authorized by the Court. See Dkt. Nos. 1506, 1507 and 1833. The Court authorized the use of up to $3 million from the Settlement Fund for use in the prosecution of the litigation, subject to an accounting. See id. Exhibit 6 to the Saveri Declaration accounts for these expenses per the Court's order. Saveri Decl. ¶ 11. Class Counsel request that the Court approve these expenses as reasonable. Class Counsel do not seek reimbursement for these expenses.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN RE: PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY AVERAGE WHOLESALE PRICE LITIGATION	MDL NO. 1456 CIVIL ACTION: 01-CV-12257-PBS
THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: ALL CLASS ACTIONS RELATING TO TRACK TWO DEFENDANTS	Judge Patti B. Saris

[PROPOSED] FINAL ORDER AND JUDGMENT GRANTING FINAL APPROVAL TO PROPOSED TRACK TWO CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS, APPROVING PROPOSED ALLOCATION OF SETTLEMENT FUNDS, AND APPROVING CLASS COUNSEL'S APPLICATION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES, REIMBURSEMENT OF LITIGATION EXPENSES AND COMPENSATION FOR CLASS REPRESENTATIVES

This Court having considered: (a) the Track Two Settlement Agreement and Release, dated March 7, 2008, including all Exhibits thereto (the "Agreement"), between the Plaintiffs and Defendants Abbott Laboratories, Amgen Inc., Aventis Pharmaceuticals Inc., Hoechst Marion Roussel, Baxter Healthcare Corp., Baxter International Inc., Bayer Corporation, Dey, Inc., Fujisawa Healthcare, Inc., Fujisawa USA, Inc., Immunex Corporation, Pharmacia Corporation, Pharmacia & Upjohn LLC (f/k/a Pharmacia & Upjohn, Inc.), Sicor, Inc., Gensia, Inc., Gensia Sicor Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc., and ZLB Behring, L.L.C. (the "Track Two Defendants"); (b) the Distribution Plan, Claims Process and Notice Plan for the Settlement as contained in the Court's July 2, 2008 order preliminarily approving the Settlement; (c) Class Counsel's Proposal to Rebalance the Track Two Settlement, as embodied in Plaintiffs' Second Supplemental Submission in Support of the Rebalanced Track Two Settlement (Dkt. No. 7750), which the Court preliminarily approved in its August 28, 2011 electronic order (Dkt. No. 7772); and (d) Class Counsel's application for attorneys' fees, reimbursement of litigation expenses, and compensation for the Class Representatives; and having held hearings on March 14, 2008, April 9, 2008, December 16, 2008, , April 27, 2009, June 13, 2011, July 7, 2011, August 8, 2011 and November 22, 2011 and having considered all of the submissions and arguments with respect thereto, and otherwise being fully informed, and good cause appearing therefor,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that:

1. This Final Order and Judgment incorporates herein and makes a part hereof, the Agreement, including Exhibit B ("Class Drugs") and all other Exhibits thereto. Unless otherwise provided herein, the terms as defined in the Agreement shall have the same meanings for purposes of this Final Order and Judgment.

2. The Court has personal jurisdiction over all Class Representatives, Settlement Class Members, and the Track Two Defendants for purposes of this settlement only, and has subject matter jurisdiction to approve the Agreement.

3. Based on the record before the Court, including all submissions in support of the Class Settlements set forth in the Agreement ("the Class Settlements"), objections and responses thereto, as well as the Agreement itself, the Court hereby certifies the following nationwide classes (the "Classes") for settlement purposes only:

(a) Medicare Part B Co-Payment Class ("Class 1")

All natural persons in the United States who, from January 1, 1991 through January 1, 2005, made, or incurred an obligation to make, any portion of a Medicare Part B co-payment for a Class Drug manufactured, marketed, sold, or distributed by a Released Company.

(b) Third-Party Payor MediGap Supplemental Insurance Class ("Class 2")

All TPPs in the United States who, from January 1, 1991, through January 1, 2005, made, or incurred an obligation to make, reimbursements for any portion of a Medicare Part B co-payment for a Class Drug manufactured, marketed, sold, or distributed by a Released Company.

(c) Consumer and Third-Party Payor Class For Payments Made Outside the Medicare Context ("Class 3")

All natural persons in the United States who made, or incurred an obligation to make, a non-Medicare Part B payment for a Class Drug manufactured, marketed, sold, or distributed by a Released Company, and all TPPs in the United States who made, or incurred an obligation to make, non-Medicare Part B reimbursements for a Class Drug manufactured, marketed, sold, or distributed by a Released Company, during the period from January 1, 1991, through March 1, 2008.

Excluded from each of the Settlement Classes are (1) the Released Companies; (2) their respective past, present, and future officers, directors, managers, employees, agents, sales representatives, and liability insurers; and (3) all hospitals, clinics, physicians, or physician practice groups, or other health care provider or group of providers, that purchased drugs manufactured, marketed, sold, or distributed by a Released Company, and that (a) administered, dispensed, or prescribed such drugs to a consumer and (b) billed a consumer, TPP, or ISHP for such drugs (the "Released Parties"). (The exclusion of Released Company "employees" from the Settlement Classes shall not affect the eligibility of any ERISA plans or other TPPs for settlement benefits regardless whether their plan participants might be excluded "employees.") Additionally excluded from each of the Settlement Classes are the following: (1) all natural persons who only paid flat co-payments, and not any percentage co-payments, for Class Drugs; (2) all federal, state, and local governmental entities in the United States, except any non-Medicaid state or local governmental agencies or programs that made or incurred an obligation to make a reimbursement for a Class Drug as part of a health benefit plan for their employees, but only with respect to such payments; and (3) the Independent Settling Health Plans ("ISHPs").

In so holding, the Court finds that the prerequisites of FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a) and (b)(3) have been satisfied for certification of the nationwide Classes for settlement purposes: Settlement Class Members, numbering in the thousands, are so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; there are questions of law and fact common to each of the Settlement Classes; the claims and defenses of the Class Representatives are typical of the claims and defenses of the Settlement Class Members they represent; the Class Representatives have fairly and adequately protected the interests of the Settlement Classes with regard to the consolidated claims of the Settlement Classes they represent; the common questions of law and fact predominate over questions affecting only individual Settlement Class Members, rendering the Settlement Classes sufficiently cohesive to warrant a nationwide class settlement; and the certification of the Settlement Classes is superior to individual litigation and/or settlement as a method for the fair and efficient resolution of the MDL Class Actions.

In making all of the foregoing findings, the Court has exercised its discretion in certifying the Settlement Classes, based, inter alia, upon the Court's familiarity with the claims and parties in these and other cases, including prior AWP class settlements, the interests of the various constituent groups, and the negotiation process overseen by MDL Mediator Eric Green.

4. The record shows that notice has been given to the Settlement Classes in the manner approved by the Court including in its Preliminary Approval Order of March 7, 2008 [Dkt. No. 5426] and its electronic Order Directing Notice of Track Two Settlement Revision to Affected Class Members and Scheduling Fairness Hearing (Dkt. No. 7772). The Court finds that such notice: (i) constitutes reasonable and the best practicable notice; (ii) constitutes notice that was reasonably calculated, under the circumstances, to apprise Class Members of the terms of the Agreement and Class Settlements, and Class Members' right to object to or exclude themselves from the Settlement Classes and appear at settlement fairness hearings held on March 14, 2008, April 9, 2008, December 16, 2008, April 27, 2009, June 13, 2011, July 7, 2011, August 8, 2011 and November 22, 2011 (the "Fairness Hearings"), (iii) constitutes due, adequate, and sufficient notice to all persons or entities entitled to receive notice; and (iv) meets the requirements of due process and FED. R. CIV. P. 23.

5. No individuals or entities, other than those listed on Exhibit A hereto, have excluded themselves from the Settlement Classes. This Order shall have no force or effect on the persons or entities listed on Exhibit A hereto.

6. The Court finds that extensive arm's-length negotiations have taken place in good faith between Lead Class Counsel and the Track Two Defendants' Counsel resulting in the Agreement. Additionally the Court finds that extensive arm's-length negotiations have taken place on behalf of separate counsel appointed by Lead Class Counsel to represent the interests of Consumer Settlement Class Members and TPP Settlement Class Members in order to apportion the Settlement Fund between these constituencies and that these arm's length negotiations afforded the structural protection required to ensure adequate representation of these constituencies.

7. The Court finds that the designated class representatives are appropriate representatives for settlement purposes. The Court finds that each of these representatives, or an agent or member thereof, has made a purchase or reimbursement payment for one or more of the Class Drugs.

8. The Court has considered all of the factors enumerated in FED. R. CIV. P. 23(g) and finds that Class Counsel have fairly and adequately represented the interests of the Settlement Classes.

9. Pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 23(e), the Court hereby finally approves in all respects the Class Settlements set forth in the Agreement and finds that the Class Settlements, the Agreement, as revised in the rebalancing, and the plan of distribution as set forth in Paragraphs III.E-G of the Agreement, are, in all respects, fair, reasonable and adequate, and in the best interest of the Settlement Classes. The salient changes in the rebalancing are as follows:

(a) Increase in Money Available to Consumers. $3,125,000 was reallocated from TPPs to Consumers, resulting in Consumer members of Classes 1 and 3 being allocated $25,000,000 of the Settlement Amount and TPPs being allocated $100,000,000 of the Settlement Amount.

(b) Change in the Way Class A Drug Claims Are Calculated. Class A Drug claims are now based on Plaintiffs' expert's calculation of estimated overcharges or damages associated with the alleged price inflation for Class A Drugs, rather than on the amount of cash payment or co-payment made. These estimated overcharges will be doubled for the "Heartland Period" December 1, 1997 through December 31, 2003. This change conforms the Track Two Settlement distribution closer to the distributions in previous settlements approved by this Court in association with the actions against defendants AstraZeneca and BMS.

(c) Recharacterization and Additional Documentation Related to Epogen. Epogen was moved from a Class A Drug to a Class B Drug because it was consistent with the profile for a Class B Drug and not for a Class A Drug. Specifically, the spreads for Epogen were calculated by Plaintiff's expert to exceed 30% only in 2003 and then only minimally so, there was minimal or no evidence of spread marketing in connection with Epogen and the Plaintiff's expert concluded that Class 1 and Class 3 members suffered either minimal or no damage relating to Epogen. Consumer claimants were required to provide documentation evidencing at least one Epogen administration during the eligible period because data received from the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services ("CMS") did not provide sufficient detail to distinguish an administration of Epogen from an administration of Procrit due to the fact that Epogen and Procrit are different brand names for the same biologic compound (epoetin alfa) and share common J-Codes. The additional documentation was necessary to ensure the claimants had made co-payments for Epogen, which is part of this settlement, and not for Procrit, which is not part of this settlement. Furthermore, payments for most administrations of Epogen under Medicare Part B were not based on AWP and are not eligible for compensation in this settlement. Only Epogen administrations – and not Procrit administrations – under Medicare Part B that do not relate to kidney dialysis are eligible for compensation. Administrations for Epogen under Medicare Part B related to dialysis are not eligible for compensation.

(d) Additional Documentation Related to Eligard. To receive a distribution for Eligard administrations, eligible Consumer claimants are required to provide documentation evidencing at least one Eligard administration during the eligible period. This is necessary because data received from CMS does not provide sufficient detail to distinguish administrations of Eligard from Lupron given that the two drugs share common J-Codes.

(e) Additional Documentation Related to Certain Drugs under Medicare Part B. To receive a distribution for administrations of certain drugs assigned "not otherwise classified" J-Codes 3490 and J8999 (alcohol injection, bupivacaine, copper trace/cupric chloride, diltazem hydrochloride, enalaprilat, kineret, labetalol, leucovorin calcium, manganese chloride, novacaine/procaine, pancuronium bromide, potassium acetate, propofol, sodium acetate, verapamil HCL and zinc chloride), eligible Class 1 Consumer claimants are required to provide documentation evidencing at least one administration during the eligible period. This is necessary because data received from CMS does not provide sufficient detail to distinguish administration of these drugs from other drugs covered by the same J-Codes and not part of this Settlement.

(f) Payments for Leukine and Novantrone after 2002. Administrations of Leukine and Novantrone after 2002 are no longer eligible for reimbursement. Defendant Immunex Corporation sold the rights to market and distribute Leukine and Novantrone in 2002 to non-defendants.

10. The Court finds that all Class 1 and Class 3 Consumers will receive more than their actual damages for eligible Class A Drug administrations. In addition, Class 1 and Class 3 Consumers will receive a substantial portion of their damages for Class B Drug administrations, and will receive greater than actual damages for some Class B Drugs.

11. The Court also finds that Class Counsel undertook substantial discovery and analysis into the Class Drugs and Defendants sufficient to fully evaluate the decision of whether to recommend this Settlement to the Court and to group the drugs into Class A and Class B. In addition, the Court finds that Class Counsel fairly assessed the liability challenges posed by the facts of this case including the dearth of spread marketing evidence, the challenges associated with multi-source drugs (including causation issues raised by J-Code identification challenges and the median price analysis), and the relatively low level of Class damage. See Plaintiffs'

Supplemental Submission in Support of a Rebalanced Track Two Settlement filed on August 3, 2011 (Dkt. No. 7697).

12. The Court further approves the establishment of the Settlement Fund as set forth in the Agreement and the Escrow Agreement submitted by the Parties. The Parties are hereby directed to implement and consummate the Class Settlements according to the terms and provisions of the Agreement. Subject to paragraph 21 below, the Effective Date of the Agreement shall be as set forth in Paragraphs III.K and II.Q of the Agreement and shall not occur until the Final disposition of all appeals relating to the Track Two Settlement, including the Notice of Appeal as to the Order denying her Motion to Intervene (Dkt. No. 7770) filed by Corinna Connick, as well as any appeals of this Order. In addition, the Parties are authorized to agree to and adopt such amendments and modifications to the Agreement that (i) are consistent in all material respects with this Final Order and Judgment, and (ii) do not limit the rights of the Settlement Classes.

13. The claims against the Track Two Defendants on behalf of the Classes in the MDL Class Actions are hereby dismissed with prejudice and without costs to any party, except as otherwise provided herein.

14. Upon the Effective Date of the Agreement, the Class Releasors (as defined in Paragraph II.E of the Agreement) shall release and forever discharge the Released Parties (as defined in Paragraph II.MM of the Agreement) from their respective Released Consumer Class Claims and Released TPP Class Claims (as defined in Paragraphs II.JJ and II.NN of the Agreement).

15. The Court finds that the Escrow Account is a "Qualified Settlement Fund" as defined in section 1.468B-1(a) of the Treasury Regulations in that it satisfies each of the following requirements:

(a) The Escrow Account is established pursuant to an order of this Court and is subject to the continuing jurisdiction of this Court;

(b) The Escrow Account is established to resolve or satisfy one or more contested or uncontested claims that have resulted or may result from an event that has occurred and that has given rise to at least one claim asserting liability arising out of an alleged violation of law; and

(c) The assets of the Escrow Account are segregated from other assets of the Track Two Defendants, the transferor of payments to the Settlement Fund, and from the assets of persons related to the Track Two Defendants.

16. Under the "relation-back" rule provided under section 1.468B-1(j)(2)(i) of the Treasury Regulations, the Court finds that:

(a) The Escrow Account met the requirements of paragraph 15 of this Order prior to the date of this Order approving the establishment of the Settlement Fund subject to the continued jurisdiction of this Court; and

(b) The Track Two Defendants and the "administrator" under section 1.468B-2(k)(3) of the Treasury Regulations may jointly elect to treat the Escrow Account as coming into existence as a "Qualified Settlement Fund" on the later of the date the Escrow Account met the requirements of paragraphs 15(b) and 15(c) of this Order or January 1 of the calendar year in which all of the requirements of paragraph 15 of this Order were met. If such relation-back election is made, the assets held by the Escrow Account on such date shall be treated as having been transferred to the Escrow Account on that date.

17. Nothing in this Final Order and Judgment, the Class Settlements, the Agreement, or any documents or statements related thereto, is or shall be deemed or construed to be an admission or evidence of any violation of any statute or law or of any liability or wrongdoing by any of the Released Parties.

18. Class Counsel have moved pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 23(h), 54(d) and 52(a) for an award of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses. Pursuant to Rules 23(h)(3) and 52(a) this Court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

(a) that the Class Settlements confer substantial benefits on the Settlement Class Members;

(b) that the value conferred on the Settlement Classes is immediate and readily quantifiable (upon this Judgment becoming Final (as defined in the Agreement), Settlement Class Members who have submitted valid Claim Forms will receive cash payments that represent a significant portion of their alleged financial harms);

(c) that Class Counsel vigorously and effectively pursued the Settlement Class Members' claims before this Court in this highly complex case;

(d) that the Class Settlements were obtained as a direct result of Class Counsel's skillful advocacy;

(e) that the Class Settlements were reached following extensive negotiation between Lead Class Counsel and the Track Two Defendants' Counsel, and were negotiated in good-faith and in the absence of collusion;

(f) that during the prosecution of the Track Two Claims in the MDL Class Actions, Class Counsel incurred expenses at least in the amount of $10,520,273.88, which included costs for expert witnesses and other expenses which the Court finds to be reasonable and necessary to the representation of the Settlement Classes;

(g) that Settlement Class Members were advised in the notice approved by the Court that Class Counsel intended to apply for an award of attorneys' fees in an amount of up to 33 1/3% of the Settlement Fund (plus interest thereon from the date of funding of the Settlement Fund) plus reimbursement of reasonable costs and expenses incurred in the prosecution of this action, to be paid from the Settlement Fund;

(h) that few Settlement Class Members have submitted written objections to the award of attorneys' fees and expenses;

(i) that counsel who recover a common benefit for persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorneys' fee from the Settlement Fund as a whole. See, e.g., Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 866, 900 n.16 (1984);

(j) that use of the percentage of the fund method in common fund cases is the prevailing practice in this Circuit for awarding attorneys' fees and permits the Court to focus on a showing that a fund conferring benefit on a class resulted from the lawyers' efforts. In re Thirteen Appeals Arising Out of the San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 56 F.3d 295 (1st Cir. 1995); and

(k) the requested fee award is within the applicable range of percentage awards in this Circuit; In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., No. 01-12239 (D. Mass. April 9, 2004) [Doc. No. 297]; Mowbray v. Waste Management Holdings, No. 98-11534-WGY (D. Mass. Aug.

2, 2001); In re Copley Pharmaceutical, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 94-11897-WGY (D. Mass. Feb. 8, 1996); Wilensky v. Digital Equipment Corp., No. 94-10752-JLT (D. Mass. July 11, 2001). Accordingly, Class Counsel are hereby awarded (i) $ 7,000,000 from the $25,000,000 Settlement Fund allocated to Consumers in Classes 1 and 3 under the Rebalancing Proposal (representing 28% of the Settlement Fund allocated to Consumers in Classes 1 and 3), and (ii) $30,000,000 from the $100,000,000 Settlement Fund allocated to third-party payors in Classes 2 and 3 under the Rebalancing Proposal (representing 30% of the Settlement Fund allocated to TPPs in Classes 2 and 3), as Class Counsel's fee and expense award which the Court finds to be fair and reasonable, and which amount shall be paid to Class Counsel from the Settlement Fund in accordance with the terms of the Agreement, with interest from the date of the funding of the Settlement Fund to the date of payment, at the same net interest rate earned by the Settlement Fund. This award is consistent with attorneys' fee awards previously approved by the Court in this litigation. The attorneys' fees and expenses awarded by the Court shall be allocated among Class Counsel by Lead Class Counsel at their discretion. subject to review by the Court.

19. The present and former Class Representatives are hereby compensated in the following amounts for their reasonable time spent on tasks related to their representation of the Classes, which shall be paid from the Settlement Fund: Katie Bean, $6,100; Jimmie May Carter, $6,100; Pat Drewett, $2,000; Virginia Newell, $4,100; Mary Wright, $6,100; Roger Clark, $6,100; Rev. David Aaronson, $200; Alex K. Gunther, $5,700; Beverly Thomson Shaw, $3,000; Rebecca Anne Hopkins, $200; Larry Young, $8,800; M. Joyce Howe, $200; Ethel Walters, $5,700; Muriel Tonacchio, $500.00; United Food & Commercial Workers Unions & Employers Midwest Health Benefits, $2,310; Sheet Metal Workers National Health Fund, $2,000; Pirelli Armstrong Tire Corporation Retiree Medical Benefits Trust, $1,010; Teamsters Health &

Welfare Fund of Philadelphia and Vicinity, $2,540; Board of Trustees of Carpenters & Millwrights of Houston & Vicinity Welfare Trust Fund, $1,300; Philadelphia Federation of Teachers Health & Welfare Fund, $2,520; Man-U Service Contract Trust Fund, $3,340; and Pipefitters Local Union 537 Trust Funds, $1,640.

20. Without affecting the finality of this Final Order and Judgment, the Court retains continuing and exclusive jurisdiction over all matters relating to administration, consummation, enforcement, and interpretation of the Agreement and of this Final Order and Judgment, to protect and effectuate this Final Order and Judgment, and for any other necessary purpose. The Track Two Defendants, Class Representatives, and all Settlement Class Members are hereby deemed to have irrevocably submitted to the exclusive jurisdiction of this Court, for the purpose of any suit, action, proceeding or dispute arising out of or relating to the Agreement or the applicability of the Agreement, including the Exhibits thereto, and only for such purposes. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, and without affecting the finality of this Final Order and Judgment, the Court retains exclusive jurisdiction over any such suit, action, or proceeding. Solely for purposes of such suit, action, or proceeding, to the fullest extent they may effectively do so under applicable law, the parties hereto are deemed to have irrevocably waived and agreed not to assert, by way of motion, as a defense or otherwise, any claim or objection that they are not subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, or that this Court is, in any way, an improper venue or an inconvenient forum.

21. In the event that the Class Settlements do not become effective according to the terms of the Agreement, this Final Order and Judgment shall be rendered null and void as provided by the Agreement, shall be vacated and, all orders entered and releases delivered in connection herewith shall be null and void to the extent provided by and in accordance with the Agreement.

22. No Class Member, either directly, representatively, or in any other capacity (other than a Class Member identified on Exhibit A who validly and timely elected to be excluded from one or more of the Classes), shall commence, continue, or prosecute any action or proceeding against any or all Released Party or Parties in any court or tribunal asserting any of the Released Claims defined in the Agreement, and each Class Releasor is hereby permanently enjoined from so proceeding.

23. Pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 54(b) this Court expressly finds that there are no remaining claims between Class Plaintiffs and the Track Two Defendants in the MDL. There are no subsequent proceedings between the Class Plaintiffs and any remaining party in the MDL that will affect the Court's decision with respect to Class Plaintiffs' settlement with the Track Two Defendants. No party in the MDL will be prejudiced by the immediate entry of this Final Order and Judgment in accordance with the Settlement Agreement. Pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 54(b), this Court expressly determines that there is no just cause for delay and expressly directs that this Final Order and Judgment, upon filing in 01-CV-12257-PBS, be deemed as a final judgment with respect to each of the Settlement Classes, and specifically all such Settlement Class Members' Released Claims against the Track Two Defendants and all Released Parties.

MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION § 14.121.....8

MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION § 14.122.....9

I. INTRODUCTION

The Track Two Settlement Agreement provides for Track Two Defendants[1] to pay a total of $125 million to settle claims of all Consumer Class Members, all TPP Class Members and the claims of all Independent Settling Health Plans ("ISHPs"). The Settlement provides real, immediate, and substantial cash benefits for each Class Member who submits a valid claim. Consumer Class Members are eligible to receive up to triple their damages for payments made for Class A drugs (Anzemet, Aranesp, Epogen, Ferrlecit, InFed, Neulasta, and Neupogen) the drugs driving most of the Classes damages, and single damages for the remaining Class B drugs (primarily multisource drugs).

Class Counsel now seek an award of attorneys' fees and expenses and compensation to the class representatives in association with the Track Two Settlement. Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court approve a combined fee and cost award of $37,500,000.00, to be paid from the settlement funds. This represents 30 percent of the total $125 million settlement amount.

Class Counsel also request that the Court approve compensation for the Class Representatives in the total amount of $17,160.00 at $100 per hour for the time that each Representative spent providing documents and testimony in connection with this case. Like the attorneys' fees and expenses, these amounts will be paid from the settlement funds.

The requested attorneys' fee and cost award is reasonable in light not only of the excellent results achieved for the Classes but also the risks involved in undertaking this unique and highly complex matter and the immense effort required in litigating the claims. From its inception, this case has been intensely fought, as Track Two Defendants, like Track One Defendants, challenged discovery and class certification. The parties challenged each other virtually every step of the way until settlement was reached. Litigating this case has required immense time, energy and resources from Class Counsel. Furthermore, as the Court is well aware, the claims involve extremely complex and challenging issues of fact and law.

[1] Track Two Defendants are Abbott Laboratories, Amgen Inc., Aventis Pharmaceuticals Inc., Hoechst Marion Roussel, Baxter Healthcare Corp., Baxter International Inc., Bayer Corporation, Dey, Inc., Fujisawa Healthcare, Inc., Fujisawa USA, Inc., Immunex Corporation, Pharmacia Corporation, Pharmacia & Upjohn LLC (f/k/a Pharmacia & Upjohn, Inc.), Sicor, Inc., Gensia, Inc., Gensia Sicor Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc., and ZLB Behring, L.L.C.

Class Counsel faced considerable risk in proceeding on a wholly contingent-fee basis. Class Counsel have foregone other opportunities, devoting their time to this matter instead of others. To date, Class Counsel have been awarded compensation for three settlements in the nearly ten years this action has been pending: $21,615,000 out of the proceeds of the GSK settlement, $8,580,000 in connection with the AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement, and $30,900,000 in connection with the Astrazeneca Class 2/3 Settlement, for a total of $61,095,000. A fee request in connection with the BMS Settlement is pending. For the entire AWP litigation against all Defendants from the inception of this case in 2001 through March 31, 2011, Plaintiffs' counsel have accumulated a total lodestar of $72,190,840 and incurred expenses totaling $9,417,783,[2] for a total case "investment" of $81,608,623.[3] If the Court grants the present fee request of $37,500,000, Plaintiffs' counsel will recover their investment in these actions as well as a modest multiplier on their time.

[2] The Declaration of Marc H. Edelson In Support Of Lead Class Counsel's Motion For Award of Attorneys' Fees And Costs in Association with the Track Two Settlements ("Edelson Decl."), submitted herewith, sets forth the breakdown of total unaudited attorney hours, fees and expenses incurred from inception through December 31, 2010. Class Counsel will provide back-up for all attorneys' fees and expenses sought for reimbursement, if the Court wishes. We also note that it is possible that we have not received complete information from all counsel and that, consequently, the lodestar information attached to the Edelson Declaration may change. Nonetheless, we believe that it is a reasonable approximation of the hours and expenses incurred by counsel through December 31, 2010. Edelson Decl., ¶ 9.

[3] As the Court is aware, the MDL includes multiple Defendants in two separate tracks, and this Settlement resolves claims against Track Two Defendants. Due to the nature of the allegations, it is not possible to attribute each attorney hour or particular expenditure to litigation against a particular Defendant. Some items could be allocated to specific Defendants, but many more – for example discovery from third parties and research on particular legal or factual issues that apply to all Defendants – cannot be separately attributed to a particular Defendant.

The table below sets forth each AWP class settlement (both actual and anticipated), the actual fees awarded to date in the AWP class actions, and projected fee awards if the Court grants the anticipated requests. As shown, estimated fees for all AWP class action settlements could total $104,295,000.

Settlement Award	Amount of Actual/Projected Fee and Cost Awards	Awards as a Percent of Settlement Value
GSK Global Settlement (approved)	$ 21,615,000	33⅓%
AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement (approved)	8,580,000	30%
AstraZeneca Class 2/3 (approved)	30,900,000	30%
BMS Global Settlement (request pending)	5,700,000	30%
Track 2 Global Settlement (requested here)	37,500,000	30%
Total	$ 104,295,000

The impact of folding expenses into a percentage fee award is quite significant and should not be overlooked. Because the requested fee awards include expense reimbursements, the net fee percentage ultimately awarded by the Court for all AWP settlements will be approximately 11.5% lower given that expenses constitute roughly 11.5% of counsel's total $81,608,623 "investment" in the case. Thus, the "net" fee awards requested will amount to less than 19 percent once the effect of including expenses is considered.

A total projected fee and cost award of $104,295,000 modestly exceeds Plaintiffs' counsels' collective lodestar of $72,190,840 as of March 31, 2011, resulting in a small and very reasonable multiplier of 1.45, even though the overall results achieved in the AWP litigation should warrant a larger multiplier. If Plaintiffs' counsels' collective expenses of $9,417,783 are included in the analysis, the multiplier drops to 1.28. These multiplier cross-checks should assure the Court that counsel's overall compensation for all settlements is fair and reasonable.

The results in this complex litigation and the effort required well support the requested attorneys' fee and expense award here, which is justified by relevant factors considered by courts in this Circuit and others, is in line with the fees that Class Counsel could have obtained at arm's-length in the open market, and, when added to prior and anticipated fee awards, will result in reasonable overall compensation for Plaintiffs' counsels' substantial efforts in litigating and resolving all AWP class actions pending before this Court. Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court grant this petition.

II. HISTORY OF THE LITIGATION

The Court is well acquainted with the history of this complex case and the unique challenges that Class Counsel have faced in representing their clients and the Classes against a array of sophisticated and well-represented Defendants. Rather than burden the Court with additional pages recounting that history here, we respectfully refer the Court to the Declaration of Steve W. Berman In Support of Lead Class Counsel's Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Costs and Compensation to the Class Representatives in Association with the Track Two Settlement (the "Berman Decl."), which discusses in some detail the history of this case.

III. THE COURT SHOULD APPROVE THE FEE PETITION AS FAIR AND REASONABLE

A. Class Counsel Are Entitled To Compensation Based Upon The Benefits Created By The Litigation

Courts have long recognized that a lawyer who recovers a "common fund" is entitled to reasonable attorney fees from the fund as a whole. Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); In re Thirteen Appeals Arising Out of the San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 56 F.3d 295, 305 n.6 (1st Cir. 1995) ("[t]he common fund doctrine is founded on the equitable principle that those who have profited from litigation should share its costs"); In re Fidelity/Micron Sec. Litig., 167 F.3d 735, 737 (1st Cir. 1999) ("lawyers whose efforts succeed in creating a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled not only to reasonable fees, but also to recover from the fund, as a general matter, expenses, reasonable in amount, that were necessary to bring the action to a climax"). "The 'common fund' doctrine is designed to spread the costs of litigation among all the beneficiaries of an identifiable fund over which a court can exercise legitimate control, in effect guarding against the unjust enrichment of passive beneficiaries at the expense of the active beneficiary." Bebchick v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Comm'n, 805 F.2d 396, 402 (D.C. Cir. 1986).

Substantial fee awards in successful cases, such as the present action, encourage and support meritorious class actions, and promote private enforcement of, and compliance with, various RICO and consumer protection laws. Moreover, awards of attorney fees help to ensure adequate enforcement of class members' legal rights. "[A] financial incentive is necessary to entice capable attorneys, who otherwise could be paid regularly by hourly-rate clients, to devote their time to complex, time-consuming cases for which they may never be paid." Mashburn v. Nat'l Healthcare, Inc., 684 F. Supp. 679, 687 (M.D. Ala. 1988).

B. The Percentage-Of-The-Fund Method Is Appropriate For Calculating Attorneys' Fees In This Circuit

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held in cases involving the computation of a common fund fee award that it is appropriate for the fee to be determined as a percentage-of-the-fund. See Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 900 n.16 (1984) ("under the common fund doctrine … a reasonable fee is based on a percentage of the fund bestowed on the class"); see also Sprague v. Ticonic Nat'l Bank, 307 U.S. 161, 165-66 (1939); Central R. & Banking Co. v. Pettus, 113 U.S. 116, 124-25 (1885); Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U.S. 527, 532 (1882). In a percentage fee award, the fee is measured by the benefit conferred upon the class.

The First Circuit has left it to the trial court's discretion as to whether to apply the lodestar or percentage-of-the-fund ("POF") method or a combination of the two to award attorneys' fees. In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 308. In adopting what it termed this "malleable" approach, the court recognized that the POF is the prevailing method because it has distinct advantages in complex cases. For example, it is less burdensome to administer,[4] reduces the possibility of collateral disputes, enhances efficiency throughout the litigation, and better approximates the workings of the marketplace. See In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 307-08; see also In re Fidelity/Micron, 167 F.3d at 737.[5]

As a result, many district courts within the First Circuit have indicated their preference for the POF method over the lodestar method. See, e.g., In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 231 F.R.D. 52, 79 (D. Mass. 2005); In re Lupron Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17456, at *9 (D. Mass. Aug. 17, 2005); In re Fidelity/Micron Secs. Litig., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21698 (D. Mass. June 5, 1998), vacated on other grounds, 167 F.3d 735 (1st Cir. 1999); Branch v. FDIC, No. 91-CV-13270, 1998 WL 151249, at *2-4 (D. Mass. Mar. 24, 1998); In re Compact Disc Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 216 F.R.D. 197, 215 (D. Me. 2003)

[4] "Rather than forcing the judge to review the time records of a multitude of attorneys in order to determine the necessity and reasonableness of every hour expended, the POF method permits the judge to focus on 'a showing that the fund conferring a benefit on the class resulted from' the lawyers' efforts." Id. at 307 (quoting Camden I Condo. Ass'n, Inc. v. Dunkle, 946 F.2d 768, 774 (11th Cir. 1991)).

[5] The trend in this Circuit is consistent with the decisions nationwide awarding fees in common fund cases based on a percentage of the total recovery. See MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION (FOURTH) § 14.121 (4th ed. 2009) ("[T]he vast majority of courts of appeals now permit or direct district courts to use the percentage-fee method in common-fund cases."). In addition to this Circuit, at least nine other circuits – the Second, Third, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, and District of Columbia – have accepted the POF method as an appropriate method for awarding attorneys' fees. See In re GMC Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 822 (3d Cir. 1995) ("[i]n common fund cases, a district judge can award attorneys' fees as a percentage of the fund recovered," and in prior cases "fee awards have ranged from nineteen percent to forty-five percent of the settlement fund"); Gottlieb v. Barry, 43 F.3d 474, 487 (10th Cir. 1994) (fee award should be calculated using the percentage method; "use of the lodestar in common fund cases is 'out of fashion'"); Rawlings v. Prudential-Bache Props., Inc., 9 F.3d 513, 515-16 (6th Cir. 1993) (noting "the recent trend towards adoption of a percentage of the fund method," and permitting use of the "percentage of the fund method" in common fund cases); Swedish Hosp. Corp. v. Shalala, 1 F.3d 1261, 1271 (D.C. Cir. 1993) ("percentage-of-the-fund method is the appropriate mechanism for determining the attorney fees award in common fund cases"); In re Continental Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 572 (7th Cir. 1992) (fee award should not be based on "individual hours," but rather on the percentage that counsel "would have received had they handled a similar suit on a contingent fee basis, with a similar outcome, for a paying client"); Camden I Condo. Ass'n v. Dunkle, 946 F.2d 768, 744-45 (11th Cir. 1991) (percentage method mandatory in common fund cases); Six Mexican Workers v. Arizona Citrus Growers, 904 F.2d 1301, 1311 (9th Cir. 1990) ("a reasonable fee under the common fund doctrine is calculated as a percentage of the recovery"); Court Awarded Attorney Fees, Report of the Third Circuit Task Force, 108 F.R.D. 237, 254-59 (1985).

(describing the method as determining whether the "total fee [is] reasonable when examined as a percentage of recovery"); Duhaime v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 989 F. Supp. 375, 377 (D. Mass. 1997); Conley v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 222 B.R. 181, 187 (D. Mass. 1998); In re Fleet/Norstar Secs. Litig., 935 F. Supp. 99, 108 (D.R.I. 1996).

In this case in particular, where there are multiple Defendants and the Court is considering only the fee related to settlement of some Defendants, use of the POF method saves the Court and the parties from the near impossible task of allocating the particular hours of the many attorneys involved to a particular Defendant or group of Defendants. This Court has already used the POF approach in awarding fees associated with the GSK Settlement, the AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement, and the AstraZeneca Class 2/3 Settlements.

C. The Requested Fee And Expense Award Is Fair And Reasonable As A Percentage Of The Benefits Achieved For The Class

Courts have approved fee awards in common fund cases in the range of 25-45%. See, e.g., In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 231 F.R.D. 52 (D. Mass. 2005) (awarding class counsel $22,311,000 in fees or 33% of class fund of $67,000,000, plus a separate award of litigation expenses in the amount of $1,297,301); In re Fleet/Norstar, 935 F. Supp. at 109; Conley, 222 B.R. at 187; In re Compact Disc, 216 F.R.D. at 216 n.45; Gaskill v. Gordon, 160 F.3d 361, 363-64 (7th Cir. 1998) (affirming award of 38% of class action settlement fund); In re Pacific Enters. Sec. Litig., 47 F.3d 373, 379 (9th Cir. 1995) (awarding 33% of $12 million common settlement fund); In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26538, at *11 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 2003) (awarding fees of 33⅓% of $220 million common fund to Direct Purchaser Plaintiff's Class Counsel); In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12344 (D.D.C. June 16, 2003) (awarding class counsel 30% of the common fund); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25067, at *57 (D.D.C. July 13, 2001) (determining that the one-third award was reasonable and granting class counsel fee petition in the amount of $123,188,032 plus interest, or approximately 34% of the total estimated settlement amount, in antitrust price fixing litigation); In re Activision Sec. Litig., 723 F. Supp 1373, 1375 (N.D. Cal. 1989) (awarding a 32.8% fee and adopting a "policy of awarding approximately 30% of the fund as attorneys' fees in the ordinary case," as "well-justified in light of the lengthy line of cases which find such an award appropriate and reasonable…").

In Vizcaino v. Microsoft Corp., 290 F.3d 1043, 1050 n.4 (9th Cir. 2002), the court included an exhaustive table of 34 cases generating revenues ranging from $54 million to $185 million, all of which generated fees of 30% or more, including the case at the high end of the scale (45%), the $185 million settlement in In re Merry-Go Round Enters., Inc., 244 B.R. 327 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000). See also Frederick C. Dunbar, Todd S. Foster, Vinita M. Juneja, Denise N. Martin, Recent Trends III: What Explains Settlements in Shareholder Class Actions? (NERA, June 1995) (finding that "[r]egardless of case size, fees average approximately 32 percent of the settlement"); see also MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION § 14.121 ("Attorney fees awarded under the percentage method are often between 25% and 30% of the fund.").

The Court approved a 33⅓ percent fee and cost award in association with the GSK Settlement as well as a fee and cost award that amounted to 30 percent of the fund with respect to the AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement, and 30 percent of the fund with respect to the AstraZeneca Class 2/3 Settlements. In hearings and in its orders related to these settlements, the Court has recognized that the risks incurred by Class Counsel and the results achieved for the Class have warranted the fee awards:

> Well, I do think one-third is appropriate. I might say that, for the record, I approved that in the other case [GSK]. I think this was an incredibly risky piece of litigation which was cutting-edge and no certainty of success. The pharmaceutical companies have done a > fabulous job defending it, and it was fought tooth and nail the entire way along with the best firms in the country.

May 1, 2008 Hearing Tr. at 24 (AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement Hearing).

The instant request falls within the foregoing ranges of reasonableness. The Settlement Amount is $125 million, and the combined $37,500,000 fee and expense request is 30% of that amount.

D. A Cross-Check With The Lodestar Confirms The Reasonableness Of The Requested Fee And Expense Award

1. If the Court grants Counsel's Track Two fee request, Plaintiff's counsel will receive a very modest multiplier on their total case "investment."

As noted, the First Circuit also provides the Court with the discretion to employ the lodestar approach (reasonable hours spent times reasonable hourly rated, subject to a multiplier or discount for special circumstances, plus reasonable disbursements) in combination with the POF approach. In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 307; In re Compact Disc, 216 F.R.D. at 215-16; see also MANUAL FOR COMPLEX LITIGATION § 14.122 ("the lodestar is … useful as a cross-check on the percentage method by estimating the number of hours spent on the litigation and the hourly rate, using affidavits and other information provided by the fee applicant. The total lodestar estimate is then divided into the proposed fee calculated under the percentage method. The resulting figure represents the lodestar multiplier to compare to multipliers in other cases.").

The total lodestar accumulated by Plaintiffs' counsel as of March 31, 2011, is $72,190,840. Edelson Decl., ¶ 5. Additionally, Class Counsel have expended $9,417,783 in litigation related expenses. Edelson Decl., ¶ 6. Both numbers represent all effort and expenses for all AWP class actions pending before this Court. The lodestar calculation is based on each law firm's historic rate (those in effect when the work was done, over the nearly ten years this case has been pending). Class Counsel are providing this historic rate calculation because it is more conservative, even though the First Circuit has noted the appropriateness of calculating the lodestar on current hourly rates (i.e., in this case, those in effect in 2011 at each firm) because of the delay in payment of the fees to the firms performing the work, as well as other factors. See Lipsett v. Blanco, 975 F.2d 934, 942-43 (1st Cir. 1992). Given this precedent, it would be appropriate to calculate the lodestar of all firms at current rates, which would yield a higher total lodestar.

To date, Class Counsel have been awarded compensation for three settlements in the ten years this action has been pending: $21,615,000 out of the proceeds of the GSK settlement, $8,580,000 in connection with the AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement and $30,900,000 in connection with the AstraZeneca Class 2/3 Settlement, for a total of $61,095,000. If the Court awards the $37,500,000 requested here, Plaintiffs' counsel will recover their investment in the AWP class actions with a very modest multiplier.

2. We cannot isolate time and expenses devoted specifically to the Track Two portion of the litigation or even to efforts limited to the claims of the Track Two Classes.

In previous hearings, the Court has asked Class Counsel how time can be divided to isolate efforts related to specific Defendants. This would be a daunting and monumental task. More than 250 attorneys have spent time working on this case for plaintiffs, a testament to the breathtaking scope and complexity of this litigation. Indeed, attorneys and paralegals had collectively billed 223,789 hours as of March 31, 2011. Edelson Decl., ¶ 5. The sheer number of work hours underpinning the lodestar highlights how time-consuming and burdensome a detailed lodestar inquiry would be and demonstrates why the POF approach works best for this litigation. See In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practices Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 331 (3d Cir. 1998); In re Fleet/Norstar Sec. Litig., 935 F. Supp. at 108. It is extremely difficult to apportion those hours by Defendant or to attribute a specific lodestar to Track Two Defendants given the breadth of common issues and the number of tasks completed over the last ten years. An attempt to do so would involve a very time-consuming and expensive audit and even then may not result in an accurate estimate.

In addressing multiple claims based on a core of common facts, the Supreme Court has recognized that the focus should be placed on the overall relief provided:

> In other cases the plaintiff's claims for relief will involve a "common core of facts" or will be based on related legal theories. Much of counsel's time will be devoted generally to the litigation as a whole, making it difficult to divide the hours expended on a claim-by-claim basis. Such a lawsuit cannot be viewed as a series of discrete claims. Instead the district court should focus on the significance of the overall relief obtained by the plaintiff in relation to the hours reasonably expended on the litigation.
>
> Where a plaintiff has obtained excellent results, his attorneys should recover a fully compensatory fee.

Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 434-35 (1983).

The same concept applies here to claims against multiple defendants where common issues are inextricably intertwined. An immense amount of work was done on common issues, work that cannot be segregated from other aspects of the prosecution. This work includes researching and drafting complaints; working on issues related to the initial MDL motions; a panoply of issues related to the use of AWP as a benchmark in the Medicare program and in the private insurance market; legal research and drafting of briefs on joint motions to dismiss and briefing associated with class certification; coordination with experts regarding class certification issues; motions and discovery related to many third parties, including governmental organizations, trade associations and the hundreds of insurers, pharmacies and other market participants subpoenaed by Defendants (including Track Two Defendants).

This Court has previously recognized the difficulty in apportioning lodestar to specific Defendants: "A percentage-of-fund approach makes more sense because this multi-district litigation has many moving parts with common issues and it would be too difficult to calculate a fair lodestar for this piece of the litigation." Memorandum and Order Re: Requested Final Approval of the AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement (Dkt. No. 5624) at 4.

Because of the challenges outlined above, and because the fee amount requested is undoubtedly reasonable under the POF method, no effort was made to determine the precise amount of fees that would be specifically attributable to prosecuting the case on behalf of the Track Two Classes, which Class Counsel believe cannot be done.[6] Given the "extremely broad" discretion that the Court has in evaluating an attorneys' fee and cost petition in class litigation, In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 309 (emphasis added), Class Counsel strongly believe that the foregoing lodestar and expense information suffices for purposes of a rough cross-check on the reasonableness of the POF fee and cost award.

E. The Fee Percentages Sought Ensure That Each Settlement Class Pays An Equitable Portion Of Attorneys' Fees And That A Reasonable Overall Multiplier Results For All Fees Awarded At the End Of The Case

As Class Counsel have previously explained, their goal is to request approximately one-third of the value of each settlement in order to ensure that (i) the aggregate attorneys' fee award is, at the end of all settlements, in the "ballpark" of the one-third benchmark, and (ii) each settlement Class pays an equitable share of attorneys' fees. We believe that this responds to the [6] As with attempting to calculate a lodestar specific to the Track Two cases, splitting expenses that way is also very difficult to do given the existence of so many common issues. Moreover, the very nature of the expenses themselves makes allocation by defendant extremely difficult. Counsel did not track expenses by Defendant and, with some limited exceptions, we are unable to go back and re-assign expenses by Defendant. These include expenses incurred for expert work, including the development of Dr. Rosenthal and Dr. Hartman's many reports; Court fees (including fees incurred for use of the Court's electronic filing system); subpoena costs; technology services, including maintaining and servicing computer stations for document review; mail and fax charges; computer research charges (e.g., Lexis/Nexis); photocopy expenses; and some travel expenses. All of the expenses incurred were reasonable and necessary for the prosecution of this litigation, even though they are not amenable to division by particular Defendant. It may be possible to construct an expense allocation model taking into consideration reasonable assumptions based on the number of defendants, but this would be very time consuming and not necessary where the lodestar and expense estimate is used as a cross-check to the POF approach.

Court's frequently expressed concern that attorneys' fee awards remain reasonable across all settlements.

Comparing the actual and projected fee and cost recovery in this case against Plaintiffs' Counsel's collective lodestar accentuates the reasonableness of the percentage approach recommended by Class Counsel. If the Court grants this Track Two fee requests, Plaintiffs' counsel will recover their collective lodestar plus a small multiplier. The table below sets forth each AWP class settlement (both actual and anticipated), the actual fees awarded to date in the AWP class actions, and projected fee awards if the Court grants the Track Two fee requests. As shown, estimated fees for all AWP class action settlements could total $104,295,000.

Settlement Award	Amount of Actual/Projected Fee and Cost Awards	Awards as a Percent of Settlement Value
GSK Global Settlement (approved)	$ 21,615,000	33⅓%
AstraZeneca Class 1 Settlement (approved)	8,580,000	30%
AstraZeneca Class 2/3 (approved)	30,900,000	30%
BMS Global Settlement (request pending)	5,700,000	30%
Track 2 Global Settlement (requested here)	37,500,000	30%
Total	$ 104,295,000

The impact of folding expenses into a percentage fee award is quite significant and should not be overlooked. Because the requested fee awards include expense reimbursements, the net fee percentage ultimately awarded by the Court for all AWP settlements will be approximately 11.5% lower given that expenses constitute roughly 11.5% of counsel's total $81,608,623 "investment" in the case. Thus, the "net" fee awards requested will amount to less than 19 percent once the effect of including expenses is considered.

If the foregoing settlements are all approved, there will be no further settlements in the AWP MDL class actions and, therefore, no further fee petitions. A total projected fee and cost award of $104,295,000 will modestly exceed Plaintiffs' counsels' collective lodestar of $72,190,840 as of March 31, 2011, resulting in a small and very reasonable multiplier of 1.45, even though the overall results achieved in the AWP litigation should warrant a larger multiplier. If Plaintiffs' counsels' collective expenses of $9,417,783 are included, total case "investment" rises to $81,608,623, and the multiplier drops to 1.28. Lead Class Counsel will continue to incur additional time and expenses if and until all settlements are finalized. Given the multipliers approved in many other cases, Class Counsel's request here is more than reasonable. See In re Copley Pharm., Inc., 1 F. Supp. 2d 1407, 1415 (D. Wyo. 1998) (finding a multiplier of two to be reasonable based on these factors); see also In re Rite Aid Corp. Secs. Litig., 146 F. Supp. 2d 706, 736 n.44 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (concluding that, under the cross-check approach, a lodestar multiple in the range of 4.5 to 8.5 is "unquestionably reasonable"); Third Circuit Task Force, 108 F.R.D. at 265 (suggesting that courts consider the "contingency factor" in all common fund cases). Indeed, if the Court chooses to award lower amounts, a de minimis multiplier will likely result, which would be inconsistent with counsel's monumental efforts here and the very high percentage recoveries afforded to the Classes as a result of the settlements.

An award of approximately 30 percent of the value of each settlement at each step along the way will lead to a reasonable, overall fee and cost award to Class Counsel. It will also further the First Circuit fee award guideposts of ease of administration, a reduction in the possibility of collateral disputes, enhanced efficiency throughout the litigation, and a better approximation of the workings of the marketplace. In re Thirteen Appeals, 56 F.3d at 307-08.

Moreover, the fees paid by each settlement class are proportional to the settlement amounts assignable to each settlement class, as the following table demonstrates:

Settlement	Settlement Amount	Percent of Total AWP Settlement Amounts	Actual/Projected Fee and Cost Awards	Percent of Total AWP Fees
GSK Global	$65,500,000	19.2	$21,615,000	20.7
Astra Class 1	$28,600,000	8.4	$8,580,000	8.2
BMS Class 1	$19,000,000	5.6	$5,700,000	5.5
Astra Class 2/3	$103,000,000	30.2	$30,900,000	29.6
Track 2 Global	$125,000,000	36.6	$37,500,000	36
Total	$ 341,100,000		$ 104,295,000

In other words, the Track Two fee award, if granted, will ultimately represent 36 percent of all fees awarded in the AWP litigation. This is roughly commensurate with the value of the Track Two settlement as a percentage of all AWP settlement values: 36.6%. This analysis demonstrates that no settlement class will shoulder a disproportionate share of attorneys' fees.

F. Various Other Factors Applied By This Circuit And Others Support Class Counsel's Request

The First Circuit has not required that lower courts use a particular set of factors to determine the reasonableness of the fee request. However, the Third Circuit Task Force Report approved certain factors to assist courts in this analysis. Among other things, these factors include: (i) the size of the fund created and the number of persons benefited; (ii) the skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (iii) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (iv) the risk of nonpayment; (v) the amount of time devoted to the case by plaintiffs' counsel; and (vi) the awards in similar cases. See Third Circuit Task Force, 108 F.R.D. at 245; see also Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 n.1 (3d Cir. 2000) (applying factors); In re GMC Pick-up Truck, 55 F.3d at 819-22 (same). The Second Circuit has adopted a similar list of factors: the time and labor expended by Class Counsel, the complexities of the litigation, the risks borne by Class Counsel in litigating this case on a contingency fee basis, the quality of the representation provided, the fee request in relation to the settlement, public policy considerations and the reaction of the Class to the settlement. See Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 50 (2d Cir. 2000).

Applying these factors, the award for both fees and litigation expenses in this case is fair and reasonable.

1. The size of the fund created and the number of people who benefit

The total fund eligible to be claimed is $125,000,000 and will benefit thousands of consumers and TPPs. Notice of the Settlement was mailed directly to over 2 million Track Two Class 1 consumers and there have been three separate national publication notice programs aimed at notifying Consumer Class members of the settlement. As of this date the Claims Administrator has received approximately 87,000 Class 1 consumer claims and 20,600 Class 3 consumer claims. Over 1,000 TPPs have also filed claims in the Settlement.

2. The time and labor expended by counsel

Class Counsel have been investigating and litigating this case intensely and thoroughly for nearly a decade. Class Counsel have devoted considerable time, energy, and resources from the beginning of this case through discovery and motion practice, and ultimately settlement. From the very beginning, "Defendants mounted an aggressive and vigorous defense throughout the course of this litigation." In re Aetna Inc. Sec. Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68, at *46 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 4, 2001). Indeed each Track Two Defendant still vigorously disputes that it engaged in any wrongful conduct or violation of law.

This litigation required an all-out effort by Class Counsel. First, the motion practice in this case has in and of itself required enormous work, as the case raised many complex and difficult legal and factual issues. This required Class Counsel to oppose more than one round of substantial motions to dismiss as well as class certification motions. Second, discovery was extensive. Class Counsel had to devote substantial energy and thousands of hours in obtaining, inventorying, and examining millions of documents and data produced by Track Two Defendants. Even more time and effort was necessary to cull those documents and create a useful database – an invaluable tool for identifying key issues and evidence for depositions and possible trial. Additionally, Class Counsel conducted over 75 depositions of Track Two Defendants current and former employees, including senior managers. Berman Decl., ¶ 19.

Class Counsel also spent considerable time consulting with economic experts concerning the economic impact of Defendants' scheme on the Class and the measure and amount of damages to the Class. Id. at ¶¶ 22. And Class Counsel spent many hours researching and briefing complex legal issues for more than one round of motions to dismiss and class certification motions. Id. at ¶¶ 10-13,21-23. These "efforts in posturing this case for trial … played a role in spurring the settlement [and] produced a substantial payout to the class." In re Newbridge Networks Sec. Litig., 1998 U.S. Dist LEXIS 23238, at *11 (D.D.C. Oct. 23, 1998).

Throughout this entire process, Class Counsel have litigated this case with extreme efficiency. The bulk of the work was handled by a small number of experienced attorneys. Assignments were allocated so that work was performed expeditiously, efficiently and in an organized manner. Review and repetition was avoided.

Moreover, the significant investment of time required by this action necessarily precluded Class Counsel from working on other matters. Class Counsel expended hours and incurred expenses in prosecuting this case, and were prepared to put at risk more time and money had the Track Two litigation not settled. Id. at ¶ 25.

Based on all of the above factors, the fee and expense award requested by Class Counsel is reasonable in light of the risk, quantity, and quality of work expended by Class Counsel over nearly ten years.

3. The complexity and duration of the litigation

The complexity of the issues and the duration of the litigation support the award requested. Class actions alleging violations of RICO and fraud, particularly in the pharmaceutical reimbursement context, are arguably the most complex class actions to prosecute because the legal and factual issues are inherently complicated and uncertain. In fact, in addition to the legal issues involved in overcoming the Defendants' motions to dismiss, this case involved some highly technical and complex issues with regard to pharmaceutical reimbursement systems, pharmacy benefit manager contracting, health insurance, federal regulation, and preemption. These legal issues required exhaustive research and briefing.

4. The risk of nonpayment

A determination of a fair fee must include consideration of the uncertain nature of the fee, the wholly contingent outlay of large out-of-pocket sums by Plaintiffs' counsel, and the fact that the risks of failure and nonpayment are extremely high. Many cases recognize that attorneys' risk is "perhaps the foremost factor" in determining an appropriate fee award. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54 (citation omitted). In Behrens v. Wometco Enters., Inc., 118 F.R.D. 534, 548 (S.D. Fla. 1988), aff'd, 899 F.2d 21 (11th Cir. 1990), the court noted that:

> Generally, the contingency arrangement must be promoted to assure representation when a person could not otherwise afford the services of a lawyer… A contingency fee arrangement often justifies an increase in the award of attorneys' fees. This rule helps assure that the contingency fee arrangement endures. If this 'bonus' methodology did not exist, very few lawyers could take on the representation of a class client given the investment of substantial time, effort, and money, especially in light of the risks of recovering nothing. [Id. (citations omitted).]

The history of complex litigation is replete with cases in which plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages or very small damages at trial or after appeal. See, e.g., United States Football League v. National Football League, 644 F. Supp. 1040, 1042

(S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("the jury chose to award plaintiffs only nominal damages, concluding that the USFL had suffered only $1.00 in damages"), aff'd, 842 F.2d 1335 (2d Cir. 1988); MCI Commc'ns Corp. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1166-67 (7th Cir. 1983) (remanding antitrust judgment for new trial and damages); Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 479 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1973) (following two trips to the Court of Appeals and one to the U.S. Supreme Court, plaintiffs, the putative class, and their counsel recovered nothing), vacated on other grounds, 417 U.S. 156 (1974).

Indeed, when Class Counsel undertook representation of the Class, there were no assurances that any fees would ever be received. Class Counsel were aware that they would likely have to overcome the daunting difficulties, and would have to expend thousands of hours and millions of dollars to prosecute this case over an extended period of time before having even a possibility of recovering fees and expenses. Class Counsel alone bore the risk of the case being dismissed at the pretrial stage, of not prevailing at trial, or even losing on appeal. Berman Decl., ¶¶ 29-31.

Because of the risk undertaken by Class Counsel, the requested fee award is reasonable.

5. The skill and efficiency of the attorneys involved

The experience, reputation, and ability of plaintiff's counsel has often been noted as a key factor in a court's consideration of counsel's fee request. See, e.g., In re Warner Commc'ns Sec. Litig., 618 F. Supp. 735, 748 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), aff'd, 798 F.2d 35 (2d Cir. 1986); Rosenbaum v. MacAllister, 64 F.3d 1439, 1445 n.3 (10th Cir. 1995). The Settlement here was not easily achieved. Negotiations were hard-fought and protracted. Each Track Two Defendant is represented by experienced and highly-regarded counsel, and they contested this litigation at every stage. Therefore, settlement negotiations required persistence, negotiating skill, and a willingness to take this case to trial. Class Counsel employed all of these, and obtained a settlement agreement.

IV. CLASS COUNSEL'S EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND SHOULD BE FACTORED IN THE COURT'S CONSIDERATION OF THE AWARD

In addition to being entitled to reasonable attorneys' fees, it is well-settled that "lawyers whose efforts succeed in creating a common fund for the benefit of a class are entitled not only to reasonable fees, but also to recover from the fund, as a general matter, expenses, reasonable in amount, that were necessary to bring the action to a climax." In re Fidelity/Micron Secs. Litig., 167 F.3d at 737; In re Nineteen Appeals Arising out of San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire Litig., 982 F.2d 603, 606 (1st Cir. 1992); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25067, at *67 (holding that "an attorney who has created a common fund for the benefit of the class is entitled to reimbursement of … reasonable litigation expenses from that fund") (citations omitted). "[B]ecause each common fund case presents its own unique set of circumstances, trial courts must assess each request for fees and expenses on its own terms." In re Fidelity/Micron Secs. Litig., 167 F.3d at 737.

The expenses incurred in this litigation in the amount of $9,417,783 are described in the accompanying Edelson Declaration. They are the type of expenses typically billed by attorneys to paying clients in the marketplace and include such costs as fees paid to experts, computerized research and other services, deposition and transcript expenses, and travel expenses in connection with this litigation through March 31, 2011. These expenses were reasonable and necessary for the prosecution of this litigation. Class Counsel do not request a separate award for expenses and will subsume the expenses within the requested 30% award. It bears repeating that folding expenses into a percentage fee award substantially decreases the net fee portion of the award given that expenses represent roughly 11.5% of counsel's total $81,608,623

"investment" in the case. We project that the "net" fee awards requested for all AWP settlements will amount to less than 19 percent once the effect of including expenses is considered.

V. THE COURT SHOULD APPROVE COMPENSATION TO THE NAMED CLASS REPRESENTATIVES

Class Counsel request that the Court approve compensation to the named class representatives. As with the approval of compensation to named representatives in the GSK, AstraZeneca Class 1 and the AstraZeneca Class 2/Class 3 settlements, and consistent with the Court's previous instructions, the amount of compensation sought on behalf of named representatives is based upon the hours expended in furtherance of the litigation. Like the combined attorneys' fees and expense award, these amounts would be paid from the common fund.

In July 2007, in connection with the GSK Settlement, the named class representatives in the GSK Settlement each submitted affidavits attesting to the time expended in furtherance of the litigation. See Co-Lead Counsel's Motion for Order Authorizing Compensation to Consumers and Third-Party Payor Class Representatives (Dkt. No. 4509). Each class representative in that settlement included a tally of the time spent responding to document requests, conferring with Class Counsel and preparing for depositions related to class certification and/or the merits of Plaintiffs' claims, among other tasks necessary to fulfill their obligations as class representatives. Rather than request that the full amount of time be compensated at the Court-suggested rate of $100 per hour out of the GSK Settlement, for the TPP representatives, the Court made an award of only 20% of the overall time expended on behalf of the litigation. This was meant to allow for the possibility that the remaining compensation would come from future settlement and/or verdicts against the remaining Defendants. Similar requests for compensation to class representatives related to a portion of their work in the case were made in connection with the BMS Settlement and the AstraZeneca Settlements.

Class Counsel now seek a payment to class representative that will compensate them for the remainder of time incurred in furtherance of this litigation not covered in other settlements, as set forth in the table below. (Class representatives that did not have time since the submission of a GSK Declaration have incorporated their Declarations submitted with that settlement by reference. In addition, some class representatives have incorporated by reference the Declarations recently submitted in connection with the AstraZeneca Class 2/Class 3 Massachusetts and non-Massachusetts settlements and the BMS settlements.)

The one exception to the methodology for compensation to named representatives as outlined above is with respect to the recently added class representative for Class 1, Ms. Tonacchio. In July 2008, Class Plaintiffs sought and were granted permission to add Ms. Tonacchio as a Class 1 representative for purposes of the Track Two Settlement. Due to her late addition as a class representative, Ms. Tonacchio has spent less time than other class representatives in furtherance of the litigation. She has, however, spent time procuring relevant medical records and providing information about drug payments to Class Counsel. In recognition of these efforts, Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court award Ms. Tonacchio a one-time payment of $500 from the common fund.[7]

[7] Class Counsel may also seek to add additional consumer class representatives prior to final approval. If the Court grants the request to add additional consumer class representatives, Class Counsel will supplement this request for compensation with respect to new class representatives.

Compensation to named plaintiffs is "not uncommon in class action litigation … particularly where a common fund has been created for the benefit of the entire class.… [C]ourts routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation." In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 205 F.R.D. 369, 400 (D.D.C. 2002); see also In re Southern Ohio Correctional Facility, 175 F.R.D. 270, 272-73 (S.D. Ohio 1997) (collecting cases in which awards to named representatives approved). A district court in the First Circuit has stated that "[b]ecause a named plaintiff is an essential ingredient of any class action, an incentive award can be appropriate to encourage or induce an individual to participate in the suit." In re Compact Disc Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 292 F. Supp. 2d 184, 189 (D. Me. 2003). Further, in determining whether such compensation is warranted, courts consider not only the efforts of the plaintiffs in pursuing the claims, but also the important public policy of fostering enforcement of laws and rewarding representative plaintiffs for being instrumental in obtaining recoveries for persons other than themselves. Bussie v. Allmerica Fin. Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7793, at *11-12 (D. Mass. May 19, 1999).

The class representatives here actively and effectively fulfilled their obligations as representatives for the Class. The Plaintiffs went above and beyond the call of duty in complying with demands placed upon them during this litigation. Of crucial importance is the willingness of the Plaintiffs to bring this action in the first place. Each of the named Plaintiffs also monitored the case and discussed its progress with counsel and consulted with counsel concerning the Settlement.

The requested compensation is more than justified, because of the named plaintiffs' active and prominent role in this litigation. In such situations, courts have awarded compensation of the requested amount and larger. See, e.g., In re Revco Litig., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7852, at *22 (N.D. Ohio May 5, 1992) (awarding $200,000 to a named plaintiff); Roberts v. Texaco, Inc., 979 F. Supp. 185, at 203-04 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (awarding $85,000 to a named plaintiff); In re Dun & Bradstreet Credit Servs. Customer Litig., 130 F.R.D. 366, 374 (S.D. Ohio 1990) (awarding $55,000 each to two named plaintiffs); Brotherton v. Cleveland, 141 F. Supp. 2d 907, 914 (S.D. Ohio 2001) (awarding $50,000 to the class representative).

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, Class Counsel respectfully request that the Court approve the fee and expense petition and enter an order awarding Class Counsel the attorneys' fees and expenses requested and the compensation for the Class Representatives.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

LEWIS A. KAPLAN, District Judge.

This is an antitrust class action that has been litigated for nearly seven years. On November 1, 2022, the Court approved eight proposed class action settlements, creating a common fund of $185,875,000. Lead counsel Lovell Stewart Halebian Jacobson LLP ("Lovell Stewart") and Lowey Dannenberg, P.C. ("Lowey Dannenberg," and together with Lovell Stewart, "Class Counsel") now seek attorneys' fees of $47,218,750, or 25.4 percent of the settlement common fund, and litigation expenses of $845,471.57, to be split among themselves and another law firm, Berman Tabacco ("Berman"), with which Class Counsel has a fee sharing agreement.[1] Familiarity with all prior proceedings is assumed.

I. Attorneys' Fees

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(h) allows the Court to "award reasonable attorney's fees and nontaxable costs" in a certified class action. What is "reasonable" is left to the discretion of the Court, which is "intimately familiar with the nuances of the case."[2] In exercising that discretion, the Court acts as a fiduciary for the class, which it must protect from excessive awards.[3] Counsel bear the burden of establishing the reasonableness of their requested fee award.[4]

The Court may evaluate the reasonableness of a fee request using either the percentage of the fund obtained for the class or the lodestar method.[5] The latter, which the Court employs here, requires the Court to compute a reasonable lodestar amount. To do this, the Court first ascertains "the number of hours reasonably billed to the class," and then multiplies that figure by "an appropriate hourly rate."[6] That figure then may be increased by applying an appropriate multiplier. The Court's analysis is guided by the six factors that the Second Circuit described in Goldberger v. Integrated Resources: (1) counsel's time and labor, (2) the litigation's magnitude and complexity, (3) the risk of the litigation, (4) the quality of representation, (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement, and (6) public policy considerations.[7]

Counsel submit a proposed lodestar of $29,908,595.15 based on 53,814.49 hours of fee compensable work by many individuals, including lawyers, paralegals, and analysts.[8] Counsel based their calculation on the timekeepers' historic hourly rates and capped the hourly rates for paralegals at $200 per hour and for first-level document review at $350 per hour.[9] Counsel provided the Court with information including (1) each timekeeper's hours, tasks, and historic hourly rates, (2) the categories of work for which compensation is sought, (3) biographical information for the individuals for whom compensation is sought, and (4) additional facts supporting the reasonableness of the hourly rates, including market rates for similar professionals.[10] This information revealed that counsel seek compensation for time billed by 79 attorneys,[11] ten paralegals, and four "analysts."[12]

A. The Hourly Rates

As an initial matter, the Court finds that counsel have not shown that it was appropriate to include the hourly rates of the four "analysts" in the calculation of the lodestar. Collectively, these analysts – comprising a "financial analyst," "investigator researcher," "derivatives expert," and "analyst" – billed approximately 3,027.5 hours at historic hourly rates ranging from $165 to $545 per hour, which, at the higher end, is more than many of the firms' associates were billed out at. Counsel have included a total of $1,054,236.75 in their fee compensable lodestar for hours billed by the four "analysts," the vast majority of which were billed by counsel's "derivatives expert."

Hourly rates of non-lawyers may be included in the lodestar "if . . . consistent with market rates and practices."[13] Counsel have not provided data on the hourly rates charged by other firms for such personnel, assuming that other firms charge for them on an hourly basis. Nor have they furnished any information regarding the practices of the Bar concerning "analysts," "investigator researchers," or "derivatives experts." Indeed, the work of these types of professionals, "like that of others 'whose labor contributes to the work product,' is likely 'included in calculation of the lawyers' hourly rates,' as ordinarily is true of other overhead costs like rent, firm administrative staff, and the like."[14] Accordingly, the Court will not include the hours billed by the four analysts in the lodestar calculation.

The Court finds that the hourly rates for the remaining timekeepers – the attorneys, staff attorneys, project attorney, and paralegals – were appropriate.

B. Hours Billed

The Court now addresses whether the number of hours for which counsel request compensation is reasonable. Removing the hours billed by the four analysts, counsel seek compensation for approximately 50,787 hours of work.

The Court notes that counsel appropriately expended significant time and labor litigating this class action. Over the course of approximately six years, they have, among other things, amended the complaint twice, opposed five motions to dismiss and one motion for reconsideration, conducted at least 70 meet and confers with defendants' counsel regarding discovery, received and reviewed more than 2.4 million documents produced by defendants, obtained certification of the class, and negotiated eight separate settlements involving twelve different banks.[15]

Nevertheless, the sheer amount of hours billed, particularly with respect to document review and other discovery, indicates a certain amount of duplication and inefficiencies in the timekeeping. Even after removing the hours billed by counsel's four analysts, counsel assert that they spent approximately 16,937.1 hours on document review, 3,614.8 hours on discovery motion practice, and 5,818.4 hours on "other discovery," accounting for the majority of the 50,787 hours billed.[16] Though discovery in this case was substantial, the Court finds these numbers to be excessive and redundant.

The Court finds that the simplest way to account for the inefficiencies and redundancy of the timekeeping in these three categories is to employ a 15 percent across the board reduction of counsel's lodestar, which the Court will employ after the reductions described above regarding hourly rates are rendered.[17] Applying all of these reductions, counsel's revised aggregate

C. Multiplier

The Court finds that a multiplier of 1.5 is reasonable here, which is well within the range of multipliers typically approved in this Circuit.[18] Such a multiplier amply accounts for the time value of money and the nearly seven-year delay in counsel's payment. Additionally, a multiplier of 1.5 adequately accounts for the risk of this litigation, the complexity of the issues, the contingent nature of the engagement, the skill of the attorneys on both sides, as well as the efforts of the many support staff who contributed to counsel's success. After approximately six years of hard-fought litigation, counsel obtained eight class action settlements with twelve settling defendants, creating a common fund of $185,875,000.[19] This was a good result for the class and counsel deserve to be compensated adequately.[20] award is $36,789,306.96. Counsel request that the fee award be allocated as follows: 41.82% to Lovell Stewart, 41.82% to Lowey Dannenberg, and 16.36% to Berman.[21] In view of counsel's supplemental briefing on this issue and the opinion of counsel's expert, the Court finds that this constitutes an appropriate percentage allocation of the total attorneys' fees.[22] Accordingly, the Court allocates the total fee award of $36,789,306.96 as follows: $15,385,288.17 to Lovell Stewart, $15,385,288.17 to Lowey Dannenberg, and $6,018,730.62 to Berman.

II. Litigation Expenses

Counsel seek also reimbursement for $845,471.57 in litigation expenses.[23] The majority of the expenses are attributable to counsel's retained experts and consultants and to document discovery and computer research costs. The Court finds nothing objectionable and grants this request.[24]

Conclusion

Lead counsel's application for attorneys' fees is granted in accordance with the following: lead counsel are awarded $36,789,306.96 in attorneys' fees, to be allocated as set forth above, and $845,471.57 in expenses. The Clerk shall terminate Dkt 554.

Theodore Eisenberg et al., Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009-2013,
92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937 (2017) 8, 9

Pursuant to this Court's Conditional Certification Orders (ECF Nos. 517-522, 542-544) and Fed. R. Civ. P 23(h) and 23(b)(3), Court-appointed Class Counsel respectfully move for an award of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of litigation expenses from the $185,875,000 common fund created by Plaintiffs' eight proposed class action Settlements with twelve Settling Defendants.[1]

The Substantial Recovery After Six Years of Litigation. Counsel's work in this complex, high-risk case for the last six years has produced a substantial recovery of $185,875,000 for the benefit of the Class.

A. The High Risks of Successful Prosecution of These Claims. The claims here involved numerous intrinsic existential risks. Such risks began with the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 stage. These risks included failure to state a claim, failure to show personal jurisdiction, failure to allege standing, collateral estoppel and prior release of the BBSW foreign exchange ("FX") derivatives based upon an earlier class action settlement, and various other attacks by Settling Defendants' counsel, who included the cream of the defense bar.

Second, to any extent that Plaintiffs survived the foregoing risks, Plaintiffs faced the risks of class certification. Here, Plaintiffs contended that the BBSW rate was manipulated upward on some days, and downward on other days. In these circumstances, various courts have not so far been receptive to certification of litigated classes.[2]

[1] Class Counsel refers to Lowey Dannenberg, P.C. and Lovell Stewart Halebian Jacobson LLP. Plaintiffs refers to Orange County Employees Retirement System ("OCERS") and Richard Dennis. Counsel refers to Class Counsel and Berman Tabacco. Settlements refers to Plaintiffs' proposed settlements with the Settling Defendants. Settling Defendants refers to JPMorgan Chase & Co. and JPMorgan Chase Bank (together, "JPMorgan"), Westpac Banking Corporation ("Westpac"), Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Limited ("ANZ"), Commonwealth Bank of Australia ("CBA"), National Australia Bank Limited ("NAB"), Morgan Stanley and Morgan Stanley Australia Limited (together, "Morgan Stanley"), Credit Suisse AG and Credit Suisse Group AG ("Credit Suisse"), BNP Paribas, S.A. ("BNPP"), Deutsche Bank AG ("Deutsche Bank"), Royal Bank of Canada ("RBC"), The Royal Bank of Scotland Plc (n/k/a NatWest Markets plc) ("RBS"), and UBS AG ("UBS").

Third, Plaintiffs faced the existential risks involved in prevailing at the merits stage of the case. These risks included a mismatch between the antitrust conspiracy gravamen of Plaintiffs' claims here, and the treatment by the Australian Securities and Investment Commission ("ASIC") of each Defendant's conduct as a mere individual breach of a duty to customers. See "F" below (discussing the limited ASIC allegations).

1. Consistent With These High Risks, No Other Cases or Class Actions Were Filed. Likely because of the foregoing high risks, no other law firms filed a complaint or otherwise attempted to represent or seek relief for the Class. This is the polar opposite of the norm in class actions that have a significant prospect of recovery.[3]

2. Pleading Risks: Class Counsel Overcame the High Risks Involved in Seven Separate Rule 12 Motions. Counsel had to win, and (ultimately) did win, every significant litigation battle involved in seven different rounds of Rule 12 motions submitted by the Settling Defendants' excellent counsel:

- Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 343 F. Supp. 3d 122, 167, 171 (S.D.N.Y. 2018), adhered to on denial of reconsideration, No. 16-CV-6496 (LAK), 2018 WL 6985207 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2018) (holding Plaintiffs plausibly alleged Defendants conspired to fix the BBSW rate; that Plaintiffs plausibly alleged these rate manipulations adversely affected BBSW-Based Derivatives; but acknowledging "the damages calculations in this case may indeed be complex");

[2] E.g., In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., 299 F. Supp. 3d 430 (S.D.N.Y. 2018); In re Foreign Exch. Benchmark Rates Antitrust Litig., 407 F. Supp. 3d 422 (S.D.N.Y. 2019); Nypl v. JP Morgan Chase & Co., No. 15 CIV. 9300 (LGS), 2022 WL 819771, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 18, 2022).

[3] E.g., In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Rsch. Reps. Sec. Litig., No. 02 MDL 1484, 2007 WL 4526593, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2007) (the filing of "some 140 class-action complaints" following a highly-publicized investigation showed "the prospect of recovery was promising from the outset").

- Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., No. 16-CV-6496 (LAK), 2018 WL 6985207 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2018) (denying motion to reconsider the denial of motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims by alleged conspirator Defendants who were not on the Panel which made the submissions used to calculate the BBSW rate);

- Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 439 F. Supp. 3d 256 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (denying in significant part the motion to dismiss claims directed at OCERS);

- Order dated August 4, 2020 (ECF No. 394) (denying motion by ANZ and CBA for reconsideration of the Court's Order denying motions to dismiss OCERS's claims on statute of limitations and other grounds);

- Order dated March 30, 2021 (ECF No. 458) (denying the Rule 12(c) motion by ANZ to dismiss on statute of limitations and other grounds);

- Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., No. 16-CV-6496 (LAK), 2021 WL 1893988, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. May 11, 2021) (denying Rule 12(c) motion by five Defendants to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims relating to the BBSW-Based Derivatives consisting of FX forwards on the basis that the claims had been released by earlier class action settlement).

3. However, Ten Settling Defendants Prevailed on Their Motion To Dismiss For Lack Of Personal Jurisdiction. But one of the many existential Rule 12 risks was realized when this Court largely granted the Settling Defendants' personal jurisdiction dismissal motions. Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 343 F. Supp. 3d 122, 171 (S.D.N.Y. 2018).

4. Class Counsel Then Resourcefully Solved the Personal Jurisdiction Problem. After the personal jurisdiction risk had fully materialized, Counsel then accomplished a 180-degree turnaround in this litigation battle on which the Settling Defendants had largely prevailed.

Specifically, after dismissal, this Court granted Plaintiffs leave to amend the Complaint. ECF No. 276. Making the most of the opportunity afforded by the Court, Class Counsel then added as a party plaintiff Orange County Employees Retirement System ("OCERS"). Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 439 F. Supp. 3d at 269.

Defendants' excellent counsel then renewed their personal jurisdiction arguments and also made numerous other arguments to dismiss OCERS' claims. ECF Nos. 298, 303, 306. But this Court ruled that the agreements which OCERS entered into with numerous Settling Defendants included an enforceable consent jurisdiction agreement. Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 439 F. Supp. 3d at 261-266. This Court further consistently ruled that such consent clauses were sufficient to confer personal jurisdiction over those Defendants who were parties thereto. Id. at 261; see also Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 343 F. Supp. 3d at 209 and Dennis v. JPMorgan Chase & Co., 439 F. Supp. 3d at 266.

5. Class Counsel's Need to Obtain Substantial Discovery from Defendants While This Court Was Still Burdened by Repeated Rounds of Rule 12 Motions. Before Defendants' repeated Rule 12 motions ended, Counsel began the discovery phase of the case and performed substantial discovery work for more than 14 months before the later rounds of Rule 12 motions had been decided. In addition to the continuing risks from the Rule 12 motions, Class Counsel's judgment was that they needed to obtain substantial discovery documents going far beyond those reflected in the ASIC proceedings[4] in order to be able to prove by a preponderance of the evidence the antitrust conspiracy gravamen of Plaintiffs' claims.

Thus, the critical focus of Plaintiffs' discovery work was to obtain as many types of relevant documents as they successfully could. Thereby, Class Counsel would give Plaintiffs the chance to establish that the alleged manipulations of BBSW, which were in different directions and at different times over the course of many years, were undertaken pursuant to an unlawful agreement among Defendants to fix and manipulate prices.

[4] First, ASIC made limited settlements with limited or no findings involving three defendants' individual wrongdoings. ECF No. 136, Exs. 22-24 (BNPP, RBS and UBS enforceable undertakings). Second, ASIC made a significant record of conversations consistent with sporadic manipulations through market moving conduct during the five-minute BBSW fixing window. Order, ASIC v ANZ, VID 197 of 2016, (Fed. Ct. of Australia, Nov. 10, 2017); Order, ASIC v NAB, VID 604 of 2016, (Fed. Ct. Australia, Nov. 10, 2017); Order, ASIC v CBA, VID65 of 2018, (Fed. Ct. Australia June 21, 2018); Order, ASIC v. Westpac, VID 282 of 2016, (Fed. Ct. Australia Nov. 9, 2018).

Accordingly, Plaintiffs began aggressively pursuing discovery as soon as it opened in late March 2020. Defendants took what Class Counsel believed was an extremely narrow view of discovery. Ultimately, Class Counsel obtained approximately 2.4 million documents from Defendants.

As Class Counsel aggressively pursued discovery, they conducted more than seventy (70) discovery meet and confers with Defendants during the prosecution of these claims. Joint Declaration of Vincent Briganti and Christopher Lovell ("Joint Declaration") ¶37. These meet and confers were designed to justify why, based on the facts of this case, Defendants should produce various categories of documents. Frequently, senior partners participated in these meet and confers in order to maximize Plaintiffs' chances to obtain documents consensually, without burdening the Court.

Counsel and their experts analyzed the substantial amount of dense information produced by Defendants in discovery. These documents included industry-specific jargon, numerous types of financial instruments, different categories of records at each bank, audio recordings, and many other types of records.

However, unlike other cases involving manipulation of a daily fixed rate, this case did not involve chat rooms in which the banks worked out before each day's fixing period how they were going to conduct that day's manipulation. Compare In re Foreign Exch.Benchmark Rates Antitrust Litig., 74 F. Supp. 3d 581, 587-88 (S.D.N.Y. 2015). On the contrary, Defendants forcefully argued that, to paraphrase the words of one market participant to the Reserve Bank of Australian, "some days I get tackled, and other days I tackle."

Based upon their review and analysis of the records, Class Counsel skillfully used these different documents (a) to begin to piece together the types of evidence that, in their judgment, could improve Plaintiffs' chance to prove a conspiracy, and (b) to make settlement presentations to various Defendants and seek to settle before the substantial risk of class certification or decisions on the merits materialized. As a result of Class Counsel's skillful prosecution of discovery and repeatedly prevailing against the Rule 12 attacks, by June 2021 Plaintiffs had agreed in principle to settle with six more Defendants.[5] But in order to be able to prove the alleged conspiracy, Plaintiffs continued to seek more cooperation documents from these six Defendants, while also prosecuting the Class's claims against the six remaining Defendants.

Class Counsel had unavoidably been forced to make two motions to compel discovery. ECF Nos. 427 and 428. But after this Court ruled that the release in the prior FX class action did not bar the Plaintiffs' claims here, the parties suggested to the Court in July 2021 that they could resolve portions of the motion to compel consensually. ECF No. 471. The Court directed the parties to resolve all portions of the motion to compel. Id.

Thereafter, relying on senior partner involvement in most of the meet and confers in order to execute the Court's direction, Class Counsel diligently negotiated with the remaining Defendants to resolve the issues in the motions to compel, obtain discovery, and do so prior to the discovery cut off. Shortly before the initial cut-off of discovery, Class Counsel reached an agreement with these six Defendants to resolve in substantial part the motions to compel. ECF No. 484, pp. 1-2.

Granting the requested extension of discovery, this Court noted that such extension was likely to be the last. ECF No. 532. Class Counsel thereafter continued zealously to pursue discovery from the remaining Defendants, worked internally and with experts to prepare a class certification impact model, and analyzed with experts the meaning of the non-Settling Defendants' communications, and conducted settlement negotiations with the remaining Defendants. As a result of Class Counsel's extensive prior learning and persistent efforts, Plaintiffs reached an agreement for settlements with all of the remaining Defendants by late April 2022.

Through their foregoing skillful work, Class Counsel overcame all of the extensive Rule 12 risks in this case. Class Counsel then aggressively pursued discovery and skillfully used the discovery record in settlement negotiations. As a result of their foregoing and other zealous efforts, Class Counsel succeeding in producing a substantial recovery for the benefit of the Class notwithstanding the complexity and high risks of the claims.

B. Fee Request. Class Counsel respectfully request an award of attorneys' fees in the amount of $47,218,750. The requested fee represents approximately 25.4% of the $185,875,000 common fund and a 1.58 lodestar multiplier. The requested fee is fair and reasonable under the multiple metrics recognized by this Court for awarding fees in common fund cases. City of Westland Police & Fire Ret. Sys. v. MetLife, Inc., No. 12-CV-0256 (LAK), 2021 WL 2453972, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 15, 2021) (Kaplan, J.) ("The Court may evaluate the reasonableness of a fee request using either the percentage of the fund obtained for the class or the lodestar method.").

C. Lodestar Method. The requested fee is fair and reasonable under the lodestar method because the lodestar is comprised of a reasonable number of hours of work performed at a reasonable rate. See "I.A" below (detailing Counsel's hours and rates). The lodestar multiplier of 1.58 is well within the range of multipliers previously awarded in this Circuit in similar complex class actions. City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972, at *5 (2.5 multiplier found to be reasonable and "well within the range of multipliers that typically are approved in this Circuit" in much less complex securities class action); see I.A below (collecting cases awarding similar or greater multipliers in connection with similar sized class action settlements); see also Theodore Eisenberg et. al., Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009-2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 937, 951 (2017) (the average lodestar multiplier was 1.61 in fifteen different antitrust class actions studied during 2009-2013).

Counsel's fee compensable lodestar here is $29,908,595.15. See "I.A" below and accompanying attorney declarations submitted by Counsel.[6] The lodestar represents 53,814.49 hours of fee compensable work since the case began in 2016. Id. In accordance with this Court's recent ruling in City of Westland, Counsel has stated its lodestar based on historic hourly rates, not current hourly rates, and has capped the hourly rates for paralegals at $200 per hour. See "I.A" below; City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972, at *3. Counsel has also provided the Court with: (1) each timekeeper's hours, tasks, and current and blended hourly rates, (2) the categories of work for which compensation is sought and (3) biographical information for the individuals for whom compensation is sought. See "I.A" below; City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972, at *2. Counsel's current and historical hourly rates are reasonable and consistent with rates recently approved by this Court in City of Westland. Id.

D. Percentage of the Fund Method. The requested 25.4% fee is also fair and reasonable under the percentage of the fund method. See "I.B" below. It is well within the range of fees previously awarded in this Circuit in connection with similar sized class action settlements in complex cases. Id. (collecting decisions awarding fees of 25% or greater in cases with similar sized settlements and that represented lodestar multipliers greater than that requested here); see also Center for Litigation and Courts and The Huntington National Bank, 2021 Antitrust Annual Report: Class Actions in Federal Court (April 2022) at 27-28 (median fee awards of 30% in antitrust settlements ranging from $100 million to $249 million between 2009 and 2021)[7]; Theodore Eisenberg et. al., Attorneys' Fees in Class Actions: 2009-2013, 92 N.Y.U. L. Rev. at 951 (the average fee award in nineteen different antitrust class actions studied during 2009-2013 was 27%).

E. Fee Awards Reflecting Market Rates. The 25.4% fee is also strongly supported because it follows the declining fee scale negotiated at arm's length by Counsel and Plaintiff OCERS before OCERS joined the case. Declaration of Gina M. Ratto ("Ratto Decl.", ¶¶5-8. The agreed upon fee structure employs a graduated fee scale that provides for a 28% fee on the first $25 million recovered, 25% on the next $175 million recovered, and lower percentages for any additional sums recovered. Id. OCERS has more than $22.4 billion in assets under management, is one of the nation's largest public pension funds, acts as a fiduciary on behalf of its more than 49,000 members and has a large stake in this litigation. Id., ¶¶1-4. The declining percentage fee structure negotiated by a highly sophisticated client like OCERS is the "best indication of a market rate," which is "an ideal proxy for [Class Counsel's] compensation." Goldberger v. Integrated Res., Inc., 209 F.3d 43, 52 (2d Cir. 2000) (market rates "are the ideal proxy" for "lawyers who successfully prosecute" class actions); In re Nortel Networks Corp. Sec. Litig., 539 F.3d 129, 133 (2d Cir. 2008) ("In many cases, the agreed-upon fee will offer the best indication of a market rate.").

F. High Risks and Other Goldberger Factors. Class Counsel undertook to prosecute this case on a fully contingent basis despite the high risks involved. The risks of this case fully justify the requested fee, which represents a 1.58 lodestar multiplier. Compare In re Bristol–Myers Squibb Sec. Litig., 361 F.Supp.2d 229, 233 (S.D.N.Y.2005) (the risk of the litigation is the "first, and most important, Goldberger factor") with In re Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Rsch. Reps. Sec. Litig., No. 02 MDL 1484 (JFK), 2007 WL 4526593, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2007) (the filing of "some 140 class-action complaints" following a highly-publicized investigation showed that "the prospect of recovery was promising from the outset").

Class Counsel built the plausible allegations of a conspiracy among some of the largest banks in the world from the ground up and based on their prior expertise litigating benchmark rate manipulation cases. At the time Class Counsel filed the initial complaint herein (August 2016), ASIC had brought actions against certain Defendants herein. ECF No. 1, ¶¶3-4. Importantly, however, ASIC had not alleged any collusion or coordination. Instead, ASIC focused on various types of individual misconduct by certain Defendants, including BBSW submission influence and manipulative trading in prime bank bills during the BBSW rate set window. Class Counsel conducted their investigation, worked with experts and harvested materials from the public record and without the benefit of discovery in order to go far beyond the individual violations pursued by ASIC and construct plausible allegations of a conspiracy to manipulate and fix BBSW. Complaint, passim. Thus, Class Counsel, not ASIC, filed the first (and only) collusion claims concerning BBSW. ASIC recovered 83.6 million AUD (approximately $58 million) in connection with settlements from five Defendants, and an additional 3.3 million AUD (approximately $2.3 million) from one Defendant that did not settle with ASIC.[8] Thus, Class Counsel ultimately recovered more than three times as much money as ASIC.

G. Litigation Expenses. Class Counsel also respectfully seek reimbursement of $845,471.57 in out-of-pocket expenses incidental and necessary to the representation of the Class since the inception of the case in 2016. See II below. The requested expenses are detailed and categorized in the accompanying attorney declarations submitted by Counsel. Id. More than 95% of the expenses incurred consisted of expert and consultant expenses, document discovery expenses and computer research. Id.

ARGUMENT

I. CLASS COUNSEL'S FEE REQUEST IS FAIR AND REASONABLE UNDER MULTIPLE DIFFERENT METRICS

"[A] litigant or a lawyer who recovers a common fund for the benefit of persons other than himself or his client is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee from the fund as a whole." Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980); see also Victor v. Argent Classic Convertible Arbitrage Fund L.P., 623 F.3d 82, 86 (2d Cir. 2010). Courts "may award attorneys' fees in common fund cases under either the 'lodestar' method or the 'percentage of the fund' method" although "the trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method." McDaniel v. County of Schenectady, 595 F.3d 411, 417 (2d Cir. 2010) (citing Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 121 (2d Cir. 2005)). Class Counsel's fee request is reasonable under both approaches, is further reasonable because it follows the fee agreement Counsel negotiated with Plaintiff OCERS, and is further supported by each of the Goldberger factors, including the high risks of litigating this case on a contingent basis.

[8] Also, four Defendants were ordered to pay litigation costs and other reimbursements totaling 59 million AUD (approximately $41 million).

A. The Requested Fee Is Reasonable Under the Lodestar Method, Including Because The Lodestar Multiplier Is Well Within The Range of Multipliers Approved In This Circuit

Under the lodestar method, the Court first ascertains the number of hours reasonably billed to the Class and then multiplies that figure by an appropriate hourly rate. City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972, at *1. Courts compare the requested award to the reasonable time and labor expended to confirm that the fee award is reasonable and avoid windfalls. Grice v. Pepsi Bev. Co., 363 F. Supp. 3d 401, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 2019); In re "Agent Orange" Prod. Liab. Litig., 818 F.2d 226, 232 (2d Cir. 1987) (adoption of the lodestar method intended to "provide counsel with [fair and just] compensation and, at the same time, temper these awards to prevent windfalls). Courts in the Second Circuit routinely approve fee awards that result in multipliers between 2 and 6. See, e.g., Wal-Mart, 396 F.3d at 123 (upholding a multiplier of 3.5 as reasonable and observing that "multipliers of between 3 and 4.5 have become common"); Carlson v. Xerox Corp., 355 F. App'x 523, 526 (2d Cir. 2009) ("the resulting multiplier would be 3.59, still below the 3.6 average and in line with the 3.1 median for similar cases"); In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litig., No. 13md2476 (DLC), 2016 WL 2731524, at *17 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 26, 2016) ("CDS") (approving a lodestar multiplier of "just over 6" in a complex antitrust class action); Beckman v. KeyBank N.A., 293 F.R.D. 467, 481 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (approving a multiplier of 6.3 in class action, explaining that "[c]ourts regularly award lodestar multipliers of up to eight times the lodestar, and in some cases, even higher multipliers."); Maley v. Del Global Tech. Corp., 186 F. Supp. 2d 358, 371 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (holding that a 4.65 lodestar multiplier is modest, fair, and reasonable).

Counsel's Limitations and Audits of Time. In this case, Counsel self-imposed certain limits to control time and hourly rates. The rates for timekeepers performing first-level document review were capped at $350 per hour, and rates for paralegals and other litigation professionals were capped at $200 per hour. Timekeepers that worked less than 15 hours on the case have been excluded for the purpose of the lodestar calculation, and any time relating to preparing this motion has been excluded as well. On top of these caps, Class Counsel have audited the time of each firm and adjusted the lodestar in the exercise of billing judgment. Finally, the lodestar has been calculated based on historical rates, rather than current rates. The limits imposed by Class Counsel confirm that there is no windfall resulting from the fee request.

Number of Hours Billed. As reflected in the accompanying attorney declarations, Counsel invested a total of 53,814.49 fee compensable hours prosecuting the claims on behalf of the Class and reaching the eight Settlements. A summary of the hours spent by law firm per year is set forth in the below matrix.

Lowey Dannenberg	1,398.30	1,931.96	2,363.40	2,046.05	4,247.84	8,955.77	1,727.70
Lovell Stewart	54.15	2,078.75	2,601.49	2,291.74	6,382.85	9,310.94	2,393.70
Berman Tabacco		6.15	292.40	160.90	1,248.40	3,864.50	457.50
TOTALS	1,452.45	4,016.86	5,257.29	4,498.69	11,879.09	22,131.21	4,578.90

Counsel assert that the fee compensable hours are reasonable when viewed in the context of the work undertaken in this case over approximately six years. Counsel's efforts on behalf of the Class are detailed in the Joint Declaration and the three attorney declarations submitted concurrently herewith, including summaries of work for each timekeeper. Counsel's work included the following:

- Investigated and filed the first and only complaint herein alleging an unlawful agreement among many of the largest banks in the world that was designed to manipulate, fix and rig BBSW;
- Amended the complaint multiple times in order to address shortcomings identified by the Court in its motion to dismiss opinions, including amending the complaint to add Plaintiff OCERS who had consent jurisdiction agreements with many of the defendants;

- Successfully defeated six rounds of dismissal motions, including motions pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1), (b)(2), (b)(3) and (b)(6), motions for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) and dismissal motions premised upon a release from a prior class action settlement;
- Prepared and served multiple Rule 34 document requests to each of the twelve Defendants during discovery;
- Engaged in individual meet and confers with each of the ten remaining Defendants concerning their responses and objections to Plaintiffs' Rule 34 requests and other discovery matters, and non-parties concerning the production of information for class notice. In total, Class Counsel conducted at least seventy (70) meet and confers.
- Mindful of the burdens on this Court, Counsel sought to and did resolve their many discovery disputes without Court intervention. Plaintiffs submitted only two motions to compel to the Court and then resolved those motions by agreement with Defendants pursuant to the Court's instructions;
- Based on Class Counsel's aggressive representation, Plaintiffs received more than 2.4 million documents produced by Defendants. Class Counsel and their experts engaged in an extensive analysis these complex documents and utilized them to build on the allegations in the complaint and also to persuade Defendants' counsel during settlement negotiations that Plaintiffs would have the proof necessary to establish their claims;
- Engaged in numerous meet and confers with several Defendants concerning Plaintiffs' responses and objections to Defendants' Rule 34 requests. Plaintiff OCERS gathered, reviewed and produced over 23,000 pages of documents for production, with meet and confer conferences continuing through the litigation and up to the time of the final settlements.
- Worked with economists to develop an impact model to detect and estimate the impact of manipulations on BBSW;
- Negotiated eight separate settlements involving twelve different banks, all of which included months of hard-fought negotiations with Defendants' counsel over material provision such as the specifics of the cooperation provisions;
- Developed a detailed class notice plan that was approved by the Court and also developed a proposed Plan of Distribution which, subject to the Court's approval, will be used to distribute the proceeds of the Settlements to eligible Class members.

The number of hours Counsel spent litigating this case is extremely reasonable given the complexity of the case (see "D.3" below), the length of the litigation (six years), the high volume of motion practice, the large number of Defendants and the large number of documents produced in the case (approximately 2.4 million).

Hourly Rates. The billing rates used to develop the lodestar are also reasonable. The hourly billing rates for attorneys working on this case ranged from $185 to $1,295. Briganti Decl. Ex. A (schedule listing attorney rates from $325-$1,295); Jaccarino Decl. Ex. A (schedule listing attorney rates from $185-$1,140); Seaver Decl. Ex. A (schedule listing attorney rates from $350-$1,085). Billing rates in the same range have been previously approved in federal cases in New York for work of comparable size and complexity. See, e.g., City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972, at *1 (finding counsel's hourly rates between $170 to $1,058 were reasonable); In re GSE Bonds Antitrust Litig., No. 19-cv-1704 (JSR), 2020 WL 3250593, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 16, 2020) (granting fee award using partner rates of $675 to $1,150 and associate rates of $365 to $820), see also Decls. in Support of Award for Attorney's Fees and Expenses, GSE Bonds (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 13, 2020), ECF No. 393-96; In re Foreign Exchange Benchmark Rates Antitrust Litig., No. 13 Civ. 7789 (LGS), 2018 WL 5839691 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 8, 2018) (granting fee award using partner rates up to $1,375 and associate rates of $350 to $700), see also Decl. in Support of Award for Attorney's Fees and Expenses, In re Foreign Exchange, No. 13 Civ. 7789 (LGS), (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 12, 2018), ECF No. 939; CDS, 2016 WL 2731524, at *17 (granting fee award using partner rates of $834 to $1,125 and associate rates of $411 to $714; see ECF No. 482).

Again, hourly rates for paralegals and other litigation support personnel were capped at $200. City of Westland, 2021 WL 2453972 at *3 (approving rate of $200 an hour for paralegals and litigation support personnel). First-level document review rates were capped at $350 an hour.

Lodestar. Lodestar is calculated by "multipl[ying] the reasonable hours billed by a reasonable hourly rate." In re Colgate-Palmolive Co. ERISA Litig., 36 F. Supp. 3d 344, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 2014). If the Court accepts the reasonableness of the hours and the rates reported here, the fee compensable lodestar totals $29,908,595.15. The lodestar for each firm is set forth below.

Law Firm	Lodestar
Lowey Dannenberg, P.C.	$12,009,690.35
Lovell Stewart Halebian Jacobson LLP	$15,190,556.80
Berman Tabacco[9]	$2,708,348.00
TOTAL	$29,908,595.15

Lodestar Multiplier. Once the lodestar figure is determined, courts typically enhance it by a positive multiplier "to reflect consideration of a number of factors, including the contingent nature of success and the quality of the attorney's work." Maley, 186 F. Supp. 2d at 370.

The fee request represents a lodestar multiplier of 1.58. This multiplier is well within the range of multipliers typically approved in this Circuit. See, e.g., GSE Bonds, 2020 WL 3250593, at *5 (awarding $77.3 million in fees, representing a 4.09 multiplier on the lodestar); CDS, 2016 WL 2731524, at *18 (approving fees totaling over $253 million, which was "equivalent to a lodestar multiple of just over 6"); Maley, 186 F. Supp. 2d at 371 (approving a fee award that represented a 4.65 multiplier); In re RJR Nabisco, Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 88 Civ. 7905 (MBM), 1992 WL 210138, at *6-8 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 24, 1992) (awarding multiplier of 6); In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Antitrust Litig., No. 11-MD-2262 (NRB), 2018 WL 3863445, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2018) (noting "mean multiplier in this Circuit is approximately 1.55, with multipliers in antitrust and securities cases recently averaging 1.77 and 1.43, respectively"); see also In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393, 399 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (Pollack, J.) (noting that a multiplier of "2.5 times the reported charges" would be reasonable in commodities class action); Order, at ¶¶ 2, 6, 9, In re Nat. Gas Commodity Litig., 03 Civ. 6186, (S.D.N.Y. June 15, 2007), ECF No. 445 (approving a 1.9 multiplier in commodities class action); In re Platinum &

[9] Pursuant to Local Rule 23.1, Class Counsel state that they have a fee sharing agreement with Berman Tabacco, counsel for Plaintiff OCERS. The agreement provides that Berman Tabacco is entitled to share up to 17% of attorneys' fees awarded herein.

Palladium Commodities Litig., No. 10 Civ. 3617, 2015 WL 4560206, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. July 7, 2015) (approving a 1.9 multiplier in commodities action for attorneys representing the Futures Class); In re BP Propane Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 06 Civ. 3541, slip op. (N.D. Ill. Feb. 10, 2010), ECF No. 209, [Joint Decl. Ex. Q, Tab 2] (33% fee award that resulted in a 2.7 lodestar multiplier).

Additionally, the multiplier accounts for the risks of the litigation, the complexity of the issues, the quality of the representation (for both Plaintiffs and Defendants), the six-year delay in payment, the contingent nature of the case and each of the other Goldberger factors. See "D" below.

B. The Requested Fee Is Within The Range of the Fees Approved In This Circuit For Similar Sized Settlements And Is Further Supported by The Graduated Fee-Scale Negotiated with OCERS

The reasonableness of the requested fee is confirmed when compared to cases applying the "percentage method" to calculate fees, the method which is favored in this Circuit. Wal-Mart Stores, 396 F.3d at 121 ("The trend in this Circuit is toward the percentage method"); see also In re Beacon Assoc. Litig., No. 09 Civ. 777(CM), 2013 WL 2450960, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. May 9, 2013) (explaining that "percentage of recovery" is "the preferred method of calculating the award for class counsel in common fund cases"). Notably, other judges, including Your Honor, find that the percentage method is not a panacea, potentially encouraging counsel to prematurely settle cases and avoid extensive opportunity costs, or "to collect a large fee after investing relatively little time in the case, rather than continuing the litigation in order to maximize plaintiffs' recovery but receiving a lower marginal rate of return on his or her work." In re Auction Houses Antitrust Litig., 197 F.R.D. 71, 77 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). That has not happened here.

In this case, even if used simply as a point of comparison to the lodestar method, a fee of 25.4% is amply reasonable. The percentage is comparable to fees awarded in other less complex actions with settlements of between $100 million and $300 million that resulted in higher lodestar multipliers than requested here. In re Signet Jewelers Ltd. Sec. Litig., No. 1:16-CV-06728-CM-SDA, 2020 WL 4196468, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. July 21, 2020) (approving attorneys' fees that equaled 25% of a $240 million settlement and that represented a 1.89 lodestar multiplier); NECA-IBEW Health & Welfare Fund v. Goldman, Sachs & Co., No. 1:08-CV-10783, 2016 WL 3369534 at *1 (S.D.N.Y. May 2, 2016) (approving attorneys' fees that equaled 21% of a $272 million settlement and that represented a lodestar multiplier of 3.9.); Bd. of Trustees of AFTRA Ret. Fund v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., No. 09 CIV. 686 SAS, 2012 WL 2064907, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. June 7, 2012) (approving attorneys' fees that equaled 25% of $150 million settlement and that represented a lodestar multiplier of 2.86); In re Comverse Tech., Inc. Sec. Litig., 2010 WL 2653354, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. June 24, 2010) (awarding attorneys' fees that equaled 25% of $225 million settlement and that represented a lodestar multiplier of 2.78.); In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d at 399 (Pollack, J.) (approving attorneys' fees that equaled 27.5% of $116.6 million settlement and that represented a lodestar multiplier of 2.5).

When looking at comparable cases involving benchmark manipulation, the fee request is in line with awards granted in this District where the total settlements to date were approximately $300 million or less. Sullivan v. Barclays PLC, No. 13-cv-2811 (PKC) (S.D.N.Y. May 18, 2018) ECF No. 425 (order granting 22.24% of the $309 million settlement fund as attorneys' fees); Laydon v. Mizuho Bank Ltd., No. 12-cv-3419 (GBD) (S.D.N.Y.) ECF Nos. 723 (Nov. 10, 2016) (granting 25% fee on first set of settlements totaling $58 million), 837 (Dec. 7, 2017) (awarding attorneys' fee of 23.57% from a second set of settlements totaling $148 million); see also Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. 14-cv-7126 (JMF), 2018 WL 6250657, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 29, 2018) (awarding 26% of the net settlement fund from a $504.5 million settlement involving the manipulation of ISDAfix). Recent studies of antitrust class actions further confirm the reasonableness of the requested 25.4% fee. See above.

Moreover, the facts of this case demonstrate that the pitfalls that have concerned the Court about awarding fees based on a percentage are not present. Counsel have invested more than 53,800 hours over six years prosecuting this case. See "A" above. In that time, they have responded to and largely prevailed on six pleadings-related motions, negotiated the production of over 2.4 million documents, and conducted multiple rounds of months'-long negotiations to produce the resulting Settlements. Id. Moreover, based on their experience in other benchmark litigation cases, Class Counsel firmly believe that they have achieved optimal value for the Class, particularly when one considers the amount of time that has already elapsed in litigating this case, and the amount of time that would likely be required to get to a trial on the merits in this action. In re Advanced Battery Techs., Inc. Sec. Litig., 298 F.R.D. 171, 176 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) ("any potential recovery by Class members in the absence of a settlement would occur years in the future, substantially delaying payment to Class members"). Continuing the prosecution in the hope of obtaining a larger settlement would have subjected the Class to more uncertainty and risk.

C. The Requested Fee Is Further Supported by The Graduated Fee-Scale Negotiated with OCERS

Counsel's arm's-length fee agreement with OCERS provides the Court with a valuable guidepost that may be used to determine the appropriate fee. The Supreme Court and the Second Circuit have recognized that an appropriate Court-awarded fee is intended to approximate what counsel would receive if they were offering their services in the marketplace. Missouri v. Jenkins, 491 U.S. 274, 285-86 (1989); Arbor Hill Concerned Citizens Neighborhood Ass'n v. Cty. of Albany and Albany Cty. Bd. of Elections, 522 F.3d 182, 184 (2d Cir. 2008) (a "reasonable" fee reflects "what a reasonable, paying client would be willing to pay" for counsel's services); Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 52 ("market rates, where available, are the ideal proxy for [class counsel's] compensation."). Courts accordingly may give weight to negotiated fee agreements because they typically reflect actual market rates Nortel Networks, 539 F.3d at 133 ("In many cases, the agreed-upon fee will offer the best indication of a market rate."). Moreover, there is "a well-recognized rebuttable 'presumption of correctness' given to the terms of an ex ante fee agreement between class counsel and lead plaintiffs" applied in antitrust cases where the fee was negotiated by a "sophisticated benefits fund with fiduciary obligations to its members and where that fund has a sizeable stake in the litigation." CDS Litig., 2016 WL 2731524, at *16 (quoting Flanagan, Lieberman, Hoffman & Swaim v. Ohio Pub. Emps. Ret. Sys., 814 F.3d 652, 659 (2d Cir. 2016); see also In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 282 (3d Cir. 2001).

Here, there is no need to approximate what Class Counsel's services in this case are worth or what a reasonable client would be willing to pay. The fee request reflects the agreed-upon sliding scale percentage OCERS negotiated with Counsel prior to its participation in this action. Ratto Declaration, ¶¶5-8. OCERS has more than $22.4 billion in assets under management, is one of the nation's largest public pension funds, acts as a fiduciary on behalf of more than 49,000 members and has a large stake in this litigation. Id., ¶¶1-8. The fee agreement is entitled to a "presumption of correctness" because its terms were negotiated by a "sophisticated benefits fund"—such as OCERS—"with fiduciary obligations to its members and . . . a sizeable stake in the litigation." CDS, 2016 WL 2731524, at *16 (quoting Flanagan, 814 F.3d at 659).

D. The Risks of The Case and Other Goldberger Factors Support The Requested Fee

Under Goldberger, in awarding a fee the Court should consider "(1) the time and labor expended by counsel; (2) the magnitude and complexities of the litigation; (3) the risk of the litigation ...; (4) the quality of representation; (5) the requested fee in relation to the settlement; and (6) public policy considerations." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 50. The requested fee is also supported by each of the six Goldberger factors.

1. The High Risks of the Litigation Support the Requested Fee

The risk of the litigation is the preeminent Goldberger factor. In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., 991 F. Supp. 2d 437, 440 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) ("Payment Card") ("The most important Goldberger factor is often the case's risk"); Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 54 ("We have historically labeled the risk of success as 'perhaps the foremost' factor to be considered in determining whether to award an enhancement."). The risk of undertaking litigation is "measured as of when the case is filed." Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55.

The substantial risks in this complex case included the following. Class Counsel overcame the risks of Defendants' six rounds of Rule 12 dismissal motions and Plaintiffs would eventually face dispositive motions for summary judgment where Defendants would challenge Plaintiffs' ability to provide evidentiary support for their claims. For example, Defendants consistently challenged Plaintiffs' ability to establish a conspiracy to manipulate BBSW, which was essential to Plaintiffs' claims. Defendants argued that, if anything, each of their alleged unlawful conduct in connection with BBSW was an individual undertaking, and not one performed as part of any conspiracy. In order to obtain the proof necessary to defeat summary judgment (and eventually prevail at trial), Plaintiffs first needed to obtain significant discovery from Defendants. Discovery proved to be challenging. Defendants took (in Counsel's opinion) a very narrow view of the case and aggressively opposed Plaintiffs' discovery requests. This required extensive negotiation efforts that involved more than seventy (70) meet and confers. Counsel's diligence in discovery paid off. Ultimately, Defendants produced more than 2.4 million documents to Plaintiffs. Class Counsel also faced the risk of certifying a class in this action where Plaintiffs alleged that BBSW was manipulated both higher and lower than its competitive price on different days. Class certification motions based on similar records have repeatedly been denied (incorrectly, in Class Counsel's judgment). See fn. 2 above. The Settlements reached with the Defendants avoids all these additional risks and the uncertainties of continued litigation and trial.

2. The Time and Labor Expended by Class Counsel That Resulted In The Creation of The Common Fund In The High Risk Environment Of This Action Support the Requested Fee

During the last six years, Counsel dedicated a substantial amount of time (more than 53,800 hours) and resources to prosecuting the claims herein on behalf of the Class. Counsel's efforts on behalf of the Class are detailed in the Joint Declaration and the individual attorney declarations submitted concurrently herewith, including summaries of each timekeeper's work. A summary of the work undertaken in this Action is set forth in "I.A" above.

3. The Magnitude and Complexity of the Litigation Support the Requested Fee

A greater fee award is warranted for counsel prosecuting complex class action cases. In re Citigroup Inc. Bond Litig., 988 F. Supp. 2d 371, 379 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) ("The upshot is that the magnitude and complexity of the litigation also weigh in favor of a significant award."); In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465, 477 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) ("NASDAQ III") ("[C]lass actions have a well-deserved reputation as being most complex"). Complex cases require a greater level of investment by counsel, in terms of effort, expertise, and resources, to competently litigate the claims and issues at stake on behalf of plaintiffs and the class. Class actions involving antitrust and commodities claims stand out as some of the most "'complex, protracted, and bitterly fought.'" Meredith Corp. v. SESAC LLC, 87 F. Supp. 3d 650, 670 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (citations omitted); In re Platinum and Palladium Commodities Litig., No. 10cv3617, 2014 WL 3500655, at *12 (S.D.N.Y. July 15, 2014) (noting that commodities cases are "complex and expensive" to litigate); In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., No. 06 Md. 1738 (BMC)(JO), 2012 WL 5289514, at *4 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2012).

Complexity. This case involves an alleged conspiracy among multiple banks and interdealer brokers to fix BBSW and BBSW-Based Derivatives prices over more than 13 years through multiple means, including, inter alia: (1) engaging in manipulative money market transactions during the BBSW Fixing Window; (2) making false BBSW rate submissions that did not reflect actual transaction prices; (3) uneconomically buying or selling money market instruments at a loss to cause artificial derivatives prices; and (4) sharing proprietary information to align interests and avoid conduct that could harm co-conspirators. ECF No. 281 (Second Amended Class Action Complaint ("SAC")). The amount of work required to understand the inner workings of a cartel with this level of sophistication was extraordinary in both its complexity and scope and required Class Counsel to master the properties of complex financial instruments and markets. GSE Bonds, 2020 WL 3250593, at *4 (finding "complexity [is] present [where] plaintiffs claimed that the defendants colluded in the GSE Bond market over more than seven years, involving thousands of bond issuances, and implicating sixteen defendants"); In re Holocaust Victim Assets Litig., No. CV 06-0983 (FB)(JO), 2007 WL 805768, at *46 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 15, 2007).

Magnitude. This is a massive case. Over the course of six years of litigation involving seventeen different financial institutions as Defendants, the Court and the parties generated over 500 docket entries associated with two amended complaints, multiple motions to dismiss, reconsideration requests and multiple requests for judgment on the pleadings. More than 2.4 million documents have been produced, and thousands of hours have been spent analyzing and contextualizing the relevant information. The nature, duration, size of the case, complexity of the financial instruments, and sophistication and the breadth of the alleged conspiracy weigh heavily in favor of approving the requested fee.

4. The Quality of the Representation Supports the Requested Fee

"[T]he quality of representation is best measured by results," Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 55, which are evaluated in light of "the recovery obtained and the backgrounds of the lawyers involved in the lawsuit." In re Merrill Lynch Tyco Research Sec. Litig., 249 F.R.D. 124, 141 (S.D.N.Y. 2008).

Results Obtained. The eight Settlements provide for a $185,875,000 benefit to the Class. This is an extraordinary recovery in light of the challenges of prosecuting this action and the risks of continuing litigation.

Background of Counsel. Counsel has decades of experience prosecuting class action cases, including some of the largest class action recoveries under the commodities and antitrust laws. See ECF Nos. 452-6, 452-7 (firm resumes). This includes specific expertise in benchmark manipulation as demonstrated by Class Counsel's current tenure as lead or co-lead counsel in cases alleging anticompetitive and manipulative conduct. Id. Additional examples of Class Counsel's more than 70 years of combined experience with complex litigation are detailed in Class Counsel's resumes. Id. The background of each timekeeper for whom fees are being requested are set forth in the attorney declarations submitted herewith.

Another consideration for assessing the quality of the representation is "[t]he quality of the opposing counsel" in the case. Maley, 186 F. Supp. 2d. at 373. The fact that Class Counsel successfully prosecuted this action for six years against more than a dozen different Defendants all represented by well-respected and high-caliber law firms and obtained a substantial recovery for the Class reflects the quality of representation provided.

5. The Fee Award Is Reasonable in Relationship to the Settlement

Courts evaluate the requested fee in relation to the settlement by looking to "comparable cases" for "guideposts." Payment Card., 991 F. Supp. 2d at 443-44 (evaluating a fee request against other "large class cases with court-set fees"). Here, the Court has several guideposts to assist its evaluation, including OCERS' retainer agreement and the cases cited above with similar lodestar multipliers and fee award percentages in cases that involved similar sized class action settlements. See "A"–"C" above. Class Counsel's fee request compares favorably to these other cases.

6. Public Policy Considerations Support the Requested Fee

The Supreme Court has recognized the benefits of private civil suits as a means of enforcing federal antitrust laws. Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 262-63 (1983) ("This Court has emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes, including the federal antitrust laws."). If Class Counsel had not taken on the risks of this lawsuit in 2016, the Class would have been left without recompense. The relatively small regulatory fines imposed by ASIC on certain Defendants were not allocated to private investors.

Awarding a fair and reasonable fee from the common fund ensures that Class Counsel retains the ability and incentive to pursue antitrust violations at their own expense even when recovery is uncertain. Goldberger, 209 F.3d at 51 ("There is . . . commendable sentiment in favor of providing lawyers with sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases that serve the public interest."); Colgate-Palmolive3, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 352 ("providing lawyers with sufficient incentive to bring common fund cases . . . serve[s] the public interest") (citations omitted). Espinal v. Victor's Café 52nd St., Inc., No. 16-CV-8057 (VEC), 2019 WL 5425475, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 23, 2019) ("The Second Circuit and courts in this District have taken into account the 'social and economic value of class actions, and the need to encourage experienced and able counsel to undertake such litigation' as a basis for increasing the percentage of the fund awarded to Class Counsel.").

It further ensures that our legal system, which relies on citizens to act as private attorneys general to vindicate the public interest, benefits from the involvement and expertise of top tier law firms to prosecute these large and highly complex cases. Colgate-Palmolive, 36 F. Supp. 3d at 352 ("While court awarded fees must be reasonable, setting fees too low or randomly will create poor incentives to bringing large class action cases."). This is particularly true in the context of private prosecutions of antitrust and CEA violations. See GSE Bonds, 2020 WL 3250593, at *5 ("Congress has encouraged enforcement of the antitrust laws through private civil suits to deter infringing conduct in the future."); CDS, 2016 WL 2731524, at *18 ("Our antitrust laws address issues that go to the heart of our economy. Our economic health, and indeed our stability as a nation, depend upon adherence to the rule of law and our citizenry's trust in the fairness and transparency of our marketplace."); Leist v. Simplot, 638 F.2d 283, 311 (2d Cir. 1980) ("The 1974 Congress repeatedly expressed its view that the changes [to the CEA] were designed to strengthen commodity futures regulation, a goal that would be ill-served by abolishing the private right of action that everyone had thought to exist."), aff'd sub nom. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Curran, 456 U.S. 353 (1982) (citing CEA legislative history); Cange v. Stotler & Co., Inc., 826 F.2d 581, 584 (7th Cir. 1987) (explaining that Congress depends on the "critical" role of additional private suits to deter violations of the CEA); see also Pillsbury, 459 U.S. at 262-263 ("This Court has emphasized the importance of the private action as a means of furthering the policy goals of certain federal regulatory statutes . . . .").

E. Plaintiff OCERS' Approval and the Class's Reaction Support the Requested Fee

Plaintiff OCERS is a highly sophisticated client with fiduciary responsibilities to its members. Ratto Declaration, ¶¶4-5. OCERS was actively involved in the prosecution and settlement of this action. Id., ¶¶9-15. The requested fee follows the graduated fee scale negotiated by OCERS prior to entering this case, providing ex ante support for the fee. Id., ¶¶5-8. Additionally, OCERS gives post hoc support of the fee request based on their knowledge of Counsel's work and the risks of continued prosecution. Id., ¶¶16-19.

The reaction of the Class so far also supports the requested fee. As of August 1, 2022, the Settlement Administrator had mailed the class notice to over 52,000 potential Class members and has otherwise executed the robust publication notice aspects of the Court-approved notice plan. ECF No. 548. The notice informed Class members that Class Counsel intended to request an award of attorneys' fees of up to one-third (33.33%) of the Settlement Funds. ECF No. 548-1, p. 33. The time to object and opt out does not expire until September 2, 2022. Id., ¶¶26-28. However, so far, no objections have been received and only one Class member has requested to opt out. Id. Any objection(s) received will be addressed in Class Counsel's reply brief due to be filed on October 25, 2022. ECF No. 543, ¶10.

When all of the Goldberger factors are considered, there is an ample basis for the Court to grant Class Counsel's requested fee of 25.4% of the common fund or $47,218,750.

II. COUNSEL'S LITIGATION EXPENSES ARE REASONABLE AND SHOULD BE REIMBURSED

District courts in this Circuit grant expense requests in common fund cases as a matter of course. In re Arakis Energy Corp. Sec. Litig., 95 CV 3431(ARR), 2001 WL 1590512, at *17 n.12 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 31, 2001). As detailed in the accompanying attorney declarations, Counsel incurred $845,471.57 in litigation expenses prosecuting this action on behalf of the Class for which they seek reimbursement. These expenses were "incidental and necessary to the representation of the [C]lass," and should be reimbursed. Beckman, 293 F.R.D. at 482.

Counsel incurred the requested expenses over the course of approximately six years, from the inception of the action in 2016 through August 5, 2022. The class notices approved by the Court advised Class members that Counsel would seek reimbursement of expenses of no more than $1,250,000. ECF No. 548-1, pp. 33, 41. The vast majority of the expenses related to payments to experts and consultants (approximately 60%), document discovery and computer research costs (collectively, approximately 35.5%). These types of expenses are routinely granted. See, e.g., In re Platinum & Palladium, 2015 WL 4560206, at *5.

CONCLUSION

Class Counsel respectfully request the Court approve attorneys' fees in the amount of $47,218,750 and reimbursement of litigation expenses in the amount of $845,471.57. A proposed order is respectfully submitted herewith.

Additional Plaintiffs' Counsel for Orange County Employees Retirement System

TAB 35A

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI WESTERN DIVISION

DON GIBSON, LAUREN CRISS, JOHN MEINERS, and DANIEL UMPA, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS, et al., . Defendants.	)	Case No. 4:23-cv-00788-SRB

ORDER

Before the Court is Plaintiffs'[1] Motion for Final Approval of Settlements with Compass, Real Brokerage, Realty ONE, @properties, Douglas Elliman, Redfin, Engel & Völkers, HomeSmart, and United Real Estate (collectively, "Settling Defendants"). (Doc. #521.)[2] Preliminary approval was granted on April 30, 2024, July 15, 2024, and July 16, 2024. See Docs. 163, 297, 348. Notice to the Settlement Class commenced July 23, 2024, and Class members were provided with an opportunity to opt out of, or object to, the Settlements. A small number of Class members filed objections. (Doc. #451, Doc. #464, Doc. #467, Doc. #470, Doc. #471, Doc. #485, Doc. #527, and Doc. #528.) The Settling Defendants filed Suggestions in Support of Final Approval. (Doc. #522.) The Court held a hearing on October 31, 2024, at which arguments were presented for and against final approval. Having considered the arguments at the hearing and reviewed the written submissions, and based on all materials in the record, the motion for final approval is GRANTED.

The Court hereby ORDERS the following:

1. Unless defined herein, all defined terms in this Final Approval Order and any accompanying Judgment shall have the respective meanings set forth in the Settlement Agreements.

2. At preliminary approval, the Court appointed JND Legal Administration ("JND") as the Settlement Administrator. As directed by the Court, JND implemented the Class Notice Plan. In connection with their final approval motion, Plaintiffs submitted a declaration of Jennifer M. Keough from JND summarizing the notice that was given to class members and the resulting claims to date, opt-outs, and objections. (Doc. #521-3.). Notice was provided by first-class U.S. mail, electronic mail, and digital and print publication. Without repeating all the details from Keough's declaration, the Court finds that the direct notice program was extremely successful and reached more than 97% of identified Settlement Class members. Nearly 40 million direct notices were mailed or emailed to the Class. JND's digital effort alone delivered more than 300 million impressions, and its press release was picked up at least 495 times with a potential audience of 113 million. In addition to the formal class notice process, and beyond the paid press release, more than 470 news stories addressed the litigation and settlement, including full articles in outlets such as the New York Times, USAToday, and CNN. JND also implemented a Settlement Website that had over 2 million unique visitors and over 11 million page views.

3. As of October 21, 2024, over 463,000 claims have been made. The claims period extends until May 9, 2025. This extended claims period is valuable because additional settlements covering the same Settlement Class (with minor variations on the length of the class periods) have been reached with other defendants, and the notice process for those settlements will provide additional opportunities to submit claims.

4. In contrast to the massive scale of the notice program and the large volume of claims, there were only 8 objections (encompassing 11 total objectors) and 46 opt outs from the Settlement Class.

5. Based on the record, the Court finds that the notice given to the Settlement Class constituted the best notice practicable under the circumstances and fully satisfied the requirements of due process, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, and all applicable law. The Court further finds that the notice given to the Settlement Class was adequate and reasonable.

6. The notice fully and accurately informed members of the Settlement Class of all material elements of the Settlements. The Settlement Class Members received notice of: (a) the pendency of the Actions; (b) the terms of the proposed Settlements, including the Released Claims, Released Parties, and Releasing Parties; (c) their rights under the proposed Settlement, including how to receive the benefits offered by the Settlements; (d) their right to exclude themselves from the Settlement Class and the proposed Settlements; (e) their right to object to any aspect of the proposed Settlements; (f) their right to appear at the Final Approval Hearing; (g) Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees and expenses and an incentive award to the Class Representatives; and (h) the binding effect of this Final Judgment and Order Approving Settlement on all Persons who did not timely exclude themselves from the Settlement Class. Some of the objectors challenged certain aspects of the notice program. The Court addresses those objections below and finds that they present no valid challenge to the notice.

7. The Court also finds that the appropriate state and federal officials were timely notified of the Settlement Agreements under the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 (CAFA), 28

U.S.C. § 1715, and that ninety (90) days have passed without comment or objection from any governmental entity.

8. For the purposes of the settlement of the claims against Compass, Douglas Elliman, HomeSmart, Real Brokerage, Realty ONE, United Real Estate, and only for that purpose, the Court certifies the following class, except for those timely opting out:

a. All persons who sold a home that was listed on a multiple listing service[3] anywhere in the United States where a commission was paid to any brokerage in connection with the sale of the home in the following date ranges:

i. October 31, 2019 to date of Class Notice.

9. For the purposes of the settlement of the claims against Redfin, and only for that purpose, the Court certifies the following class, except for those timely opting out:

a. All persons who sold a home that was listed on a multiple listing service anywhere in the United States where a commission was paid to any brokerage in connection with the sale of the home in the following date ranges:

i. Homes in Nevada: January 15, 2018 to date of Class Notice;

ii. Homes in California: October 2, 2019 to date of Class Notice; and

iii. For all other homes: October 31, 2019 to date of Class Notice.

10. For the purposes of the settlement of the claims against Engel & Völkers and @properties, and only for that purpose, the Court certifies the following class, except for those timely opting out:

[3] MLS includes non-NAR multiple listing services, including NWMLS, WPMLS, and REBNY / RLS.

a. All persons who sold a home that was listed on a multiple listing service anywhere in the United States where a commission was paid to any brokerage in connection with the sale of the home in the following date ranges:

i. Homes in Arkansas, Kentucky, and Missouri: October 31, 2018 to date of Class Notice;

ii. Homes in Alabama, Georgia, Indiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Vermont, Wisconsin, and Wyoming: October 31, 2017 to date of Class Notice;

iii. For all other homes: October 31, 2019 to date of Class Notice.

11. The Court finds that certification of the Settlement Class is warranted in light of the Settlements under the prerequisites of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) because: (1) the members of the Settlement Class are so numerous that joinder is impracticable; (2) there are issues of law and fact common to the Settlement Class; (3) Plaintiffs' claims are typical of the claims of the Settlement Class Members; and (4) Plaintiffs and Co-Lead Counsel will fairly and adequately represent the interests of the Settlement Class Members.

12. The Court finds that certification of the Settlement Class is warranted in light of and solely for purposes of the Settlements under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3) because common issues, including whether Settling Defendants entered into any conspiracy, predominate over any questions affecting only individual members of the Settlement Class in the settlement context, and settlement of the Actions on a class basis is superior to other means of resolving the Actions as to Settling Defendants.

13. The Court reaffirms the appointment of Plaintiffs Don Gibson, Lauren Criss, John Meiners, and Daniel Umpa, as the Settlement Class Representatives. The Court finds that the Settlement Class Representatives have and will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the Settlement Class because: (1) the interests of the Settlement Class Representatives are consistent with those of Settlement Class Members; (2) there appear to be no conflicts between or among the Settlement Class Representatives and the other Settlement Class Members; (3) the Settlement Class Representatives have been and appear to be capable of continuing to be active participants in both the prosecution and the settlement of this litigation; and (4) the Settlement Class Representatives and Settlement Class Members are represented by qualified, reputable counsel who are experienced in preparing and prosecuting large, complicated class action cases, including those concerning violation of the antitrust laws.

14. In making these findings, the Court has considered, inter alia, (1) the interests of the Settlement Class Members in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (2) the impracticality or inefficiency of prosecuting or defending separate actions; (3) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning these claims already commenced; and (4) the desirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in a particular forum.

15. As discussed below in response to objections from competing cases, the Court has specifically considered that the settlement class is nationwide and releases claims arising from sales of homes listed on NAR and non-NAR MLSs, including all claims on behalf of sellers arising from the same factual predicate. Plaintiffs here plead a nationwide conspiracy on behalf of a nationwide class that expressly challenges certain NAR rules as well as rules adopted by the Residential Listing Service ("RLS") of the Real Estate Board of New York ("REBNY"). (See Doc. #232, Consolidated Am. Compl., ¶ 182.) The Complaint includes specific allegations regarding the particular anticompetitive policies adopted in REBNY RLS. Id. The Complaint alleges that, as a result, "Defendants' conspiracy has had the following anticompetitive effects nationwide," including in REBNY RLS: (a) "Home sellers have been forced to pay commissions to buyer-brokers—their adversaries in negotiations to sell their homes— thereby substantially inflating the cost of selling their homes"; (b) "Home sellers have been compelled to set a high buyer-broker commission to induce buyer-brokers to show their homes to home buyers."; (c) "Home sellers have paid inflated buyer-broker commissions and inflated total commissions."; (d) "The retention of a buyer-broker has been severed from the setting of the broker's commission; the home buyer retains the buyer-broker, while the home seller sets the buyer-broker's compensation"; (e) Price competition among brokers to be retained by home buyers has been restrained." Id. ¶ 225 (emphasis added); see also id. ¶¶ 28, 227 (describing "nationwide" impact).

16. Here, the Court finds that certifying a nationwide class is warranted, including because Plaintiffs have conducted extensive discovery into the alleged nationwide conspiracy and have thoroughly litigated the claims, providing a robust factual record on which to assess the claims and base negotiations. A nationwide settlement was a necessary condition of obtaining any settlement for the benefit of the class, a nationwide settlement will conserve judicial and private resources, and Class members were fully apprised of the settlement class definition through the notice process. As the Court explains more thoroughly below, it was both justified and necessary to achieve any settlement for the Settlement Class to include all multiple listing services for residential real estate nationwide, however the multiple listing services were named (e.g., real estate listing service), and regardless of whether the services were affiliated or associated with NAR or not. Moreover, the only way that the Settlements were possible was if they provided for a nationwide recovery and release.

17. As a general matter, "the law strongly favors settlements. Courts should hospitably receive them." Little Rock Sch. Dist. v. Pulaski County Special Sch. Dist. No. 1, 921 F.2d 1371, 1383 (8th Cir. 1990) (noting it is especially true in "a protracted, highly divisive, even bitter litigation"). See also Petrovic v. Amoco Oil Co., 200 F.3d 1140, 1148 (8th Cir. 1999) ("A strong public policy favors [settlement] agreements, and courts should approach them with a presumption in their favor."); Marshall v. Nat'l Football League, 787 F.3d 502, 508 (8th Cir. 2015) ("A settlement agreement is 'presumptively valid.'" (quoting In re Uponor, Inc., F1807 Plumbing Fittings Products Liab. Litig., 716 F.3d 1057, 1063 (8th Cir. 2013)); Sanderson v. Unilever Supply Chain, Inc., 10-cv-00775-FJG, 2011 WL 5822413, at *3 (W.D. Mo. Nov. 16, 2011) (crediting the judgment of experienced class counsel that settlement was fair, reasonable, and adequate) . The presumption in favor of settlements is particularly strong "in class actions and other complex cases where substantial judicial resources can be conserved by avoiding formal litigation." Cohn v. Nelson, 375 F. Supp. 2d 844, 852 (E.D. Mo. 2005). However, the Court does not rely on any presumption in favor of settlements here because these settlements need no presumption to be found fair, reasonable, and adequate.

18. The determination whether a class action settlement is "fair, reasonable, and adequate" is "committed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. Great weight is accorded his views because he is exposed to the litigants, and their strategies, positions and proofs. He is aware of the expense and possible legal bars to success. Simply stated, he is on the firing line and can evaluate the action accordingly." Van Horn v. Trickey, 840 F.2d 604, 606-07 (8th Cir. 1988). The ultimate question is whether the settlement is "fair, reasonable, and adequate." In re Wireless, 396 F.3d 922, 932 (8th Cir. 2005).

19. Rule 23(e)(2) includes four factors the Court must consider, when evaluating settlement fairness. Those factors are whether:

> (A) the Class Representatives and Class Counsel have adequately represented the class;
> (B) the proposal was negotiated at arm's length;

(C) the relief provided for the Class is adequate, taking into account:

(i) the costs, risks, and delay of trial and appeal;
(ii) the effectiveness of any proposed method of distributing relief to the Class, including the method of processing Class-Member claims;
(iii) the terms of any proposed award of attorney's fees, including timing of payment; and
(iv) any agreement required to be identified under Rule 23(e)(3); and

(D) the proposal treats class members equitably relative to each other.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(2).

20. The Eighth Circuit has also set forth four factors that a court should consider in determining whether to approve a proposed class action settlement: "(1) the merits of the plaintiff's case, weighed against the terms of the settlement; (2) the defendant's financial condition; (3) the complexity and expense of further litigation; and (4) the amount of opposition to the settlement." In re Wireless, 396 F.3d 922, 932 (citing Grunin v. Int'l House of Pancakes, 513 F.2d 114, 124 (8th Cir. 1975); Van Horn, 840 F.2d at 607 (8th Cir. 1988). See also Swinton v. SquareTrade, Inc., 454 F. Supp. 3d 848, 861 (S.D. Iowa 2020) (finding analysis of certain Rule 23(e)(2) factors will "necessarily include analysis of [certain] related Van Horn factors"); Anderson v. Travelex Insurance Services Inc.., No. 8:18-CV-362, 2021 WL 4307093, at *2 (D. Neb. Sept. 22, 2021) (approving settlement under Rule 23(e) by evaluating Van Horn factors); Cleveland v. Whirlpool Corp., No. 20-cv-1906, 2022 WL 2256353 (D. Minn. June 23, 2022) (evaluating settlement under Rule 23(e)(2) factors and Van Horn).

21. Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(e)(2), the Court finds that the Settlements with Settling Defendants, as set forth in the Settlement Agreements, are fair, reasonable and adequate.

22. First, Settlement Class Representatives and Class Counsel have adequately represented the Class and will continue to do so. Class Counsel were previously appointed to serve as lead counsel in Moehrl and Burnett after the courts overseeing those cases found they would adequately represent the class. Burnett, 2022 WL 1203100 (W.D. Mo. Apr. 22, 2022); Moehrl, 2023 WL 2683199 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 29, 2023). Class Counsel subsequently won a jury trial in Burnett. And, in this case, the Court appointed them as Interim Co-Lead Class Counsel with responsibility for any settlements.(Doc. #180.) Altogether, Class Counsel have obtained over $1 billion in proposed and approved settlements as well as historic practice change relief. Class Counsel will continue to represent the class as they have done in navigating the settlement process. Likewise, the Class Representatives have bought and sold homes and have demonstrated their commitment to the litigation by responding to discovery, providing relevant documentation, and participating in the settlement process.

23. Second, each Settlement was conducted at arm's length. The settlement negotiations were contentious and hard fought. Most of the settlements were reached only with the assistance of an experienced mediator. And all occurred only after Settling Defendants provided Class Counsel with sufficient financial information for Plaintiffs to make an informed decision about settlement. Dirks Decl. at ¶¶ 21-22; Berman Decl. at ¶¶ 2, 6-11. There is no indication that any of the Settlements are the result of anything other than tough negotiations. The lengthy history of the real estate commission litigation, which has proceeded for years through class certification and a trial in the Burnett case, demonstrates the arm's length nature of these Settlements.

24. Third, for the reasons stated above, the relief for the Class is fair and adequate. The Settlements provide a significant financial recovery to the Settlement Class in light of the strengths and weaknesses of the case and the risks and costs of continued litigation, including appeal, and the Settling Defendants' financial resources. The Settlements also include meaningful changes to the Settling Defendants' policies. The parties naturally dispute the strength of their claims and defenses. The Settlements reflect a compromise based on the parties' educated assessments of their best-case and worst-case scenarios, and the likelihood of various potential outcomes. Plaintiffs' best-case scenario is obtaining class certification, prevailing and recovering on the merits at trial, upholding a verdict on appeal, and then actually receiving the awarded damages from Defendants. But "experience proves that, no matter how confident trial counsel may be, they cannot predict with 100% accuracy a jury's favorable verdict, particularly in complex antitrust litigation." In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 523 (E.D. Mich. 2003); see also In re Lithium Ion Batteries Antitrust Litig., No. 13-md-02420, 2020 WL 7264559, at *15 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 10, 2020) ("Antitrust cases are particularly risky, challenging, and widely acknowledged to be among the most complex actions to prosecute."). And it would make little sense to try the case against the Settling Defendants where none of them has the ability to pay anywhere near the judgment amount sought. D Dirks Decl. at ¶ 22; Berman Decl. at ¶¶ 11-12.

25. Against these risks, the Settlements provide at least a $110.6 million recovery from the nine Settling Defendants, as well as substantial practice changes. See In re Pork Antitrust Litig., No. 18-1776, 2022 WL 4238416, at *2 (D. Minn. Sept. 14, 2022) (granting final approval of antitrust settlement that provided "substantial relief against the backdrop of a great deal of uncertainty where the merits are highly contested" in case involving alleged price-fixing conspiracy among pork processing companies); In re Polyurethane Foam Antitrust Litig., 168 F. Supp. 3d 985, 995-96 (N.D. Ohio 2016) (granting final approval of settlement in light of "real possibility that [plaintiffs] could have received much less—even zero—from a jury at trial or following an appeal"). The Settlements are also supported by the fact that this is a partial settlement of the claims arising from the alleged conspiracy; Class Counsel have continued to work to achieve additional recoveries on behalf of the Class, including an agreement with NAR to eliminate the Mandatory Offer of Compensation Rule. Although some Class members have objected that they may not recover every dollar they paid to real estate agents, that is true of nearly every settlement. A guaranteed full recovery to every class member would have been untenable, perhaps resulting in no recovery at all.

26. In addition, the Settlements effectively distribute relief to the Class, including via the proposed method for processing class member claims. The Court-appointed notice and claims administrator, JND, will work with Class Counsel in processing Class member claims and distributing relief. JND has extensive experience in distributing relief in connection with large and complex class action settlements. Keough Decl. at ¶¶ 1, 47-51. JND will be responsible for reviewing claim forms and evidence of purchase to determine whether a claim is an approved claim, and any claim that cannot be confirmed may be subject to challenge, nonpayment, or a reduced share of the available funds. See Settlement Notice at ¶ 9. Class members with approved claims will have several options for receiving payment, including by debit card, Zelle, Venmo, or check. See Claim Form at p 1. Finally, as discussed below, the attorneys' fee request is reasonable and in line with Eighth Circuit precedent.

27. Fourth, the Settlements treat Class Members fairly and equitably relative to each other. Reviewing the terms of the proposed Settlements, it is clear that under the plain language of the Settlements, no class member is treated differently from any other. The practice change relief applies the same to all Class members nationwide. With respect to the monetary relief, every person who meets the class definition is eligible to submit and receive compensation for a claim. That is all that is required. Petrovic, 200 F.3d at 1152–53 ("We do not agree with the objectors' contention that a mailed notice of settlement must contain a formula for calculating individual awards."). The settlement website advises both that: (i) settlement payment "will take into account the amount of commissions class member claimants paid to a real estate broker or agent"; and (ii) "[t]o the extent the value of total claims exceeds the amount available for distribution from the settlement funds, each class member's share of the settlement may be reduced on a pro rata basis." Settlement FAQ 11.

28. Finally, the requested service awards are reasonable and in line with other cases recognizing the work performed by the class representatives. The Van Horn Factors also support settlement approval. As discussed above under the Rule 23(e)(2) factors, the Settlements reflect a compromise based on the parties' educated assessments of their best-case and worst-case scenarios, and the likelihood of various potential outcomes, including potential financial outcomes of the Settling Defendants. The merits of the plaintiffs' case weighed against the terms of the settlement supports approval. Plaintiffs' claims raise numerous complex legal and factual issues under antitrust law. This is reflected in the voluminous briefing in Moehrl and Burnett, which includes extensive class certification and summary judgment briefing, as well as post-trial briefing in Burnett. In addition, plaintiffs have engaged in extensive appellate briefing, including Rule 23(f) petitions in both Moehrl and Burnett as well as two separate appeals in the Burnett litigation concerning arbitration issues, and a denial of certiorari by the United States Supreme Court. By contrast, the Settlements provide for certain and swift recovery for the Class. In light of the many uncertainties of continued litigation, a significant and certain recovery weighs in favor of approving the proposed Settlements. See In re Coordinated Pretrial Proc. in Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 410 F. Supp. 669, 678 (D. Minn. 1974) (approving settlement where price-fixing claims faced "substantial roadblocks" on top of the "difficulties inherent" in prevailing on such claims); In re Flight Transp. Corp. Sec. Litig., 730 F.2d 1128, 1137 (8th Cir. 1984) (affirming final approval of settlement where "no reported opinion addresses the precise [merits] question presented here," which created "a substantial question whether [plaintiff] would prevail"); In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 205 F.R.D. 369, 393 (D.D.C. 2002) ("Any verdict would have led to an appeal and might well have resulted in appeals by both sides and a possible remand for retrial, thereby further delaying final resolution of this case. These factors weigh in favor of the proposed Settlement.") (cleaned up).

29. The fairness, adequacy, and reasonableness of the Settlements are also supported by the Settling Defendants' financial condition and their inability to satisfy a judgment. As discussed above, in order to evaluate the Settling Defendants' financial condition, Plaintiffs reviewed the financial information of each Settling Defendant and its ability to pay. Class Counsel attested that these amounts are reasonable in light of limitations on the Settling Defendants' ability to pay. "[A] defendant is not required to 'empty its coffers' before a settlement can be found adequate." Meredith Corp. v. SESAC, LLC, 87 F. Supp. 3d 650, 665 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) (quoting In re Sony SXRD Rear Projection T.V. Class Action Litig., No. 06-cv-5173, 2008 WL 1956267, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. May 1, 2008)); see also Grunin v. Int'l House of Pancakes, 513 F.2d 114, 125 (8th Cir. 1975) (affirming antitrust settlement and explaining that a "total victory" for plaintiffs after trial "would have been financially disastrous if not fatal" to the defendant, and the final settlement "gave valuable concessions to the [settlement class] yet maintained [the defendant's] corporate viability").

30. As discussed above, the litigation has been, and if it were to proceed forward, will be complex and expensive to prosecute. This is not merely hypothetical. The Court has observed first-hand the complexity and expense of the litigation. Settling Defendants have and would raise numerous procedural and legal challenges to the case if they were not settling. (See Doc. #522, p. 6-12.)

31. Finally, the amount of opposition to the settlement is minimal and supports settlement. The Settlement Class Representatives in this action have approved the Settlements. More than 463,000 Class members have submitted claims, while only a small handful have objected and 46 opted out. Keough Decl. at ¶¶ 51, 55. This supports granting final approval. See, e.g., Keil v. Lopez, 862 F.3d 685, 698 (8th Cir. 2017) (determining that with a settlement class of approximately 3.5 million households, and "only fourteen class members submitted timely objections," the "amount of opposition is minuscule when compared with other settlements that we have approved"); Bishop v. DeLaval Inc., No. 5:19-cv-06129-SRB, 2022 WL 18957112, at *1 (W.D. Mo. July 20, 2022) ("A low number of opt-outs and objections in comparison to class size is typically a factor that supports settlement approval") (quoting In re LinkedIn User Priv. Litig., 309 F.R.D. 573, 589 (N.D. Cal. 2015)); In re Wireless Tel. Fed. Cost Recovery Fees Litig., No. MDL 1559 4:03-MD-015, 2004 WL 3671053, at *13 (W.D. Mo. Apr. 20, 2004) (of the 4,838,789 settlement class members who were sent notice, only 620 (0.012%) opted out of the settlement and only 33 (0.00068%) objected to the settlement, which "are strong indicators that the Settlement Agreement was viewed as fair by an overwhelming majority of Settlement Class members and weighs heavily in favor of settlement"); In re Tex. Prison Litig., 191 F.R.D. 164, 175 (W.D. Mo. 1999) ("The objectors represent only about 8 per cent of the class, and this relatively low level of opposition to the settlement also indicates its fairness. The Court has an obligation not only to the minority of class members who filed objections, but also to the majority who, by their silence, indicated their approval of the Settlement Agreement.") (citing DeBoer v. Mellon Mortg. Co., 64 F.3d 1171, 1178 (8th Cir. 1995)); see also, e.g., Van Horn, 840 F.2d at 607 ("the amount of opposition to the settlement" is a key factor to be considered in the settlement approval process); Marshall, 787 F.3d at 513 ("We have previously approved class-action settlements even when almost half the class objected to it.").

32. This Court's order granting final approval of the Settlements is also supported by the substantial benefits to the class afforded by the practice changes obtained by the Settlements. Those changes include Settling Defendants, and their subsidiaries and affiliates, making the following practice changes, to the extent they are not already implemented, within six months of the Settlement Effective Date:

i. advise and periodically remind company-owned brokerages, franchisees (if any), and their agents that there is no company requirement that they must make offers to or must accept offers of compensation from cooperating brokers or that, if made, such offers must be blanket, unconditional, or unilateral;

ii. require that any company-owned brokerages and their agents (and recommend and encourage that any franchisees and their agents) disclose to prospective home sellers and buyers and state in conspicuous language that broker commissions are not set by law and are fully negotiable (i) in their listing agreement if it is not a government or MLS-specified form, (ii) in their buyer representation agreement if there is one and it is not a government or MLS-specified form, and (iii) in pre-closing disclosure documents if there are any and they are not government or MLS-specified forms. In the event that the listing agreement, buyer representation agreement, or pre-closing disclosure documents are a government or MLS-specified form, then Settling Defendant will require that any company owned brokerages and their agents (and recommend and encourage that any franchisees and their agents) include a disclosure with conspicuous language expressly stating that broker commissions are not set by law and are fully negotiable;

iii. prohibit all company-owned brokerages and their agents acting as buyer representatives (and recommend and encourage that franchisees and their agents acting as buyer representatives refrain) from advertising or otherwise representing that their services are free;

iv. require that company-owned brokerages and their agents disclose at the earliest moment possible any offer of compensation made in connection with each home marketed to prospective buyers in any format;

v. prohibit company-owned brokerages and their agents (and recommend and encourage that any franchisees and their agents refrain) from utilizing any technology or taking manual actions to filter out or restrict MLS listings that are searchable by and displayed to consumers based on the level of compensation offered to any cooperating broker unless directed to do so by the client (and eliminate any internal systems or technological processes that may currently facilitate such practices);

vi. advise and periodically remind company-owned brokerages and their agents of their obligation to (and recommend and encourage that any franchisees and their agents) show properties regardless of the existence or amount of cooperative compensation offered provided that each such property meets the buyer's articulated purchasing priorities; and

vii. for each of the above points, for company-owned brokerages, franchisees, and their agents, develop training materials consistent with the above relief and eliminate any contrary training materials currently used.

See Settlement Agreements at ¶ 49.

33. The Court has carefully considered each of the timely filed objections. All objections are overruled. As an initial matter, the Court has already overruled objections that are similar, and in some cases identical, to each of the objections here. See Burnett, May 9, 2024 Order Granting Final Approval, (Doc. #1487, p. 13-29.) In any event, the Court finds that none of the objections provides a basis for denying final approval of the Settlements. See Marshall, 787 at 513–14 ("The district court refused to give credence to the vocal minority" and "the court aptly noted that "only one-tenth of one percent of the class objected, and less than ten percent of the class ha[d] requested exclusion from the settlement.").

34. The Court ordered "all objectors and their attorneys to appear in person at the October 31, 2024, hearing at 10:30A.M. to argue their objections." (Doc. #510.) This order is not outside the Court's purview. See Fauley v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., 52 N.E.3d 427, 438-39 (Ill. App. Ct. 2016) ("requiring class members to be present in court to object did not violate their due-process rights" when the Court ordered "if you want the Court to consider your objection, then you must also appear at the final approval hearing."); In re Train Derailment Near Amite La., on Oct. 12, 2002, No. CIV.A. MDL 1531, 2006 WL 644494, at *2 (E.D. La. Jan. 27, 2006) ("To preserve the right to be heard at the Fairness Hearing in opposition to the settlement, the objecting Class Member must appear at the federal court in person not later than 8:30 a.m. on the date the Fairness Hearing is to begin and register with Class Counsel."); Dennings v. Clearwire Corp., No. C10-1859JLR, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105462, at *8 (W.D. Wash. July 26, 2013) (finding when the Court ordered objectors' counsel's in person appearance, "[i]f Objectors' counsel intends to litigate in the State of Washington, he must be prepared to appear in Washington when ordered to do so by the court.").

35. Objectors may not "essentially insert[] [themselves] into the dispute and then, without explaining why, [they] refuse[] to play by the rules that the district court set." In re T-Mobile Customer Data Sec. Breach Litig., 111 F.4th 849, 858 (8th Cir. 2024). An objector in T-Mobile refused to cooperate with counsel's efforts to conduct discovery ordered by the district court, claiming "that by subjecting her to a deposition, the district court 'unduly encumbered' her due-process right to be heard." Id. Both the Eighth Circuit and District Court disagreed with her refusal to follow the court's orders and struck her objection. Id. Similarly here, after the Court ordered their appearance, many objectors mailed letters protesting the Court's order and requesting excusal based on the cost of travel (See Doc. #512-1; Doc. #520), family care requirements (See Doc. #524-2, Doc. #523-1), or a death in the family (See Doc. #519-1). However, these excuses do not play "the rules that the district court has set." Id. Failure to comply with a Court's order can result in an objection being struck or waived. See Ferron v. Kraft Heinz Foods Co., No 20-CV-62136-RAR, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129955, at *41 (S.D. Fla. July 13, 2021) (finding when an objector failed to follow the Court order of appearing after providing the Court intent to appear at the final approval hearing, he provided the Court "sufficient grounds alone to strike his Objection."); In re Crocs, Inc. Sec. Litig., 306 F.R.D. 672, 682 (D. Colo. 2014) ("As a threshold matter, National Roofing's objection failed to comply with the Court's order . . . [t]hus, National Roofing's objection is deemed waived[.]") Further, while objectors may "have to spend one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars for a flight, hotel, and other out of town expenses" if they had to personally travel, this pales in comparison to the $13,147,775.19 in reasonable and necessary expenses exhausted by Plaintiffs' counsel in curating the current settlement for the Class. (Doc. 520-1, p. 2.) After issuing the order, the Court stated on the record at the Final Settlement Hearing important reasons for requiring Objectors' in person appearance. (Doc. #526.) Mr. Zaffarkhan, Mr. Wischer, Mr. Dyer, Ms. Cunningham, Mr. Douglass, Mr. Cheatham, Mr. Fender, Mrs. Fender, Mr. Friedman, Mr. March, and Mr. Mullis did not personally appear at the Final Settlement Hearing. All Objectors who did not appear in person failed to comply with the Court's order. Therefore, all objections filed by the above named Objectors who did not appear in person at the October 31, 2024, Final Settlement Hearing, are waived for failing to comply with the Court's order.

36. Four objections were submitted by individuals acting without counsel. (Doc. #451 (Khyber Zaffarkhan), Doc. #485 (Terry Wischer), Doc. #527 (Mark Dyer), Doc. #528 (Vivienne Cunningham)). These objections cast no doubt on the fairness, adequacy, or reasonableness of the Settlements. They are overruled.

37. Mr. Zaffarkhan represents that he paid commissions across two home sales in 2016 and 2020. Mr. Zaffarkhan's objection does not comply with Rule 23(e)(5)(A), which requires that the "objection must state whether it applies only to the objector, to a specific subset of the class, or to the entire class, and also state with specificity the grounds for the objection." Nor does Mr. Zaffarkhan provide basic information about the homes he claims to have sold, including whether he hired a listing broker, whether the homes were listed on an MLS, or how any broker fees he paid may have been allocated among those brokers. Additionally, based on the limited information provided, Mr. Zaffarkhan's claimed 2016 home sale appears to fall outside of the settlement class period. Thus, Mr. Zaffarkhan has not established he has standing to object for at least that sale. See Gould v. Alleco, Inc., 883 F.2d 281, 284 (4th Cir. 1989) ("The plain language of Rule 23(e) clearly contemplates allowing only class members to object to settlement proposals.") (citing Jenson v. Cont'l Fin. Corp., 591 F.2d 477, 482 n.7 (8th Cir. 1979)); Feder v. Elec. Data Sys. Corp., 248 F. App'x 579, 580 (5th Cir. 2007) ("O]nly class members have standing to object to a settlement. Anyone else lacks the requisite proof of injury necessary to establish the 'irreducible minimum' of standing"); 4 Newberg and Rubenstein on Class Actions § 13:22 (6th ed. June 2024 Update) ("Rule 23 confers the right to object upon class members, the Rule itself does not confer standing upon nonclass members" and "Courts regularly find that nonclass members have no standing to object to a proposed settlement[.]"). The burden is on the objector to show standing. Feder, 248 F. App'x at 581 (citing Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561 (1992)).

38. Even considering Mr. Zaffarkhan's arguments, none shows that the Settlements should be rejected. First, Mr. Zaffarkhan objects that the monetary recovery is inadequate because the Gibson settlements (and other proposed and approved settlements in related cases) will not fully compensate him for the entirety of any alleged overcharges he may have paid. It is true that Class members will likely only receive from these settlements a portion of their best-day-in-court damages. But that fact is true for essentially any settlement and is not grounds for declining to approve the particular proposed settlements here. Keil, 862 F.3d at 696. As described herein, Plaintiffs sought to obtain the largest recovery they could in light of the risks of the continued litigation, and including each Settling Defendant's ability to pay limitations. Mr. Zaffarkhan's objection does not account for or otherwise address those risks and limitations. Nor does he opine that these particular Settling Defendants could reasonably have paid more. Further, although Mr. Zaffarkhan acknowledges that "the Settlement Fund will continue to grow," (Doc. #451, p. 3 n.1), his objection does not account for the fact that the proposed Settlements would resolve claims against only one set of defendants and do not release claims against other defendants against whom Plaintiffs continue to seek relief on behalf of the class. Second, Mr. Zaffarkhan's objection notes Plaintiffs' requests to recover attorneys' fees, costs and expenses, and service awards. That objection is overruled. See Boeing Co. v. Van Gemert, 444 U.S. 472, 478 (1980) (paying attorneys out of the fund "rests on the perception that persons who obtain the benefit of a lawsuit without contributing to its cost are unjustly enriched at the successful litigant's expense"); Vogt v. State Farm Life Ins. Co., No. 2:16-cv-04170, 2021 WL 247958, at *1 (W.D. Mo. Jan. 25, 2021) ("When a class action creates a common fund for the benefit of the class members, the Court may award class counsel reasonable attorneys' fees 'equal to some fraction of the common fund that the attorneys were successful in gathering during the course of the litigation.'") (quoting Johnston v. Comerica Mortg. Corp., 83 F.3d 241, 244-45 (8th Cir. 1996)). In addition, to the extent Mr. Zaffarkhan disagreed either with the amount of his recovery or the attorneys' fee request, he was free to opt out of the settlements and retain an attorney to pursue claims individually. But he chose not to do so.

39. Terry Wischer objects that sellers could not have been harmed by Defendants' conduct. (Doc. #485.) As an initial matter, Mr. Wischer does not indicate whether he is a class member who sold an eligible home during the class period. See Gould, 883 F.2d at 284 ("The plain language of Rule 23(e) clearly contemplates allowing only class members to object to settlement proposals."); Feder, 248 F. App'x at 580 ("only class members have standing to object to a settlement. Anyone else lacks the requisite proof of injury necessary to establish the 'irreducible minimum' of standing"); 4 Newberg and Rubenstein on Class Actions § 13:22 (6th ed. June 2024 Update) ("Rule 23 confers the right to object upon class members, the Rule itself does not confer standing upon nonclass members" and "Courts regularly find that nonclass members have no standing to object to a proposed settlement[.]"). The burden is on the objector to show standing. Feder, 248 F. App'x at 581. Nor does Mr. Wischer comply with Rule 23(e)(5)(A), which requires that the "objection must state whether it applies only to the objector, to a specific subset of the class, or to the entire class, and also state with specificity the grounds for the objection."

40. In any event, Mr. Wischer's objection that sellers could not have been injured is incorrect both legally and factually. Under binding Supreme Court precedent, only direct purchasers are ordinarily eligible to sue for damages, and they may recover the entirety of any overcharge paid without consideration of any amount that may have been passed on to others. See, e.g., Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720 (1997); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481 (1968). Consistent with this case law, in similar cases, courts have held that home sellers (and not buyers) are direct purchasers under federal antitrust law, and a jury concluded that those sellers were injured. See Leeder v. Nat'l Ass'n of Realtors, 601 F. Supp. 3d 301, 308-11 (N.D. Ill. 2022); Burnett, Verdict Form (Doc. #1294 at ECF 2.) Even if he had standing, Mr. Wischer's objection is overruled.

41. Mark Dyer objects that requiring buyers to sign a representation agreement before they have the opportunity to know the broker does not serve the best interest of the public. (Doc. #527.) As an initial matter, Mr. Dyer does not indicate whether he is a class member who sold an eligible home during the class period. See Gould, 883 F.2d at 284 ("The plain language of Rule 23(e) clearly contemplates allowing only class members to object to settlement proposals."); Feder, 248 F. App'x at 580 ("only class members have standing to object to a settlement. Anyone else lacks the requisite proof of injury necessary to establish the 'irreducible minimum' of standing"); 4 Newberg and Rubenstein on Class Actions § 13:22 (6th ed. June 2024 Update) ("Rule 23 confers the right to object upon class members, the Rule itself does not confer standing upon nonclass members" and "Courts regularly find that nonclass members have no standing to object to a proposed settlement[.]"). The burden is on the objector to show standing. Feder, 248 F. App'x at 581. Nor does Mr. Dyer comply with Rule 23(e)(5)(A), which requires that the "objection must state whether it applies only to the objector, to a specific subset of the class, or to the entire class, and also state with specificity the grounds for the objection." As such, Mr. Dyer's objection is overruled.

42. Vivienne Cunningham objects that requiring buyers to sign a representation agreement before they have the opportunity to know the broker does not serve the best interest of the public. (Doc. #528.) As an initial matter, Ms. Cunningham does not indicate whether she is a class member who sold an eligible home during the class period. See Gould, 883 F.2d at 284 ("The plain language of Rule 23(e) clearly contemplates allowing only class members to object to settlement proposals."); Feder, 248 F. App'x at 580 ("only class members have standing to object to a settlement. Anyone else lacks the requisite proof of injury necessary to establish the 'irreducible minimum' of standing"); 4 Newberg and Rubenstein on Class Actions § 13:22 (6th ed. June 2024 Update) ("Rule 23 confers the right to object upon class members, the Rule itself does not confer standing upon nonclass members" and "Courts regularly find that nonclass members have no standing to object to a proposed settlement[.]"). The burden is on the objector to show standing. Feder, 248 F. App'x at 581. Nor does Ms. Cunningham comply with Rule 23(e)(5)(A), which requires that the "objection must state whether it applies only to the objector, to a specific subset of the class, or to the entire class, and also state with specificity the grounds for the objection." As such, Ms. Cunningham's objection is overruled.

43. Four objections were lodged by counsel for plaintiffs in other cases alleging the same or similar claims as those in this case, as well as Moehrl and Burnett. None of these cases is a certified class. All are at the infancy of the litigation. All were filed after and appear to have been derived from this case, Moehrl, and Burnett. Each of these objectors could have opted out of the Settlements and pursued their own claims, but instead each chose to object. See Marshall, 787 at 520. None of these objections furthers the interest of Class members who will benefit from both the monetary and practice change relief afforded by the Settlements.

44. The South Carolina objectors argue that the aggregate monetary recovery reflected across all of the settlements in this action and the Burnett action is too low. But they do not argue that any particular settlement in this action is inadequate. They do not argue what total amount would have been reasonable and adequate, only that they do not like what was obtained. Nor do they seriously assert that the Settlements were the product of collusion or any conflict. The applicable standard is whether the settlements are fair, reasonable, and adequate—not whether they provide complete relief to all Class members. See Godson v. Eltman, Eltman, & Cooper, P.C., 328 F.R.D. 35, 54 (W.D.N.Y. 2018) ("The court's task, then, is simply to decide whether the settlement agreement as written is fair, reasonable, and adequate, not whether the parties or the court could conceivably have come up with a 'better' agreement."). "As courts routinely recognize, a settlement is a product of compromise and the fact that a settlement provides only a portion of the potential recovery does not make such settlement unfair, unreasonable or inadequate." Keil, 862 F.3d at 696; see also Pro. Firefighters Ass'n of Omaha, Loc. 385, 678 F.3d at 649 ("Appellant falls far short of establishing the settlement agreement was unfair or inadequate simply because the retirees did not get as much as they believed they should."); In re Agent Orange Prod. Liab. Litig., 597 F. Supp. 740, 762 (E.D.N.Y. 1984) (approving settlement despite the fact that "the settlement amount would not begin to cover the total costs of medical treatment for the class which easily could amount to billions of dollars" and holding "[t]he fact that the settlement amount may equal but a fraction of potential recovery does not render the settlement inadequate"), aff'd, 818 F.2d 145 (2d Cir. 1987).

45. Nor must a settlement exhaust all of a settling defendant's financial resources in order to be deemed fair, reasonable, and adequate. See Meredith Corp. v. SESAC, LLC, 87 F. Supp. 3d 650, 665 (S.D.N.Y. 2015) ("[A] defendant is not required to 'empty its coffers' before a settlement can be found adequate.") (quoting In re Sony SXRD Rear Projection T.V. Class Action Litig., No. 06-cv-5173, 2008 WL 1956267, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. May 1, 2008)); see also Petrovic v. Amoco Oil Co., 200 F.3d 1140, 1153 (8th Cir. 1999) ("While it is undisputed that [the settling defendant] could pay more than it is paying in this settlement, this fact, standing alone, does not render the settlement inadequate."); Grunin, 513 F.2d at 125 (affirming antitrust settlement and explaining that a "total victory" for plaintiffs after trial "would have been financially disastrous if not fatal" to the defendant, and the final settlement "gave valuable concessions to the [settlement class] yet maintained [the defendant's] corporate viability").

46. In reaching these settlements, Class Counsel, who have extensive antitrust experience and have vigorously litigated similar cases for years, sought to obtain the best possible recovery for the Class. There is no suggestion here, nor could there be, that Class Counsel were uninformed, lacked experience and expertise, or were somehow prevented from negotiating the best deal possible for the Class. To the contrary, Class Counsel negotiated based on their extensive knowledge of the issues, including liability, damages, the risks of continued litigation, and the financial condition of the Settling Defendants. Class Counsel also thoroughly analyzed the finances of each of the Settling Defendants, including the risk that each could file for bankruptcy protection, which likely would have resulted in lower recoveries, if any, for the Class than were obtained via the Settlements. Berman Decl., ¶ 12.

47. The South Carolina Objectors also purport to object to the scope of the release reflected in the Settlements—but their objection misconstrues what the releases actually say and do. And in any event the court finds the scope of release to be fair, reasonable and adequate. In addition, the South Carolina Objectors refer to "Realtors" being released, but it is unclear whether they intended to object to the release of individual real estate agents or, instead, to "local entities" whose brokers are NAR members. Id. Regardless, the South Carolina Objectors have not sued individual real estate agents and do not explain how complex and expensive antitrust suits could proceed against millions of individual real estate agents. Moreover, the release of individual real estate agents was bargained for as part of the settlement agreement. Such releases of employees and agents of defendants are common and appropriate. See In re Am. Inv'rs Life Ins. Co. Annuity Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 263 F.R.D. 226, 240 (E.D. Pa. 2009) (overruling objection to release of independent sales agents of insurance company because "the release of agents is a necessary component of the settlement agreement in order to provide finality. Otherwise, dissatisfied policyholders could sue the defendants' agents who would then, in turn, look to the defendants for indemnity or contribution.") (citing In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Prac. Litig. Agent Actions, 962 F. Supp. 450, 522-23 (D.N.J. 1997), aff'd, 148 F.3d 283 (3d Cir. 1998)); Shay v. Apple Inc., No. 3:20-cv-1629, 2024 WL 1184693, at *8 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 19, 2024) ("The release of non-party retailers is common practice in cases such as this, where the released claims against these non-parties concern an identical injury arising from common facts.") (citing Hesse v. Sprint Corp., 598 F.3d 581, 590-91 (9th Cir. 2010)); Maine State Ret. System v. Countrywide Fin. Corp., No. 10-CV-00302, 2013 WL 6577020, at *7, *17 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 5, 2013) (overruling objection that argued "non-parties cannot be released for the claims asserted in the Settlement Actions"); Retta v. Millennium Prods., Inc., No. 15-CV-1801, 2017 WL 5479637, at *8 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 22, 2017) (overruling objection that release of third party retailers was inappropriate: "this argument is meritless because the purpose of the settlement is to prevent duplicative litigation of identical claims . . . . Millennium is a manufacturer that sells its products through various retailers, so any claims Ference purports to have against third-party retailers of the Subject Products are going to be based on the same false or misleading labeling allegations asserted here. This objection is overruled."); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 108–09 (2d Cir. 2005) (approving class settlement with broad releases including non-parties, such as member banks, insurance companies and Swiss governmental entities).

48. The same is true with respect to releases of franchisees. See Flaum v. Doctor's Assocs., Inc., No. 16-CV-61198, 2019 WL 2576361, at *3 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 11, 2019) (final approval of settlement releasing all Subway franchisees in suit against Subway franchisor); Adkins v. Nestle Purina PetCare Co., No. 12-CV-2871, 2015 WL 10892070, at *4 (N.D. Ill. June 23, 2015) (final approval of settlement releasing variety of non-parties, including suppliers, manufacturers, retailers, and franchisees); McCabe v. Six Continents Hotels, Inc., No. 12-CV-4818, 2015 WL 3990915, at *3 (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2015) (preliminary approval of settlement releasing franchisees) & ECF No. 167 (Feb. 8, 2016) (ordering final approval of settlement).

49. The South Carolina Objectors also object to the adequacy of the class notices. In doing so, they do not argue that the method for distributing class notice was ineffective. As noted above, the Court finds that the notice given to the Settlement Class constituted the best notice practicable under the circumstances and fully satisfied the requirements of due process, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, and all applicable law. South Carolina objectors argue that the notices lacked the following information, which they claim was necessary for class members to decide whether to participate in the Settlements: (1) the fact of jury verdict in Burnett; (2) an explanation of the size of the class; and (3) information "for class members to evaluate whether there could be better outcomes in their own jurisdictions." (Doc. #464, pp. 5-7.) None of these is a basis for rejecting the Settlements.

50. The Court finds that Class members were provided with the information the South Carolina Objectors advocate for and sufficiently informed class members of their rights. Moreover, "the mechanics of the notice process are left to the discretion of the court subject t only to the broad 'reasonableness' standards imposed by due process." Grunin, 513 F.2d at 120 . "As a general rule, the contents of a settlement notice must fairly apprise the prospective members of the class of the terms of the proposed settlement and of the options that are open to them in connection with (the) proceedings." Id. at 122 (quotation omitted). "Valid notice of a settlement agreement 'may consist of a very general description' of settlement terms." In re Uponor, Inc., F1807 Plumbing Fittings Prod. Liab. Litig., 716 F.3d 1057, 1065 (8th Cir. 2013) (quoting Grunin, 513 F.2d at 122).

51. The Court finds the notice here easily satisfied this standard. Among other things, notice apprised Class members of the nature of the action; the class claims and issues; and the settlement terms. It also advised Class members of their options, including their right to file objections, opt out, and appear at the fairness hearing. And it explained how Class members could obtain additional information including by contacting Class Counsel, contacting the claims administrator, and through the settlement website, which included numerous key case documents, FAQs, and every Settlement Agreement.

52. Courts are unanimous that not every detail of the litigation need be included in settlement notices and have rejected objections seeking the inclusion of every conceivable detail. See, e.g., Vargas v. Capital One Financial Advisors, 559 F. App'x. 22, 27 (2d Cir. 2014) (a settlement notice need only apprise class members of the settlement terms and "of the options that are open to them in connection with the proceedings," and, consequently, rejecting objector's arguments that notice was inadequate because it failed affirmatively to advise unsatisfied class members to opt out and failed to calculate the damages sustained by each individual class member); In re TikTok, Inc., Consumer Privacy Litig., 2022 WL 2982782, at *18 n.20 (N.D. Ill. July 28, 2022) ("Rule 23 does not require the settlement notice to contain every last bit of information necessary to file an objection."); Good v. Am. Water Works Company, Inc., 2016 WL 5746347, *9 (S.D. W. Va. Sept. 30, 2016) ("The basic requirements of Rule 23 and due process are intended to ensure that notices fairly and reasonably apprise class members of a pending action affecting their rights and their options with respect to that action, but those requirements should not transform the notice into a long brief of the parties' positions, precise in every detail and slated in such fashion as to please every litigant." (quotation omitted)). Notices do not need to include every detail because "[c]lass members are not expected to rely upon the notices as a complete source of settlement information." Grunin, 513 F.2d at 122; see also UAW v. General Motors Corp., 2006 WL 891151, *33 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 31, 2006) ("It is inevitable that some details will be omitted from a notice, but the fact that the notices do not fully explore certain issues is immaterial. Class members are not expected to rely upon the notices as a complete source of settlement information." (cleaned up)). For instance, in Petrovic, the Eighth Circuit rejected the "contention that a mailed notice of settlement must contain a formula for calculating individual awards" because "[t]he notice described with sufficient particularity the stakes involved: the settlement of environmental claims against [the defendant], the award of significant injunctive relief, and the potential aggregate payout of over seven million dollars in compensatory damages." Petrovic v. Amoco Oil Co., 200 F.3d at 1152–53.

53. Moreover, notices that are overly long and complex are counter-productive because they reduce the likelihood that Class members will actually review and understand essential information. See Kagan v. Wachovia Securities, L.L.C., 2012 WL 1109987, at *10 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 2, 2012) ("[The proposed notice] is simply too long. The Court is concerned that few class members will read a fifteen-page, single-spaced Class Notice.").

54. Finally, the Court finds the vast majority of class members from South Carolina favor approval of the Settlements. Although the claims deadline is still months away, over 6,600 South Carolina residents have already submitted claims; and none have objected (aside from the clients of class counsel with competing class litigation). Keough Decl. at ¶ 51. If the Settlements are not approved, these class members risk receiving no compensation for their injuries.

55. The New York Objectors, Friedman and March,[4] argue their cases are "wholly distinct" from the Gibson case (Doc. #467, p. 3) and should not be subject to the nationwide releases reflected in the Settlements. They further assert that their claims do not share the same "factual predicate" as the Gibson case.

56. First, the basis behind the New York objection is unequivocally rebutted by the plain language of the Gibson Complaint. Plaintiffs here plead a nationwide conspiracy on behalf of a nationwide class that expressly challenges rules adopted by the Residential Listing Service ("RLS") of the Real Estate Board of New York ("REBNY"). (See Doc. #232), Consolidated Am. Compl., ¶ 182. There is no basis to claim that the Gibson case does not share a "factual predicate" with claims challenging the same RLS rules that are referenced in the Gibson complaint. Even so, the Complaint further alleges that anticompetitive restraints, including those promulgated by NAR, apply to brokers nationwide, including to non-NAR MLSs like NWMLS, WPMLS, and REBNY RLS because:

[4] The New York Objectors have stated that they are collectively objecting only to the Compass, Douglas Elliman, @properties, and Engel & Volkers Settlements.

> these MLSs and their participating brokerages are generally subject to the same or similar anticompetitive restraints that apply in MLSs that are under NAR's formal control, including because: (i) all realtor members of non-NAR MLSs are subject to NAR's Code of Ethics; and (ii) each non-NAR MLS has adopted the same or similar anticompetitive restraints as those imposed by NAR on its affiliated MLSs.

Id.

57. The Complaint alleges that, as a result, "Defendants' conspiracy has had the following anticompetitive effects nationwide," including in NWMLS, WPMLS, and REBNY RLS: (a) "Home sellers have been forced to pay commissions to buyer-brokers—their adversaries in negotiations to sell their homes— thereby substantially inflating the cost of selling their homes"; (b) "Home sellers have been compelled to set a high buyer-broker commission to induce buyer-brokers to show their homes to home buyers."; (c) "Home sellers have paid inflated buyer-broker commissions and inflated total commissions."; (d) "The retention of a buyer-broker has been severed from the setting of the broker's commission; the home buyer retains the buyer-broker, while the home seller sets the buyer-broker's compensation"; (e) Price competition among brokers to be retained by home buyers has been restrained." Id. ¶ 225 (emphasis added); see also id. ¶¶ 28, 227 (describing "nationwide" impact).

58. Plaintiffs also allege that any non-NAR MLS are controlled by, "NAR-aligned brokerages and are not fully independent from NAR." See id. ¶ 182 (describing in detail NAR's and its members' control over and influence of MLSs not exclusively owned or operated by NAR associations). Plaintiffs also point out that there are more than 17,000 NAR members in the New York City area alone. See https://www.realtor.com/realestateagents/new-york_ny. Thus, the Court rejects the New York Objectors' claim that the Settlement is limited to NAR only MLSs.

59. Second, the New York Objectors' argument that their claims do not share the same "factual predicate" as the Gibson case (Doc. #467, p. 2; Doc. #470, p. 3) is contradicted by their own prior judicial admissions. Although the New York Objectors argue that their cases are "wholly distinct and unrelated" to this one, they and their counsel filed complaints expressly linking their claims to the rules challenged in Gibson, including those adopted by NAR. See Class Action Compl. at ¶ 73, March v. REBNY, 1:23-cv-09995 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 13, 2023); Friedman v. REBNY, 1:24-cv-0405 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 18, 2024). As the New York Objectors' own complaints reflect, the challenged NAR and REBNY rules are functionally identical.[5]

60. Third, consistent with Plaintiffs' allegations in Gibson, the evidentiary records in Burnett and Moehrl reflect that: (i) the REBNY RLS rules challenged here were anticompetitive in similar ways to the challenged NAR rules; and (ii) the challenged NAR rules applied nationwide, including to transactions in REBNY RLS. Plaintiffs' experts analyzed rules implemented by non-NAR MLSs, including REBNY/RLS, (8-10-22 Schulman Reply Rept., Burnett Doc. #922-3, pp. 23-25) and concluded that Realtors operating in those jurisdictions "remain obligated to compensate the buyer's agent per the NAR Code of Ethics and are thereby incentivized to require sellers to make unilateral offers of compensation to buy-side brokers/agents." Id. at ¶ 75. Prof. Einer Elhauge further opined as part of a detailed, multi-page

[5] The New York Objectors also assert that some of the Settling Defendants took positions before the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML") that are inconsistent with the position that the claims in Gibson, March, and Friedman all share the same factual predicate. To the contrary, the JPML proceedings, on balance, support finding that these cases all have the same factual predicate. Moreover, as Settling Defendants explained, their positions before the JPML do not support the New York Objectors' arguments here. Some of Settling Defendants even withdrew the submissions quoted by March and Friedman. (See Doc. #522, pp. 20-22.)

analysis of REBNY's rules that "the RLS rules, like the NAR [Buyer Broker Commission Rule (BBCR)], required listings to include an offer of buyer-broker compensation whenever sellers wanted to sell to buyers who were represented by buyer-brokers" and "had several other restraints similar to the NAR version of the BBCR." Elhauge Class Cert. Rebuttal Report, at ¶ 67, Moehrl v. Nat'l Assn of Realtors (N.D. Ill. Oct. 18, 2022) (Doc. #372.) The Court is familiar with the REBNY and other non-NAR MLS policies and practices because they were discussed at length in Burnett. The Court finds that the challenged REBNY rules share the same common nucleus of operative fact, and thus the same factual predicate, as Burnett and Gibson, and therefore were not "wholly distinct" from Burnett or Gibson, as the New York Objectors contend.

61. The slight differences that the New York Objectors contend exist between the relevant NAR and REBNY rules are not material or sufficient to create a distinct factual predicate. Objectors ask the Court to define factual predicate too narrowly, thereby needlessly creating piecemeal litigation arising from the same conduct – a practice courts routinely reject. See, e.g., In re Uponor, Inc., F1807 Plumbing Fittings Prods. Liab. Litig., 716 F.3d 1057, 1065 (8th Cir. 2013) (overruling objection that "settlement contained an overbroad release" since it permissibly released only claims related to the factual subject of the litigation); In re Literary Works in Elec. Databases Copyright Litig., 654 F.3d 242, 248 (2d Cir. 2011) (finding that objectors took an "overly narrow view" of factual predicate where claims arose from same underlying facts); Elna Sefcovic, LLC v. TEP Rocky Mountain, LLC, 807 F. App'x 752, 765-66 (10th Cir. 2020) (same); see also In re Adelphia Commc'ns Corp. Sec. & Derivative Litig., 272 F. App'x 9, 13 (2d Cir. 2008) (finding reliance on different documents for misrepresentation claims based on investment losses did not create separate factual predicate where claims were each based on reliance on misleading opinions by defendants). Accordingly, claims involving properties listed on non-NAR

MLSs like NWMLS, WPMLS, and REBNY RLS all share the same factual predicate as those involving properties listed on NAR-affiliated MLS.[6]

62. The New York Objectors assert that the Class Representative "do not have standing" to settle their claims. (Doc. #467, p. 13.) But the Class Representatives allege that they were injured as part of the same alleged anticompetitive conspiracy that impacts sellers of homes on REBNY RLS.

63. The New York Objectors argue that the total settlement amount is inadequate to fully compensate them for their injuries. But as described above, that is not the proper legal standard for assessing adequacy. The New York Objectors further claim that Plaintiffs have not provided evidence of the Settling Defendants' ability to pay limitations. The court disagrees. See Berman Decl. at ¶¶ 2, 6-11. In addition, Settling Defendants Douglass Elliman and Compass are publicly traded companies whose financial records are publicly accessible.

64. Although the New York Objectors state that the practice changes reflected in the settlements are a "commendable step in the right direction," they argue those changes could have been stronger and lasted longer. (Doc. #470, p. 15.) But that is true in essentially any settlement that is the product of compromise and is not a basis for rejecting the Settlements here. See, e.g., In re Colgate-Palmolive Softsoap Antibacterial Hand Soap Mktg. and Sales Practices Litig., No. 12-MD-2320, 2015 WL 7282543, at *10 (D.N.H. Nov. 16, 2015) (approving final settlement and overruling objections "that the injunctive remedies go away in five years" and observing the injunctive relief "provides a valuable benefit to the class" and just because the injunction is not as broad as some class members wanted "does not make this settlement inadequate").

[6] To the extent that the New York Objectors rely on Second Circuit case law applying an "identical factual predicate" test, the Court finds that it does not support a different conclusion than Eighth Circuit precedent on the facts presented here. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2005).

65. The New York Objectors also argue that Class members who sold homes on REBNY have not been given guidance on whether they "will be provided a pro rata distribution" or if the higher commissions that some of those Class members paid will be reflected in claim payments. The Court disagrees. The settlement website advises both that: (i) settlements payment "will take into account the amount of commissions class member claimants paid to a real estate broker or agent"; and (ii) "[t]o the extent the value of total claims exceeds the amount available for distribution from the settlement funds, each class member's share of the settlement may be reduced on a pro rata basis." Settlement FAQ 11.

66. Objector Friedman asserts, with no basis whatsoever, that the Settlements' inclusion of sellers who listed homes on REBNY "appears to be the product of a so-called 'collusive settlement.'" (Doc. #467, p. 14.) As discussed above at length, Class Counsel diligently sought to obtain the largest possible recovery on behalf of the nationwide class they were appointed to represent, given the strength and risks of the litigation, including the Settling Defendants' financial limitations. The New York Objectors fail to point to any evidence suggesting otherwise, beyond the mere fact that overlapping claims in a different lawsuit are within the scope of the release. That is not a basis for rejecting the Settlements.

67. The Court finds the vast majority of Class members from New York favor approval of the Settlements. Although the claims deadline is still months away, over 13,000 New York residents have already submitted claims; and none have objected (aside from the clients of counsel with competing class litigation). Keough Decl. at ¶ 51. If the Settlements are not approved, many of these Class members risk receiving no compensation for their injuries.

68. The Batton objectors seek to carve out indirect purchaser buyer claims from the releases. But every class member sold a home during the class period, and most also bought homes. After all, few people sell a home without first buying it. And most home sellers then buy a different home with the proceeds because they need somewhere to live. Thus, most Class members had possible claims both as home sellers and home buyers. Yet Settling Defendants quite reasonably balked at paying large amounts in settlement only to have the same people they just paid sue them again for the same alleged antitrust conspiracy.

69. The parties solved this problem by crafting the releases to incorporate the Eighth Circuit's "same factual predicate" standard, and to otherwise comply with federal law. This standard recognizes that basic fairness stops a party from suing twice for the same wrong. When cases go to final judgment, res judicata bars relitigating not only the claims tried, but also claims that "could have been raised" in that action. Brown v. Kansas City Live, LLC, 931 F.3d 712, 714 (8th Cir. 2019). The same holds true in class actions litigated to conclusion. In re General Am. Life Ins. Co. Sales Practices Litig., 357 F.3d 800, 803 (8th Cir. 2004). And for class judgments that arise from settlement, courts have developed a parallel test that gives preclusive effect to all claims – even those not pleaded – that "arise out of the same factual predicate as the pleaded claims." In re Uponor, Inc., F1807 Plumbing Fittings Prods. Liab. Litig., 716 F.3d 1057, 1065 (8th Cir. 2013). The same rules apply because "'the situation is analogous to the barring of claims [under res judicata] that could have been asserted in the class action.'" Thompson v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 992 F.2d 187, 191 (8th Cir. 1993) (quoting TBK Partners, Ltd. v. Western Union Corp., 675 F.2d 456, 461 (2d Cir. 1982)).

70. Each settlement incorporates the Uponor standard by limiting the term "Released Claims" to include only causes of action "arising from or relating to conduct that was alleged or could have been alleged in the Actions based on any or all of the same factual predicates for the claims alleged in the Actions . . . ." Settlement Agreements at ¶ 11. In addition, "[f]or avoidance
